A PERILOUS PROXY.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT BY EDMUND VANCE COOKE.

Copyright, 1898, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher.

"BUT surely, Colonel Ashcroft, you don't believe those disagreeable things," asserted dainty Mrs. Pelton with a touch of dismay in her tone, as she addressed the returned traveller.

"Don't be so sure of that, Puss," laughed her husband. "I tell you he's a Yogi, an adept, a Thaumaturgist, a whatever-you-may-call-him, in short he's a b-a-a-d man and he has all the tricks of the imp of darkness up his sleeve."

The Colonel smiled lazily and not at all displeasedly. "You are both right," he said. "I don't believe in these wild forces, I simply practice them."

"Why, you horrid creature!" said the lady with a nervous little laugh, "you will make us glad that you are going away to-morrow."

"Oh, distance doesn't always interfere with my esoteric wickedness," retorted the Colonel mockingly. "If I can but fix my evil eye on an unsuspecting wretch," and here the Colonel glowered as balefully as possible at the husband, while watching with sinister delight the effect upon the wife, "he's mine, he's mine, he's mine!"

The Colonel growled out these words melodramatically and broke off into a laugh. Mrs. Pelton thought it a not wholly pleasant one.

"Capital!" cried Pelton. "I say, old man you couldn't get your furlough extended, could you? But of course you wouldn't want to, not with the chance of real service at hand after all your years of barracks rust. Use your black arts on the Spaniard. I expect to hear that General Miles has sent you as an army of one to batter down Morro Castle with an incantation, a few mesmeric passes and a blast from a ram's horn."

"Oh, of course I must go," said the Colonel. "Still, if I had your thousands and your ties," with a gallant little nod at Mrs. Pelton, "I'm not sure that I should take any chances of curtailing my enjoyment of them."

There was a covetous gleam in the mottled eyes and a sinister smirk to the iron-grey mustache which Mrs. Pelton did not like, and she hastily interjected, "Speaking of mesmeric passes, do you believe in them? Mr. Pelton and I went to see Rantanelli and Reynard and others, but we—well, it was all so silly, don't you know?"

"Cheap charlatans!" ejaculated the Colonel, contemptuously. "Men with some little power, certainly, but how crude their methods and how incomplete their control. They appear to wholly lack the power of graduation. The men I have seen could regulate their influence with almost as much accuracy as an electrician can regulate the amount of power which shall pass over the wires from his coils and batteries. More, they can turn their forces full upon a subject and then release all but a single driblet, so to speak, a single silken thread which binds the subject to them, no matter what time has elapsed or distance intervened. Both of you have known people who had some singularly recurring disease, as hay-fever, for instance, which returned every year on the same day, almost at the same hour. Such cases, in my opinion, are occasioned by personal influence. What other hypothesis is tenable? We can't imagine a disease to have a malevolent intelligence, which enables it to estimate time so accurately. If it is objected that a change of climate will often obviate the recurrence, I need only answer that many influences are restricted to certain zones, and if the subject chances to find the antithetical zone to that in which the influence has been working, then the power of the influence is lost. Several consecutive breakings of the spell wears it away and the sufferer often finds that he is "cured" and can again exist in his former zone. Now if the so-called disease were merely a climatic influence upon a membrane, why would it be subject to such a cure?"

"What you say is very interesting," objected Pelton, "but I myself have suffered from hay-fever and I'm very sure I was never under any occult influence, as you term it."

"That may be so," replied the Colonel, but one watching him closely might have noticed his manner change. A strange gleam came into his mottled eyes and a firm tense note into his low, deep voice as he continued. "I have known men, however, who could control your mind without any of the usual forewarnings, without touching your hand, without unduly attracting your attention and with hardly more than a glance in the eye."

The Colonel had never taken his eye from Pelton's and while he spoke he slipped his hand along towards the other's until, as it approached quite near, Pelton's hand shot into his with a sudden involuntary movement, much as a piece of quiescent iron suddenly claps into contact with an approaching magnet. The Colonel did not stop his low, droning speech a second.

"Without any contact of nerve centers." He laid his hand carelessly on Pelton's shoulder as if to merely emphasize his words, but while he spoke his fingers passed to the base of Pelton's skull. "Without any of the common chicanery." His voice was lower than ever. "Without even——" the last words seemed hurried and were lost in a whisper.

When the Colonel had begun to speak, Pelton sat with his customary smile upon his face, but as the speaker progressed his face appeared to become expressionless, yet without changing a muscle. The corpse of a smile was there. The spirit had fled. Now as the Colonel sank, with seeming laziness, back into his chair and slowly closed the eyes still directed towards Pelton, Pelton gave a hardly perceptible start and said confusedly: "I declare!—I beg pardon, but I've got a touch of headache. I—I didn't notice it till just now. What's that you were just saying about hay-fever, Ashcroft?"

"Why, Fred, you never have headaches!" cried Mrs. Pelton. "What do you suppose ails his head, Colonel Ashcroft?"

"You forget I haven't known Fred and his headaches for years," laughed the Colonel.

"Why of course. How absurd of me. I don't know why I asked you," replied the wife a little foolishly.

It was exactly a month later, though neither Mr. nor Mrs. Pelton noticed the circumstance, that this pair were seated in the cosy, cushioned library which was the delight of Mrs. Pelton's heart, but which was chiefly valued by her husband as a lounging and smoking room. On this evening, however, he was reading various of her favorite poems to her. He was well into Owen Meredith's famous "Aux Italians" and divided his attention between his cigar and the hero's words:

"And I swear, as I thought of her thus, in that hour
And of how, after all, old things were best,
I smelled the smell of that jasmine flower
She used to wear in her breast.

It smelt so faint and it smelt so sweet,
It made me creep, and it made me cold
Like the scent that steals——"

At first Mrs. Pelton thought he had stopped for a puff and a readjustment of his cigar, but when she looked up her husband sat with a perfectly fixed expression as if regarding some one or some thing intently.

"What is it, Fred?" asked his wife, a little startled.

For answer there came a torrent of words, oaths, and angry exclamations. He was not looking at her and his voice was gruff and unnatural.

The bewildered and terrified woman was overwhelmed and knew not what to do.

"Fred!" she cried, when a lull came, "Fred, for God's sake don't do that! Ah, you are trying to frighten me."

"And I say you are a liar and unfit to associate with gentlemen," came the coarse, strange words, which certainly were not a reply. Then an expression of pain shot across his face, another oath shot from his lips and he clutched his right arm with his left hand, his eyes staring hard ahead. Mrs. Pelton felt herself give way, a black wave overwhelmed her and she sank into a chair.

Whether it was seconds or hours that she was unconscious she did not know, but as her senses floated back to her, she heard her husband say:

"Confound it! this cigar's gone out. Where was I? Oh, yes—

'——from the winding sheet
When a mummy is half unrolled.'

Why, why—what the deuce!—what's the matter with my arm?"

Mrs. Pelton sprang to him as well as her still dazed condition would allow, but it was his face, not his arm, she first scanned eagerly.

"Thank God! thank God!" she breathed.

"Eh? For a broken or paralyzed arm?" asked her husband, half laughing, half groaning. "Deuce take it, I never had such a thing happen. I didn't feel a hint of it till I went to raise my hand just now."

Mr. Pelton was not the only one who was puzzled. His physician gave him no satisfaction. He talked learnedly and confusingly and assured his patient that the arm would be all right in a few days.

It did not better as fast as promised, but it gradually recovered its strength, whereat the good physician congratulated himself heartily and rendered a bill such as a wealthy patron could afford to pay.

Mrs. Pelton watched the arm with a concern which Pelton and the physician tried in vain to allay. When it was quite recovered she breathed more freely, but her husband frequently caught her studying his face with a half questioning, half alarmed expression which instantly changed as soon as detected.

She had not dared to question him about his singular conduct on the evening of the injury to his arm, especially as he seemed totally unconscious of it.

The alarm was gradually wearing away and Mrs. Pelton was becoming her old self again, from the fact that her husband so surely seemed to be his, when the trouble was all brought back again double fold. Mr. Pelton had gone out one evening to his club to attend a social billiard tournament, in which he was a contestant. He was very fond of the game of billiards and usually indulged it by inviting his friends to use his own table, but when it came to a club tournament, it was a temptation he was quite unable to resist. "This blessed arm stopped my practice for so long that I'll be handicapped," he had remarked to his wife, on leaving.

Mrs. Pelton knew the tournament would last until late, and about ten o'clock she began to make preparations to disrobe when she heard a carriage roll to the door.

Her fears instantly returned to her and she hastened to the door herself, in time to meet two gentleman bearing a third between them. The third was her husband. Before a word was spoken she realized that here was another mystery, but being prepared this time, she forced herself to calmness.

"Don't be alarmed, Mrs. Pelton," one of the bearers was saying, with an attempt at jocularity, "Fred hasn't had a drop—nor yet a fall. He seems to be merely in a prolonged faint. I took the liberty to send for Doctor Bexford to save time."

"I think that's the carriage coming now," said the other gentleman.

Meantime they were bearing him to the couch indicated by the troubled wife, who sank down beside him, pitifully searching his face and chafing his hands and making vain appeals to his unconsciousness.

At that moment in came Dr. Bexford, a portly and slow moving body who rubbed his hands and repeated each syllable with extreme leisure and distinctness.

"Ah, yes, the gen-tle-man is ill. What are the cir-cum-stan-ces? Um. I see. Yes. Exact-ly so. Um. An-y thing to in-duce asphyx-i-a? Um. Sub-ject to at-tacks of a sim-i-lar na-ture? Um. Yes, rath-er ex-cep-tion-al. No know-ledge of an or-gan-ic heart affec-tion? Um. What re-cent strain on his ner-vous sys-tem? Ah! wor-ry ov-er his arm to some ex-tent. Um. Any par-tic-u-lar circum-stance or ex-cite-ment at the club? Um. No, noth-ing to pre-vent a re-turn of conscious-ness, I should say. Pure-ly func-tion-al troub-le, prob-ab-ly."

To shorten the good doctor's method, somewhat, the patient presently began to gasp for breath and life came back to the staring countenance. The return of sensation seemed accompanied by pain and he groaned frequently.

He gained slowly and his first words after he was able to speak, were in a hoarse, gruff voice, strangely at variance with his almost feminine appearance. Moreover, they were not addressed to his wife, who was bending over him, but seemingly to the others. "God, fellows!" he gasped, "a close call! What a devilish taste in my mouth! What a lot of salt water inside of me! Well, you can't drown a man born to stop bullets."

The doctor, standing behind him, gravely tapped his forehead. "A lit-tle de-li-ri-um," he whispered to Mrs. Pelton. "Not un-nat-ur-al, no, not un-nat-ur-al."

But strangely enough, the patient continued to give evidence of a painful distention of the stomach, a bad taste in the mouth and a roaring sound or some foreign substance in his ears.

He seemed much exhausted and presently fell asleep. Pelton's friends and the doctor took the opportunity to withdraw, the latter leaving some simple directions. When they were outside, the doctor asked:

"Hum, A-kers-field, sup-pose you tell me with a degree more of de-fin-ite-ness just what hap-pened."

"Why, it was very sudden," answered Akersfield. "Wasn't it Robinson? Pelton was leaning over the table just about to make a shot. He started to say something about the play, when suddenly he sprawled across the table, with his legs and arms thrashing around like a windmill. At first I thought he was fooling, but when I saw his face all tangled up—by George! Robinson, did you ever see anything like his face?"

"Yes," answered Robinson. "When I was a little fellow, I saw another boy pretty nearly drown once and his face looked just like Pelton's."

"Is that so? Well, he struggled like that two or three minutes, doctor, making awful gasps, as if for breath, every once in a while. Then his senses seemed to leave him and after his body became composed, his face straightened out too. I called two carriages, sent one for you, and Robinson and I took him home in the other. That Mrs. Pelton is a game little thing, isn't she?"

The "game little thing" sat by her husband's bedside for hours, deeply troubled and perplexed. She had just scanned his features for the hundredth time, partly to see if he was still asleep, but more to assure herself that no further hallucination was visible in his countenance when he suddenly called out, "I think I'll make a draw shot of it," and sat up in bed, gazing at his wife.

"Why, where am I?" he asked after a moment. "What has happened to me? Was I dreaming? No, I came to the Club this evening. Puss, how came you here?"

"Hush, Fred, you've been sick. You're better now."

"Sick? I? No, it was nothing but a sprained arm. I was just thinking to-day that it was a whole month since I hurt it and it took nearly all that time to get well. How did I get here when I went to the Club? I tell you I had Akersfield beaten."

It was evident that he remembered nothing of what he had gone through and this fact sent an added thrill of terror through poor Mrs. Pelton. His remark about its being an even month since his arm was injured started thoughts in her which, as Poe has it, she "had never dared to dream before."

She pondered many days. She could not account for these mysterious lapses in her husband, neither could she confide her fears to any one. As a matter of fact, she didn't quite know what her fears were, but the memory of Ashcroft's remarks haunted her. She called them humbug a hundred times, but always returned to ponder them anew and to strive to recall everything that he had said and had looked and done. One day about three weeks later she had an inspiration. She was sitting with her husband at the time and could hardly repress an excited exclamation, "Fred," she said, with energy. "I want to go to Mackinac."

Her husband started. "When?" he asked.

"This week. To-morrow."

"I never knew you were so fond of Mackinac. Isn't it too early?"

"Never mind. We must go to Mackinac, or Nova Scotia, or the Maine coast, or somewhere. Promise me."

"But I can't very well leave and the weather here is delightful."

Mr. Pelton had a hundred objections but Mrs. Pelton had a hundred and one answers and in the end, Mr. Pelton succumbed, so another week saw them safely ensconced at the head of Lake Huron, the gentleman rather bored and the lady nervous and expectant.

Each day she followed her husband's footsteps more and more closely and as the season was young and there was very little to do, she did not find it difficult.

Each day she grew more nervous and one day toward the end of the month she seemed to reach the climax. Not an instant did she leave her husband from under her watchful eyes and she fretted if he even stirred. She dragged him off to bed comparatively early.

Whether it was this, or some more obscure cause, certain it is that toward the end Mr. Pelton seemed to grow restive. After they had reached their room, he expostulated. "Pshaw, Puss, I can't go to bed. To-night, nothing suits me but action. I want to do something. I—I wish I were in Ashcroft's place to-night, with a chance to make a name, to serve my country, to be somebody. Suppose," he cried gayly, "suppose half a dozen of us Yankees started up a dozen or two Spaniards around Santiago. There is a rush, a clashing of sabres and machetes, a peppering fire of rifles and carbines and—ah——"

With a sudden cry, he had flung up his hands, whirled around two or three times and fallen face downward on the floor.

Poor Mrs. Pelton's nerves gave way and crying and screaming she fell upon the floor, clasping her husband's head in her arms. But she was not to be tried as severely as on the previous occasions.

Almost immediately her husband staggered to his feet seemingly recovered and clapped his hand to his head.

His wife who had struggled up also and clasped her arms around his neck noticed his lips move and these were his whispered words:

"Without even being conscious that you will be in my place and in my power!" After a little he added aloud: "Something has snapped inside of me, Puss, but I feel better." Another space and he uttered two more words, irrelevant words, but they made Mrs. Pelton turn pale. "Poor Ashcroft!" he said.

It was almost a week later that the hotel proprietor came to the Peltons who were sitting on the long veranda where they had been watching the morning boat come in.

"Mr. Pelton, you mentioned the other day that you knew Colonel Ashcroft," he said with some excitement.

"Yes."

"Well, read that."

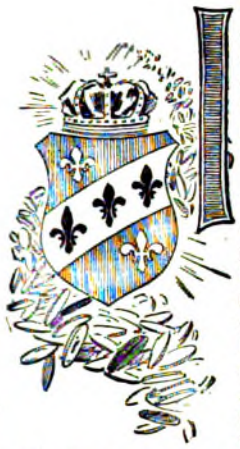
"That" was a newspaper article:

"Key West, Fla. Special to The Sun. The dispatch boat Kanapaha brings interesting details of the death of Colonel Ashcroft, previously reported. The Colonel, it seems, was in the habit of sharing the dangers of his men and while a strict disciplinarian, he never gave an order which he would not himself have been ready to obey. This trait was brought out by a little incident which occurred at Tampa, exactly one month before his death. He was superintending the loading of a transport ship, when he gave an order to a man which involved some risk of falling overboard. As the man could not swim, he naturally hesitated, when the impetuous colonel gave him a push to enforce his order. The man fell into the sea and the colonel promptly sprang in after him. Both were nearly drowned before they were rescued. Curiously enough it was just a month before this accident that he was involved in an unlucky quarrel with a fellow officer at Chickamauga and was shot through the arm, though the wound healed with surprising quickness.

"When Colonel Ashcroft was cautioned on the day of his death, he replied laughingly, 'O this is my lucky day. Nothing can hurt me to-day. I have a substitute who suffers for me.'

"It was this feeling of recklessness which inspired his charge while reconnoitering the enemy's position on that evening with half a dozen men.

"Coming upon a like party of the Spaniards, though of much greater force, the little squad of Americans dashed boldly upon them and scattered them, though not without an exchange of sword-cuts and shots. One of the bullets entered the breast of the brave colonel and he fell from his horse dead. The army has lost a valuable officer and his mourning friends are legion."



"Poor fellow!" sighed Pelton, when he had concluded the article. "And Puss, wasn't it a mighty odd thing that I should have spoken as I did the other night about being Ashcroft and charging the enemy with half a dozen men—you know the night I got that awful vertigo?"

"Very odd, indeed," said Mrs. Pelton and then she added to herself, "And what would it have been if we hadn't changed our zone?"

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT BY MAX BENNETT THRASHER.

Copyright, 1898, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher.

IT would be hard to conceive of anything which could create so much excitement all over the world as did the kidnapping of the Duchess of Kimborough.

The death of Queen Victoria, or a declaration of a general European war, could hardly have received more space in the newspapers on both sides of the Atlantic, for the marriage of this beautiful, young American heiress to his Grace of Kimborough was still fresh in mind; while the glowing accounts which had been cabled home of the gowns and jewels of the young Duchess when she was presented at Court and when she had appeared at the famous costume ball which the Duchess of Devonshire gave to the Queen's Jubilee visitors, had only served to intensify the interest in her, and in her new home.

The Duchess had left Kimborough late in the afternoon of a day in November to join her husband in London. She was attended by her maid and a man servant. The latter, who was riding third class, reached the city safely, but the first class compartment reserved for her Grace and her maid was found empty.

The first clue to a possible explanation of the mystery was obtained when the telegraph brought the news that the station agent and guard at Pedford-Byington had been found gagged and bound, by the guards of a goods train which had been stopped there for want of the usual signals. Pedford-Byington was the only station at which the train had stopped on the little-travelled branch from Kimborough to the main line. The agent and guard could give no information beyond the fact that they had been separately set upon, overpowered, and locked up in the luggage room. That robbery of the station was not the object of the attack was evident from the fact that not even the money in the till had been disturbed. Evidently the persons concerned in the affair had disdained any but the biggest game.

It was subsequently learned that in the darkness of the early autumn evening, the station employees having been put out of the way and the attention of the train guard having been diverted by a confederate, six men had entered the first class compartment, and smothering the Duchess and her maid, each of whom was of slight build, in blankets, had removed them by the door opposite to the platform against which the station was built.

On the day but one following the kidnapping the tremendous sensation excited by this was equaled by another, and all the London and New York papers rushed out extras.

The greatest detectives of whom England can boast were employed upon the case and, so far, had found out absolutely nothing. The Duke of Kimborough had offered a reward of five thousand pounds for any information which would lead to the recovery of his young wife, and her father in New York, before chartering the fastest Atlantic liner at the docks of that city, in which to cross the ocean, had cabled that he would give twice as much more.

It was at this time that the second sensation was precipitated.

The Duke of Kimborough received a letter mailed at the general post-office, in London, in which he was informed that the Duchess was safely imprisoned out of his reach, and that she and her maid were being kept under the influence of drugs which for a certain length of time would be harmless, but that if by ten o'clock of the evening of the next day certain conditions were not complied with, the dose would be doubled, the captors of her Grace would safely make their escape, and the two women when found, if they ever were found, would be dead.

The conditions were that two hundred thousand pounds in money be delivered to two messengers who would be at a designated point on the Thames embankment, near the Houses of Parliament at six o'clock, evening, of the following day. It was stipulated that the money should be in kinds and denominations specified, so that it could not be easily identified afterwards. It was stated that these two men would be secretly watched to see if they were followed. If this was the case, or if they were detained in any way beyond the time mentioned, then these two men, whose task had been assigned to them by lot, understood that they were to be abandoned and the rest of the conspirators were to make their escape, first removing the two prisoners to some place unknown to the two messengers, so that rescue would be impossible. If the money was sent as demanded the two women would be left under such circumstances that when they returned to consciousness, which they would do if unmolested during the night, they would be able to quickly and easily summon help and make their hiding place known.

Inasmuch as the dowry which the American girl had brought to England when she had married the Duke of Kimborough was four millions of pounds the amount demanded was not unreasonably large.

The excitement over the kidnapping was as nothing compared to that which followed this development. It was announced a hundred times, and denied as many, that the Duke had arranged to pay over the money. Fortunately the exact place fixed upon for the rendezvous had been kept from the public, else the Thames embankment would have been black with curious men and women, and Westminster Bridge would have fallen beneath the load crowded upon it. The appointed place was variously said to be anywhere from Whitechapel to the Crystal Palace, and every person guessed a new location. It was said that a thousand police and twice as many soldiers were to be detailed to capture the two messengers.

To tell the truth it is doubtful if the Duke himself knew what to do. His marriage had not been purely one of convenience, and he was sincerely attached to his wife. His first thought was to save her at any cost. Moreover, the terms of his marriage settlement had been such that if his wife died without children practically her whole fortune reverted to her family.

On the other hand it would be almost impossible for him alone to raise the large sum of money demanded in so short a time, and his wife's father, to whom he might have looked for help, was already crossing the ocean, and entirely out of reach.

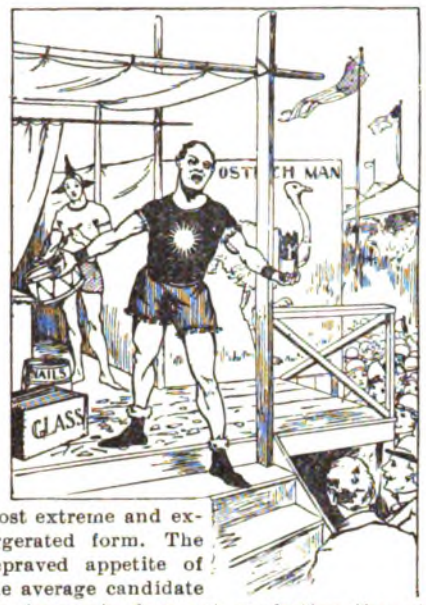
To complicate the case still more, certain sensational papers had taken up the case of the maid, and were clamoring that an effort be made to rescue her. The working people of London had responded to the appeal, and the police had already been called upon to disperse several assemblages of excited citizens.

Tottingham House, the town residence of the Kimborough family would have been besieged all day with people making suggestions, or offering advice, had it not been that it was guarded. About three o'clock this guard made way to allow two gentlemen who had just driven up to the house to enter. One of these was Lord Alfred Peveril, a younger brother of the Duke. The other was a stranger to Kimborough, but evidently, as soon as his name was pronounced, a well-known man, to whom even so exalted a personage as the head of one of England's oldest families listened with respect. The stranger was a tall man of imposing presence and with a face expressing great individuality.

The conference between this man, Lord Peveril, and the Duke, was earnest, and so long that before a decision was reached the city clock had struck for five. An hour before this the Chief of the Scotland Yard force, who was giving his personal attention to this case, had been sent for to join in the conference. At a quarter before six o'clock all four left the house and were driven to Westminster Bridge. There they were met by ten officers from Scotland Yard in citizen's dress whom the Chief had sent for, and who separately disposed themselves according to his direction so that they would not be conspicuous, and still would be close at hand. By his advice the Duke and Lord Peveril kept somewhat back. The Chief and the stranger each carried a well-filled hand bag.

Just as the hands on the illuminated face of Big Ben stood opposite each other, and the bell was struck for six, two men walked up to the spot where the Chief and his companion stood, and spoke certain words which the letter to the Duke had said would be employed as a means of identification. Before he replied the Chief shifted his satchel from one hand to the other. This had been the signal arranged for his men. Two minutes later both men had been overpowered and disarmed. Two close carriages were at hand. The stranger who had come with Lord Peveril had been closely watching both men through the whole struggle. He now said, pointing to one of the prisoners: "Put that one into that carriage and guard him. I will take this one in here with me."

The man first designated was hurried into one of the carriages, between two deputies, securely handcuffed. The other was put into the remaining carriage, with the man who had given this strange order, the door was closed, and the two men were left alone together. The light from the electrics on the Bridge shining in through the windows made the interior of the



THE HUMAN OSTRICH.

"TELL ME WHAT YOU EAT AND I'LL TELL YOU WHAT YOU ARE."

The human ostrich. You've seen him probably, in the booth at the fair or circus or on the platform of the dime museum. He has toughened his stomach to the consistency of leather, and lunches on broken bottles, tacks, or ten-penny nails with seeming impunity. He doesn't live long, of course, for he sacrifices life to earn a lazy livelihood.

You would be amazed, perhaps, to be told that you were something like the human ostrich, in the character of your diet, and the risk of life involved.

It is not necessary that you eat glass and nails in order to resemble this monstrosity. The man who plays the part of the human ostrich is an example of depraved appetite in its most extreme and exaggerated form. The depraved appetite of the average candidate for dyspepsia does not go farther than hot bread and biscuit, rich pastries, highly seasoned dishes, and excessively greasy foods. Add to this improper cooking, haste in eating, and lack of proper rest after a meal, and you have a condition very likely to result in disease and suffering.

Let it be remembered that the sole object of food is nutrition; nutrition not for the body as a whole only, but nutrition for the varying needs of the separate parts of the body; for the muscles, the nerves, the brain, the blood. When the stomach is in a state of healthy activity, Nature, by her remarkable processes, takes the food you supply, and distributes its starches and sugars, its salts and phosphates according to the needs of the separate organs of the body. When the stomach is not in a state of healthy activity, Nature does her best, but the various dependent organs of the body are put on short rations. There is not nourishment enough to supply them properly.

WHAT HAPPENS THEN?

A weakened stomach. A stomach incapable of performing its functions fully. The liver and blood-making glands work imperfectly. The natural result is that the food is imperfectly digested and only partly assimilated and the channels of life are choked and stopped by waste and putrescent matter. Some people know where the trouble is. They locate it in the stomach, because they have pain there after eating, an irregular craving for food, or an appetite that eating does not satisfy. There is heaviness after a meal, a feeling of undue fullness. It is hard to breathe, there is such a stuffy feeling about the chest. There may be palpitation or irregular action of the heart and the sufferer imagines he has heart disease. Perhaps the stomach sours, and there are bitter risings and belchings. These symptoms mark various forms and stages of "weak stomach." They will not all be present in every case or in the earlier stages of the disease. Any one of these symptoms locates the trouble in the stomach and the digestive and nutritive functions, which are disturbed.

Quite often there is no apparent connection between the stomach and the symptoms of the disease. The victim thinks it "liver trouble," heart failure, or lung disease. There is a dull pain, perhaps in the back or the side. The spine aches, sometimes "in spots" and sometimes through its whole length. There may be a sharp stitch or pain occasionally. Exercise makes the limbs tremble and the heart beat violently. Perhaps to some of these symptoms there is added an obstinate, stubborn cough.

WHAT IS THE MATTER NOW?

It is another case of weak stomach. But, that is not where the pain is. Very likely not. But that is where the trouble is. The stomach has not been able to properly feed the organs dependent upon it. They are starving, they are weak, and they show their weakness in the aches and pains that afflict the various parts of the body. What will set the stomach right? There is one remedy practically infallible in its results and that one remedy is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It cures because it is made to cure just the conditions of the stomach which give rise to disease.

By way of proof take the case of Rev. C. L. Mundell, of Pinegrove, Gallia Co., Ohio. He writes: "I suffered from a dreadful feeling and weakness, and in 1893 I lost my health altogether. I went to one of the best doctors in the State and he said I had heart, stomach, liver and kidney trouble. His treatment did me no good. I tried different kinds of patent medicines but got worse all the time; was so weak that I could not walk any distance. If I walked up hill or a little fast it seemed as though my heart would jump out. I had almost given up all hope, and my money was all gone. Was scarcely able to make a living. Finally I saw an advertisement in one of the country papers that for twenty-one one-cent stamps Dr. Pierce would send one of his 'Common Sense Medical Advisers.' So I sent and got one and began to read concerning diseases like my own. After consulting the doctor himself, I purchased at my nearest drug store a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and a bottle of his 'Pleasant Pellets.' This was in 1897 and now I am happy to say that I am in the enjoyment of good health which I attribute to Dr. R. V. Pierce. I am so glad of my health that I cannot say too much. I first return my sincere thanks to Almighty God and then to Doctor Pierce."

WILL NOT INEBRIATE.

"Golden Medical Discovery" contains no alcohol, or whisky, no opium or narcotics, neither sugar nor syrup which so often disagree with the weak dyspeptic stomach. Without any of these things it preserves its medicinal qualities perfectly and in any climate. It does not create a craving for injurious stimulants or narcotics.

DON'T BE DECEIVED.

If you are convinced that Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is what you need, do not allow any designing dealer to palm off a substitute on you under the specious plea that it is "just as good." If he has no respect for your judgment show him that you have.

There are people everywhere who are in ill-health. Medicine has not helped them. They are out of heart and discouraged. Dr. Pierce invites such to write to him, freely and fully. After careful consideration of the case a reply is quickly made containing such instructions and fatherly advice as will prove of the greatest benefit. There is no charge for this consultation by letter.

A GREAT OFFER.

"The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser," Dr. Pierce's great work on the treatment and cure of disease is a book for patients, a book for the household. It is packed with information from cover to cover. This great book contains 1008 pages and over 700 illustrations, is sent absolutely free, on receipt of stamps to cover the expense of mailing only. Send 21 cents in one-cent stamps for the edition bound in paper, or 31 stamps for the handsome, cloth-bound edition. Address, carriage light enough so that each man could see the other's face distinctly. The whole capture had been so quickly and quietly effected that it had attracted no attention except from two men, one of whom had been carelessly leaning over the parapet of Westminster Bridge, at some little distance, apparently looking at the water of the Thames beneath him, while the other, not far away, had stopped to light a cigar. A moment later each man had melted into the crowd of the street and sidewalk.

The group of men around the two carriages stood absolutely silent as if waiting for something. The Duke and his brother drew near and joined them. Five minutes passed; eight, ten, before the door of the second carriage opened, and the prisoner stepped out. He did not pay any attention to the men about him, and warned by a gesture from the stranger, who followed close behind him, no one stirred until the prisoner set off at a brisk walk down the embankment, his tall companion keeping close at his side. The others, except for a guard left for the first carriage, followed.

Down the broad walk the party went, past Cleopatra's Needle, past the great pile of buildings known as "Balfour's Bubble," on, steadily on, the prisoner leading the way, but speaking no word, nor giving any look of explanation to his companions.

Of all the chapters of surprises to which this remarkable case gave rise perhaps none was greater than the one which the members of this party received when their guide turned in at the door of the famous and elegant Hotel Metropole. Evidently the hall porter knew him for he swung the door open without hesitation. When he would have looked askance at the rest of the party a signal from the Chief satisfied him. Their guide, still silent, led the way to the left, stopped at the fourth floor, went down a passage, unlocked the door leading into a suite of rooms, unlocked the doors into two inner rooms, and pointed to the Duchess lying upon a bed there.

The men sprang forward. The young woman was still alive, as was also the maid, who was found in an adjoining room. Both had been deeply drugged, but prompt action saved their lives. During all this time the man who had guided the rescuing party to the Hotel stood in the room as if uninterested in what was going on. When Dr. Andresol, for the stranger was no other than the famous French physician who has been so successful in the practice of hypnotism, was satisfied that the two women were out of danger he turned to this man once more, had him handcuffed, and then, clapping his hands before his face removed the hypnotic spell which had bound him. The surprise of the would-be captor when he found himself the captured can be imagined. He and his companion are now doing time. No one else implicated in the kidnapping was ever captured. Although the distance f.m the Westminster Bridge to the Hotel Metropole is not long, their warning had come in season. Both men were game. Neither ever gave away the story of the plot, and it could only be guessed at from the little the Duchess remembered and the people at the Metropole could tell.

The suite of rooms at that house had been taken a week before the abduction occurred. They were represented to be for a man who had brought his invalid daughter to London for treatment but who did not wish to have her go to a hospital. Each day closely veiled and wrapped she had been carried by his servants out of the hotel, ostensibly to the surgeon's, and later brought back again. When, therefore the unconscious Duchess had been substituted for this dummy, one day, the affair had become so much a matter of course that no one thought of associating it with the mysterious disappearance of her Grace of Kimborough.

Dr. Andresol had happened to be in London. The experiment had suggested itself to him as an interesting one to try. He had felt confident of his success, and had offered his assistance. The Duke had agreed to it because he did not know of anything better to do. The two rewards which had been offered were duly paid, and the doctor used them to endow the now famous hospital in Paris where hypnotism is so successfully employed in surgical cases. The Duchess of Kimborough, when she was quite recovered and returned to society, was more popular and more talked about than ever.

BETH.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT BY ADDIE V. H. BARR.

Copyright, 1898, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher.

R. Max Gavotte was preoccupied as he sat at breakfast; his mother knew it on account of the partial forgetfulness of his table manners, as she had ever boasted, to herself anyway, that no mother in that old-fashioned Southern town had a more courteous son than she.

Her protegee, Beth McDowell, knew it, for twice had he addressed her as "Elizabeth" during the meal, and Dr. Max always did that when in a serious mood.

He aroused himself sufficiently to hear his mother say, "Max, Thanksgiving will be Beth's eighteenth birthday, and I wish her to entertain a few of her friends Thanksgiving evening. It will be four weeks from to-day."

"Certainly, mother, I shall approve of whatever you do, but please pardon my seeming lack of interest this morning, but I must confess I am considerably disturbed. 'Old black mammy' is bed ridden with rheumatism and little Joe is, I fear, taking diphtheria and there isn't a darkey in this whole town who will nurse him. Since that scourge of diphtheria five years ago the word itself strikes terror to every one of them."

The color had slowly stolen from Beth's cheeks. Little Joe was "old black mammy's" grandson, and the two lived alone in a comfortable little house on the outskirts of the town. Their home had been provided by Max himself for he felt in duty bound to care for his "old black mammy."

Little Joe was Max's body guard whenever he had opportunity and he thought that dainty Beth McDowell must be related to the angels, she was so sweet and gracious.

Beth had quite an affection for the shiney, black-faced little fellow, and to think of his being so ill with no one to care for him made Beth's heart ache. Dr. Max noticed her white face, and he smilingly said:

"Mother, don't let Beth think too much of young Dr. Allen, she can never make a doctor's wife. If he came home saying that he had a case of small-pox, he would most certainly have a case of nervous prostration at home."

"You are unkind, Max," said Mrs. Gavotte, seeing the tears spring to Beth's eyes. "Beth has never been tested, yet such natures as hers shrink from seeing even a dumb brute suffer."

"Never mind, Beth, it's no crime not to be a heroine," said Dr. Max, arising from the table and making preparations for his morning calls. Just as Dr. Max was lifting the gate latch he heard light feet behind him, and Beth laid her hand on his arm.

"Max, will Joe die if he is not cared for?"

"I am afraid he will, Beth. Why do you ask, little girl?"

But Beth had flitted back up the gravel walk as fast as she had come. Dr. Max stood still and looked after the slight figure. It was difficult to realize that this little girl whom his mother had taken to her heart eight years ago, was now a young woman.

"How I wish she was more of a woman and less of child," thought Dr. Max as he drove down the street.

Dr. Max Gavotte was thirty-five years of age, and had been a practicing physician for four years. He had spent several years in Germany, studying his profession, and upon his return home, he delighted his mother's fond heart by remaining in his native town instead of going to some great city.

His practice comprised two large towns situated near each other, with some country practice intervening. It seemed that he was wedded to his profession, but if his name was ever coupled with that of another, Beth had a strange sensation as if something was tugging at her heart, an unexplainable, indefinable something.

Dr. Max knew to whom to go if he wanted a boutonnier made or initials worked in his handkerchiefs, or who could rest his tired head by reading so smoothly or singing quaint little songs in a sweet, fresh voice, yet Dr. Max had more or less conceit and his ideas concerning what sort of a wife he wanted were well formulated and it was his opinion that he would never marry unless he found such a one.

Above all other virtues she must be heroic.

Poor little Joe certainly thought Beth of the family of angels, and people of intelligence likened her to a fairy, and fairy-like she was in every movement. If she bought any article of wearing apparel, her deft fingers added something to make it prettier. Her mind had not been neglected; she read good books, and thought good earnest thoughts, but with it all she could not help being "dainty Beth."

A few moments after her son's departure Mrs. Gavotte felt a pair of arms steal around her neck and heard a tearful voice say:

"Auntie, does Max really think I am such a coward? But, Auntie, I have never had any great opportunity of showing you and Max how grateful I am. I almost wish Max would have some dreadful disease so that I could nurse him."

"No need of such heroic measures," Mrs. Gavotte laughingly said, "dearie, we both know of your gratitude."

The following morning was cold and gloomy and Dr. Max was gloomier than the morning previous. No nurse could be found for Joe. Dr. Max had spent three hours with him the night before, for the boy really had diphtheria in a malignant form.

"It is an outrage!" Dr. Max exclaimed, "for such a thing to happen in a civilized community."

Dr. Max was scarcely at the home of his first patient that morning when Beth appeared before Mrs. Gavotte with her long, gray coat and little blue hat on, and a basket on her arm. Mrs. Gavotte looked at her inquiringly.

"I am going to nurse Joe," Beth simply said.

"No, no, Beth, my child!" Mrs. Gavotte exclaimed. "What will Max say?"

"He, at least, cannot say I am a coward," answered Beth, quietly, "but, Auntie, that does not prompt me; I wish to relieve Joe if I can. Please do not oppose me."

"But, Beth," said Mrs. Gavotte, "when Max finds you there, he will insist on your returning."

"No, I do not believe he will," said Beth. "And, Auntie dear, don't worry," said she, kissing Mrs. Gavotte, and then hurrying toward "old black mammy's."

When Dr. Max called at the cottage at ten o'clock that morning he found a cheerful fire in the large fireplace and Joe's trundle bed near the fire; and he smelled oyster soup cooking in the next room, the kitchen.

Joe's face lighted up when he saw Dr. Max, and he said, "Oh, Marse Max, how good you is to me; jest to think what you's done for me——"

"Yes, Marse Max, honey, how could yer let her come?" chimed in "old black mammy" from the bed in the corner.

"Let who come?" asked Dr. Max.

"W'y, Missie, thar she is now bringin' watah from de pump wid dem little han's o' her'n——"

Dr. Max's brown eyes opened in astonishment, for Beth was just entering the back door with her fair hair blowing about her face and her blue eyes shining with something—Dr. Max knew not what.

"I came to stay with Joe,—and," said she reluctantly, "to relieve your mind, Max."

To Dr. Max it seemed as if a revolution had taken place. Where was the supposed Beth of yesterday?

"Beth, you may stay if it is your wish," said Dr. Max, when they were alone in the kitchen, "but I shudder to think of your doing so. Now I must go home and console mother as best I can."

For four days Beth followed Dr. Max's instructions to the letter, but the disease marched on, and little Joe grew steadily worse.

Once after taking his nourishment, Joe raised himself on his elbow and said hoarsely, "Missie, how long is it 'fore Thanksgivin'?"

"A little more than three weeks, Joe."

"Missis wuz a goin' to give me an' mammy a big turkey, wuzn't she?"

"Yes, Joe."

"An mammy wuz agoin' to cook me a possum wid sweet 'taters, but that wuz 'fore I thought I wuz goin' visitin'."

Beth supposed he was becoming delirious and asked, "Where are you going, Joe?"

"Joe's goin' to spend Thanksgivin' in heben, Missie, an' don't you s'pose I can tell Jesus how good you's bin to me an' mammy?"

That was the last time he was able to speak aloud. The next morning found his voice gone, and he was sinking into a semi-conscious condition.

"I cannot possibly be here before midnight," said Dr. Max, as he was leaving Beth that morning, "but I shall be here at all events before the end. This strain will be over within a few more hours, Beth. You have done nobly, bravely, and I am proud of you," and he looked down into her sweet blue eyes, which fell at his glance.

She said, "I know I can endure the strain, Max, only my head aches a tiny bit," and she might have added, "my throat is sore," but she did not wish to alarm Dr Max.

"Old black mammy" was able to leave her bed and sit beside Joe, but she did nothing but rock back and forth and moan most dismally. Joe's breath was becoming more labored and his face took on an ashy hue that was terrible to Beth.

All day Beth had fought a feeling of languor, which she attributed to loss of sleep. As night came on a cold rain set in, the wind moaned through the trees and around the corners of the house.

Beth hardly knew which was the more dismal, the moaning of the wind or the moaning of "old mammy." Beth watched Joe closely, yet it was difficult for her to believe that the silent messenger was an inmate of the lowly cottage. "Old mammy" realized it, and flung herself upon the floor and began that doleful wail of the colored race.

Joe was dying—where was Max? Beth listened and heard nothing outside but the pitiless rain. Dr. Max drove up to the cottage at two in the morning. He had been delayed much against his will. He never forgot the scene in that humble room. Joe lay still and lifeless upon the little trundle bed with the firelight full upon his dead face, causing him to look as if he slept.

Beth sat in a low chair with her eyes fastened upon Joe's face, as if she expected him to stir or whisper the word "Missie."

"Old black mammy's" head lay in Beth's lap, and she seemed unconscious of mammy's constant wailing.

"Beth, I am very sorry," said Dr. Max. "Poor little girl! What a night!" and he took her hands in his. "What!" he exclaimed, "Feverish! Throat sore?"

"Yes," said Beth. "May I go home, Max? I am so tired. Joe will spend Thanksgiving in heaven. I did what I could, Max."

"Yes, Beth, yes," and with tears in his eyes and a lump in his throat, Dr. Max wrapped her up tenderly and carried her to the buggy, bidding "old mammy" to get in too. Then locking the house up securely he left all that remained of little Joe alone for the time being.

Beth's life hung in the balance. The terrible disease had stricken her down. Dr. Max knew what anguish of soul was, during those days and nights, and he also knew that if Beth's bright life went out, it would leave a dense shadow over his pathway. He now knew his own mind and heart. But the disease was stayed.

Thanksgiving morning Beth was to be carried down stairs by Dr. Max. It had been three weeks since little Joe was buried. There was to be no Thanksgiving party. Dr. Max would permit Beth to spend her eighteenth birthday down stairs, but she was too weak to see any one.

That morning at breakfast Mrs. Gavotte had said, "Max, we have so much to be grateful for this Thanksgiving, and, bye the bye, you have not told me what your birthday present to Beth is to be."

Dr. Max smiled a queer little smile and said, "Mother dear, await developments," and Mrs. Gavotte, with a woman's intuitive power, felt that her cherished dream was about to be realized.

Beth sat in a large chair in the library. Max had said his present which would show his gratitude was there.

From his pocket he drew forth a small velvet-lined case in which was a beautiful diamond ring. Handing it to Beth he requested her to look inside. "Max to Beth" was what she read.

Taking it again in his hand he said, with much emotion, as he looked down upon her pale sweet face.

"Beth, this ring represents me. If you accept it, you accept Max."

"Oh, Max! I am not worth——"

"Hush," said Dr. Max, placing the glittering circlet on her finger, with his great love shining in his eyes, "hush, Elizabeth—my darling, it is I who am unworthy."

CATARRH CAN BE CURED.

Catarrh is a kindred ailment of consumption, long considered incurable; and yet there is one remedy that will positively cure catarrh in any of its stages. For many years this remedy was used by the late Dr. Stevens, a widely noted authority on all diseases of the throat and lungs. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all sufferers from Catarrh, Asthma, Consumption, and nervous diseases, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing, with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. NOYES, 920 Powers Block, Rochester, N. Y.

GREAT Scott, boys! Something must be done. I'll be hanged if those little sneaking Freshies are to be allowed to carry all before them this way. A class supper! Not much they don't! Sure's my name's Mason this thing is to be broken up."

"But the Prex has given his consent. I don't see what we are going to do."

"Well, I guess you'll find out what we are going to do, Davis. Suppose we are going to sit by like blinking owls and let those sniveling little idiots walk over us? They would be so overtopping and conceited next year that there would be no living with 'em. No, the thing has got to be stopped right here, and we Sophs are the ones to do it. See?"

"Well, no, I don't see. If old Prex has put his finger in the Freshies' pie any fellow who undertakes to meddle will be pretty sure to get his walking ticket the next morning, and I don't care to accept mine just now."

"Walking ticket be hanged! I'm not going to meddle with the supper. I'm only to prevent there being any feast for the kids. If there's no class president, no recorder, no historian on hand what would be the use of a supper? It would be Hamlet with the ghost left out, base-ball without a pitcher, a band without a drum-major. See?"

"Yes, I see; but how in thunder you are going to prevent those fellows from being there beats me."

"Well, you won't know anything about the 'how', sonny, unless you'll promise to be mum, and help on the process, besides. I'll tell you one thing, though; it won't bring you any walking ticket from old Andrews."

"Sure? Well, that's all I'm afraid of, so fire

CURE DRUNKARDS

ELOQUENT WORDS FROM A WIFE WHO RESCUED HER HUSBAND FROM A TERRIBLE HABIT.

Secretly Gave Him a Remedy in His Coffee and He Now Rejoices With Her.

Who can doubt that there is a cure for drunkenness when we have such an eloquent and emphatic statement from Mrs. Katie Lynch, 329 Ellis St., San Francisco, Cal., she says:—"My husband was a hard drinker. There was never a doubt in my mind but what liquor had so worked upon his nerves as to actually control his appetite. Like most men who drink he was kind and generous when sober but the rum demon usually had the better of him and his wife had to suffer. One day I concluded to try a remedy called Golden Specific, which it was said would cure the liquor habit secretly. So I mixed some of it with Mr. Lynch's food for a few days and put a little in his coffee. I could scarcely conceal my agitation and fear less he should suspicion me for he had suddenly taken a dislike to liquor, said he despised the stuff, and was the most remarkably changed man you ever saw. I kept bravely at it determined to not waver in my attempt to cure him and I soon found out that my mission was a complete success and that Golden Specific had wrought almost a miracle for me. I want other women to profit by my example and am glad to learn that Dr. Haines who discovered Golden Specific will generously send a free trial package to every woman who writes for it.

Send your name and address to Dr. J. W. Haines, 551 Glenn Bldg., Cincinnati, O., and if you wish you are at liberty to refer to me as having told you about this marvelous remedy.

away, and let's hear this precious scheme of yours."

"Well, I'll tell you, but we must have some more of the boys to help, so let's get them all together, and I'll explain it to you all at once. We must work quick, too. Lots to do, and only twenty-four hours to do it all in. Come on!" and the young men left their room in dormitory A., and were soon crossing the campus of Brown College in search of kindred spirits among the Sophomores.

The next night—a dark, drizzling, moonless night—three close carriages, each with a driver, were standing at the entrance of the college grounds. One pressed upon the pavement at Brown street, another stood among the trees at the top of the hill on George street, while a third hovered near the entrance to the Athletic Field. As soon as the carriages were satisfactorily placed a low whistle announced the fact, and the doors of the Sophomores' rooms opened silently and a crowd of masked and disguised figures poured into the corridors and assailed the doors of the president, the secretary and the historian of the Freshman class. No use to fight. No use to protest. Six or eight masked men stood grimly and silently over each of the prisoners and forced them to dress. An attempt on the part of the president to raise a yell for help was promptly suppressed by a gag, and soon all three, blindfolded, gagged, and with hands tied behind them were put into the waiting carriages and driven off—with three of their captors in every carriage—each by a different route, to Fox's Head. Here a tug, hired for the purpose, was in readiness, with steam up, and the kidnapped boys and their keepers were helped on board. As soon as they were well away from land and steaming down the Providence river the prisoners were given use of their hands, and, upon their promise to make no outcry, their gags, too, were removed.

"Now," said Gatewell, the president, as soon as he could command his voice, "will you be kind enough to tell me what all this means? That it is outrageous Sophomore tomfoolery I do not need to be told; but what, in the name of all that's senseless, are you doing, and why are you doing it?"

"It means, most wise and reverend president, that we, as Sophs have serious objections to the pow wow planned by you Freshies for to-morrow night, and that we are determined to prevent it at all hazards."

"That may be. I can well believe you would stop it if you could, but—I don't quite see how you are going to do so."

"Well, as we are out of reach of Providence, there's no harm in your knowing; so here goes. You'll grant, I suppose, that there would be no fun in a class supper if you three fellows were not there."

"Yes."

"Yes, well we propose to steam down outside of Block Island a bit, and lie there until to-morrow evening—getting a snatch of rest and recreation, a sniff of salt air, as it were, and perhaps a little fishing. Then to-morrow evening we will steam for home, arriving at college in time for prayers on Thursday morning. See? We felt as if you were applying yourselves too closely to your work, and we have a fatherly interest in the health of you little kids."

"To the devil with you and your care!" exclaimed Gatewell, "I'd like to pitch every one of you overboard."

"No doubt, no doubt," replied Mason, calmly; "but little boys mustn't give way to their angry passions. It might result in gags and manacles again," and Mason pointed to the heap of gags, handkerchiefs and ropes which had just been taken off the prisoners.

Gatewell clenched his fists and his black eyes sparkled with rage, but he was too wise to run any risk of losing what freedom he still possessed, so he restrained himself, and presently asked, quietly:

"Got your fish lines and grub on board?"

"Mostly. Got to stop at Newport for bait, though, and for bread. Forgot 'em at Providence."

Gatewell said no more, and sat gloomily watching boat and shore as they steamed on. When they were within a quarter of a mile of the wharf in Newport the Sophs rose and Davis remarked:

"Guess you fellows may as well go below for a while until we are clear of this place. It may save trouble all round. Besides, we've got to take off our masks here."

Quick as a flash Gatewell tore off his coat, vest and shoes and was overboard before the other boys had any idea of his intentions. Heading for the lights of the city he swam steadily on with the long, clean strokes of a trained athlete. The tug lowered a small boat, and Mason and two other men started to follow and recover the swimmer, when all were startled by a shrill whistle, and, turning, saw a small steamer in full pursuit of them. The next moment a search light thrown on them from the deck of the steamer nearly blinded them.

"Halt, or we'll blow you up," shouted the captain of their pursuer.

"What's wanted?" they called back.

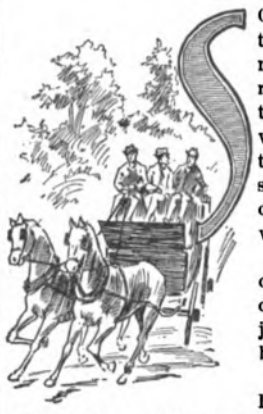
"You are all wanted, and mighty quick, too! Get on board there, you men in the dory, or I'll put a shot through you. Quick! Do you hear?" roared the steamer captain.

The boys, thinking that the college authorities were upon them, obeyed silently, leaving Gatewell to swim on unmolested to the city.

"Now," said their captor, steaming alongside, "every man Jack of you come aboard of my craft and go down into the cabin," and on board they filed and down the ladder into the close little cabin, while the captain took possession of the tug, sending a couple of men aboard to search her for possible stowaways, while another pair of men started in pursuit of the fleeing Gatewell. They caught him just as he was climbing up on the wharf, and speedily had him back in their boat where one of them held him, too exhausted to offer any resistance, while the other man rowed back to the steamer. As soon as they were safely on board with the tug in tow, they headed with all speed for Fort Dumpling, which they reached just as the May morning was breaking in the east.

The watch responded to the steamer's hail, and in a few moments a boat put off from the fort to learn the errand of the early morning visitors. The boys, in their close confinement below, were ignorant of all that was going on, and were utterly astounded, half an hour later, to be led on deck and taken possession of by a squad of soldiers. No answer was vouchsafed to their questions until all were safely inside the fort. Then they were informed that their strange actions had attracted the attention of the police in Providence, who suspected them of being Spanish spies, and had therefore caused them to be followed and arrested.

Explanations followed. Telegrams passed in rapid succession between the fort and the college. The President himself came down and identified the twelve boys as his students, and at last they were free to return to Providence. At the college the President treated the Sophomores very leniently, rightly judging that they had been well punished already, and that the sneers and gibes of the seniors and juniors would be a bitter pill for them to swallow for the remainder of the college year, and that it would be a worse punishment than any which he could inflict. He stipulated, however, that all the expenses of the chase, of the telegrams, of new clothes and a new watch for Gatewell, whose clothes and watch were ruined during the night, and all other expenses of the affair, should be paid by the offending Sophomores.



The captain of the tug, it is needless to say, had to settle with the civil authorities of Providence for his part in the affair and the drivers of the carriages also came in for their share of blame.

And the supper? Oh, yes, that came off a week later with great success.

JOE GRANGER'S VOICE.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT BY BLANCHE HEATH.

Copyright, 1898, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher.

OME years ago, while traveling in the remote backwoods, I arrived at the little town of Wintacook, where I expected to take the connecting stage. But, though overdue, it was nowhere in sight.

"Stage is late today?" I suggested to one of the natives enjoying his pipe near by.

"Wal, yes, kind o' late," he assented, sizing me up with a twist of the eye. "'Count o' the rains, I s'pose. On'y hope 'tain't Joe's voice ag'in," he added, shaking his head.

This puzzled me. "Joe" was evidently the driver, but what had his voice to do with the stage-hours?

"Is he a singer," I asked finally, "that he has to be so careful of his voice?"

"Joe a singer?" chuckled the backwoodsman. "Why, bless yer soul! 'tain't his own nat'ral voice I'm a-speakin' of. It's somethin' outside of him, 't follers him an' tells him when there's danger ahead. True's my name's Rufe Wilson!" seeing my incredulous look. "Why, where'd ye come from, 't ye hain't never heerd o' Joe Granger's Voice?"

Not much liking a journey through this wild country with a cranky guide, I began to question the man. He told me some very strange things, which were cut short by Joe's arrival with the belated stage.

To my relief, the driver looked neither like a fool nor a knave. He was a sturdy fellow, with a shrewd, honest face, and a practical manner. Watching him, I wondered at the word tales I had heard, till I reflected how easily a local superstition is built up on a few coincidences. Meanwhile he hustled around for fresh horses, and we were soon off at a brisk pace to make up for lost time.

There were a couple of sportsmen on the box-seat, and three inside passengers besides myself. These were carrying on a political discussion, interspersed with complaints about the delay. One of them, named Knowles, seemed particularly aggrieved, and I fell asleep to the sound of his grumbling.

All at once I woke with a confusion of voices in my ears. The stage had stopped, and three heads were out of the windows, asking what the matter was. I put mine out, too, and looked about.

We were at the top of a hill, down whose rocky sides the road dropped almost like a straight line. Joe sat gripping the reins in his hands, and trying to answer half-a-dozen questions at once. Dominant over all rang Knowles' insistent voice.

"What are you waiting for?" he demanded impatiently. "Why don't you go on without losing any more time?"

"Tain't safe"—Joe began. But Knowles cut him short.

"It's a road you go over every day. Why isn't it safe?"

"Bridge gone," laconically, motioning down into the gloomy ravine.

"How do you know it's gone?" Knowles took him up sharply. "You can't see the bottom from here."

"No, but I know it's gone, though," doggedly.

"The man's drunk—or crazy!" Knowles looked around at us in perplexity. "How can he tell the bridge is gone without seeing the place?"

The story of the mysterious Voice came to my mind, and I hastily told it for what it was worth. Knowles received it with angry incredulity.

"It's a swindle! an imposition!" he exclaimed. Then, to Joe: "I'll report you. You'll lose your job."

"I'd ruther lose that than my passengers' lives," answered Joe. "I heerd that Voice right in my ear, a-sayin',—'Bridge gone! Go back!'—An' I mean ter go back."

"Go back!" exploded Knowles in a passion. "And lose to-night's train to Lakeford? I tell you I've got an engagement there to-morrow that means money, and I'm not going to miss it for all the fool-voices between here and Canada!" He appealed to the rest of us: "Gentlemen, I don't imagine any of you care to take this journey over again for nothing? I propose to go on, whether or no. If the driver is afraid, let him go back. We can manage among us to take the stage over to Lakeford."

"Oh, I can coach us easy enough"—began one of the sportsmen. But Joe broke in hoarsely.

"For God's sake, gents, don't do it! I can't explain this 'ere Voice, but I never knowed it to fail. I tell you, the bridge is gone, an' so'll you be ef you keep on."

Joe's earnestness did not convince us. Or, if any felt a misgiving, he would not acknowledge it before the others. Knowles had set the pace, and the rest of us were bound to keep up to it.

Finding resistance useless, Joe sullenly submitted. "All right! Ef she's a-goin' on, I'm a-goin' on with her. Only remember," speaking slowly, "once we start down this 'ere hill, we can't stop on the way, nohow."

"Who wants to stop?" retorted Knowles. "What we want is to go on."

"You kin go." Joe spoke with sinister quiet. "But don't blame me, ef you sleep at the bottom of the river to-night."

We took our places again. But this time I mounted to the box-seat. For, in spite of sober reason, I felt a vague uneasiness, which made me prefer to face the danger if danger there was.

Never shall I forget that descent! It was the steepest I have ever known, and, as Joe had said, once started there was no stopping on the way. The stage, gathering momentum with every turn of the wheels, went plunging downward at a frightful speed, between an unbroken forest-growth on one side and a sheer precipice on the other. Faster and faster the trees flew by, like a modern version of the Wild Huntsman's Ride. We all sat silent, for it was a situation that strained the nerves up beyond the talking-point. Once, indeed, one of the sportsmen did ask Joe some question, but Joe only muttered: "First man 't speaks to me, I'll pitch him off, headforemost!" After that not a word was said.

It was a splendid day in mid-October. The abrupt contrast of crag and ravine, intensified by the vivid autumn colors, now in their fullest fire, made up a picture such as I had never seen before. Ordinarily I should have had eyes only for the unfamiliar beauty of this mountain-scenery, but now I could not keep them off the driver. His face was furrowed with the fierce tension, and the muscles stood out like whipcord where he had knotted the reins around his wrists to control the pull of the horses. On we rushed, till an increasing roar told of our nearness to the hidden river; still on, till a break in the woods showed it suddenly at our very feet, racing over the rocks among whirling logs and broken timbers.

The bridge was gone!

We were so close now that another bound must bring us to the brink of the white, boiling torrent; another—

I caught my breath for the coming struggle. Suddenly I felt a strange jerking motion, and saw that Joe had headed us to a little clearing among the trees. The horses, wrenched from their course, plunged violently, and the stage turned on itself at a sharp angle. One of Joe's arms dropped helpless to his side, and together we brought the stage to a standstill, pitching and swaying at the very edge of the chasm, with the water not three feet from the horses' hoofs!

In a jiffy we were all on the ground, and had pulled Joe down. We found that his arm was dislocated, but he bore the pain like a Spartan, though the great drops on his drawn face showed the mental strain he had gone through.

Fortunately, one of the sportsmen knew enough of surgery to set the arm. As we crowded around, Joe caught sight of Knowles.

"Looks like you won't hev ter report me, after all," he said, with a faint smile. I'll lose my job for one while, anyhow."

Knowles bit his lip. "Come now, my man, don't talk like that. Don't you think that river is all the reminder I need?" with a look at the rocky whirlpool below. "But even if you do have to lie by for awhile," he continued, "you won't lose anything by it. We're going to make up a purse for you—Oh, yes," as Joe shook his head. "It's only a fair exchange, and you certainly have earned the money."

But Joe protested that he wanted no money for merely doing his duty, a resolution which was probably strengthened by the taunt about his being afraid. Finally an idea occurred to me based on Mr. Rufe Wilson's gossip, and I called Knowles aside. After a little debate, we returned to the circle about Joe.

"Now, about this money," said Knowles in a matter-of-fact way. "We want to show that we set some value on our own lives, so, as you are too obstinate to take it, we shall give it as a wedding present to one of the pretty girls in Wintacook—Miss Amanda Harris, say? Of course, you couldn't object to that?"

Joe looked up with a start, and, catching the twinkle in Knowles' eye, blushed to the roots of his hair. Then a slow smile spread over his face, as he answered:

"I s'pose you'll hev ter settle that with 'Mandy herself. 'Tain't fur me ter tell her thus an' so. An' I guess 'twouldn't be of no use ef I did."

There was a general laugh at this frank admission, and the purse was made up on the spot.

When we took the stage back to Wintacook, we found the little community in a state of excitement. Some trappers had just brought in the report that a log-boom higher up the river had burst, and swept down-stream carrying all before it. Great was the relief, therefore, to see our party return, safe if not exactly sound.

We remained there over night, continuing our journey next morning by a different route. I did not hear Knowles say another word about his broken engagement. Probably he thought it a cheap exchange for a broken neck.

The following year, having occasion to visit Lakeford again, I asked one of the station-hands if Joe Granger still drove the stage from Wintacook.

"Does now," he answered. "There was a while, months back, 't he had ter lay by 'count of a twisted shoulder. Furst-rate thing fer him, though! Ye see, there was a lot o' city gents he saved from drownin', time the bridge was swep' away by a log-boom bustin'. They acted real gen'rous by him, I've heerd. Made his gal a big present. An' now he's got married, an' paid off his morgidge inter the bargain."

"Quite a stroke of luck," I said. "And that Voice, the one that warned him of danger, is that with him still?"

"Sure! Sticks to him like a brother. Queer, ain't it?" he added meditatively. "But I guess there's more things a-goin' on round us 'n we could 'count fur ef we was ter try ever-so."

"There are more things in Heaven and Earth than are dreamt of in our philosophy," I assented with a smile to this new version of Shakespeare's theory.

"That's the idee to a dot," said the man admiringly, as he turned to cope with a big dray of trunks.

Just then I saw my train steaming in, and hurried forward to meet it. And that is the last I ever heard of Joe Granger's Voice.

FRIENDS 5 DROPS TRADE MARK THEY ARE LEGION IN THE OF UNITED STATES AND THROUGHOUT THE WORLD—ALL RECORDS BROKEN.

2,987,344 Bottles of 5 Drops Sold Within Three Years.

The wonderful success that has attended the introduction of "5 DROPS" is unprecedented in the history of the world. Think of it! 2,987,344 bottles sold, more than 1,250,000 people have been cured in the last three years! The merchant, the professional man, the mechanic and he who earns his bread by the "sweat of his brow," one and all, indorse this great discovery and "5 DROPS" may well be justly termed "The Greatest of All Household Remedies" for preventing diseases and curing the afflicted.

5 DROPS [Trade Mark.]

Gives instant relief from pain; absolutely cures Rheumatism, Sciatica, Neuralgia, Dyspepsia, Backache, Asthma, Hay Fever, Catarrh, Sleeplessness, Nervousness, Nervous and Neuralgic Headaches, Heart Weakness, Toothache, Earache, Croup, LaGrippe, Malaria, Creeping Numbness, Bronchitis and kindred diseases.

If you have not sufficient confidence, after reading this statement and the following letters, to send for three large bottles for $2.50, which will surely cure you, then send for a $1.00 bottle, which contains enough medicine to more than satisfy you of its wonderful curative properties.

5 DROPS is the name and the dose. Large bottles, 300 doses, $1.00, prepaid by mail or express; 3 bottles, $2.50. Sold only by us and our agents. Agents wanted in new territory. Write to-day.

Mrs. Martha N. Shaw, Centerville, Ia., writes on Aug. 24, 1898: "Two bottles of your 5 DROPS and two boxes of 5 DROP Salve have done me more good than all the doctors' medicines I have ever taken. I have been doctoring for 22 Years with different doctors and never got the slightest relief. Nine months ago I started to take 5 DROPS and now all my sores are healed up and even the skin of the leg that was afflicted so horribly has regained its natural color. It has indeed been a wonderful medicine for me and I cannot praise it too highly, for could not walk across the street and now I can do all my housework myself and I feel many years younger."

Mrs. M. A. Wymer, Willamina, Ore., on Aug. 5, 1898, says: "Since I have taken the last bottle of 5 DROPS I have improved wonderfully. I have had no chills since using the remedy and my spine is very near straight. My partially paralyzed limbs have regained new life. I could not praise 5 DROPS enough for what it has done for me. I would not give one bottle of 5 DROPS for 100 bottles of the best of other remedies that I have ever tried and know what I am saying. Please send me another bottle at once for which you will find money enclosed."

Mrs. C. G. Townley, Robberson, I. T., on June 24, 1898, who was cured of Inflammatory Rheumatism: "I think your 5 DROPS is all you claim. It is a wonderful medicine and has cured me of chronic Inflammatory Rheumatism of long standing. I am now in my 74th year and I have suffered from Rheumatism for many years until I used 5 DROPS, which cured me. I have recommended your 5 DROPS all over this part of the country, and it was through me that J. P. Walling, of Roff, I. T., got the 5 DROPS, and he says it cured him. Many thanks for your great medicine."

Mr. Ira Sargent, Dunbar, (Neb.), also writes under date of July 25, '98, that he is cured of Rheumatism, Stomach Trouble, and Catarrh. "I want to write you in regard to my case of Stomach Trouble and Rheumatism. I commenced one year ago to take '5 DROPS,' and I can tell you to-day that though I am 75 years old and past I feel like a new person. I don't want to be without '5 DROPS.' '5 DROPS' has the praise of being the best medicine on the market. It has cured a bad case of Catarrh here and has another almost cured. Please accept my thanks for the favors I have received at your hands." IRA SARGENT.

We do not ask you to believe one word of these statements. We know them to be true. One bottle will convince you of its marvelous curative properties. Why suffer when relief is at hand?

Twinette, the Inquisitive Spider.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

WINETTE, the spider, was young, hungry and industrious. "Weave yourself a web, my dear," said her mother, "as you know how without teaching, and catch flies for yourself; only don't weave near me in the corner here. I am old, and stay in the corners, but you are young, and needn't. Besides, you would be in my way. Scramble along the rafters to a little distance off, and spin. But mind! just see there's nothing there—below you, I mean—before you begin. You won't catch anything to eat if there isn't empty space about you for the flies to fly in."

Twinette was dutiful and obeyed. She scrambled along the woodwork of the roof of the church—for it was there her mother lived—till she had gone what she thought might fairly be called a little distance off, and then stopped to look round, which, considering she had eight eyes to do it with, was not difficult. But she was not so sure of what there might be below.

"I wonder whether mother would say there is nothing here—below me, I mean—but empty space for flies to fly in?" said she.

But she might have stood wondering there forever. So she went back to her mother, and asked what she thought.

"Oh dear, oh dear!" said her mother, "how can I think about what I don't see? There usen't to be anything there in my young days, I'm sure. But everybody must find out things for themselves. Let yourself down by the family rope as you know how, without teaching, and see for yourself if there's anything there or not."

Twinette was a very intelligent young spider, quite worthy of the age she was born in; so she thanked her mother for her advice, and was just starting afresh, when another thought struck her. "How shall I know if there's anything there when I get there?" asked she.

"Dear me, if there's anything there, how can you help seeing it?" cried the mother, rather teased by her daughter's inquiring spirit, "you with at least eight eyes in your head!"

"Thank you. Now I quite understand," said Twinette; and scuttling back to the end of the rafter she began to prepare the family rope.

It was the most exquisite thing in the world—so fine you could scarcely see it; so elastic it could be blown about without breaking; such a perfect grey that it looked white against black things, and black against white; so manageable that Twinette could both make it and slide down by it at once; and when she wished to get back, could slip up by it, and roll it up at the same time.

It was a wonderful rope for anybody to make without teaching. But Twinette was not conceited. Rope-making came as natural to her as eating does to intelligent little boys, so she thought no more about it than we do of chewing our food.

How she did it is another question, and one not easily answered, however intelligent we may be. This much may be hinted: Out of four little spinning machines near the tail came four little threads, and the rope was a four-twist of these. But as each separate thread was itself a many-twist of a great many others, still finer, I do not pretend to tell the number of strands (as rope-threads are called) in Twinette's family rope. Enough, that as she made it now, it has been made from generation to generation, and there seems to be no immediate prospect of a change.

The plan was for the spinner to glue the ends to the rafter, and then start off. Then out came the threads from the spinning machines, and twist went the rope; and the further the spinner travelled, the longer the rope became.

And Twinette made ready accordingly and turning on her back, let herself fairly off. The glued ends held fast, the four strands twined closely together, and down went the family rope, with Twinette at the end, guiding it. Down into the middle of the church where there were carved oaken seats below, with carved oaken figures at the ends of each.

Twinette was about halfway down to the floor when she shut up the spinning machines, and stopped to rest and look round. Then, balancing herself at the end of her rope, with her legs crumpled up round her, she made her remarks:

"This is charming!" cried she. "One had need to travel and see the world. And all's so nice in the middle here. Nice empty space for the flies to fly about in; and a very pleasant time they must have of it. Dear me, how hungry I feel—I must go back and weave at once."

But just as she was preparing to roll up the rope and be off, a ray of sunshine streaming through one of the windows, struck in a direct line upon her suspended body, quite startling her with the dazzle of its brightness. Everything seemed in a blaze all round her, and she turned round and round in terror.

"Oh dear, oh dear, oh dear!" cried she, for she didn't know what to say and still couldn't help calling out. Then, making a great effort, she gave one hearty spring and, blinded though she was, shot up to the roof as fast as a spider could go, rolling the rope into a ball as she went. After which she stopped to complain.

But it is dull work complaining to one's self, so she soon ran back to her mother in the corner.

"Back again so soon, my dear?" asked the old lady, not overpleased at the fresh disturbance.

"Back again at all is the wonder," whimpered Twinette. "There's something down there, after all, besides empty space."

"Why, what did you see?" asked her mother.

"Nothing; that was just it," answered Twinette. "I could see nothing for dazzle and blaze; but I did see dazzle and blaze."

"Young people of the present day are very troublesome with their observations," remarked the mother; "however, if one rule will not do, here is another. Did the sunbeam shove you out of your place, my dear?"

Twinette said, "Certainly not—I came away of myself."

"Then how could there be anything there?" asked her mother. "Two things cannot be in one place at the same time. Just try to get into your own place, while you are there yourself, and see if you can."

Twinette did not try, because she knew she couldn't, but she sat very silent, wondering what the sunbeam could be if it was nothing at all! a puzzle which might have lasted her forever. Fortunately her mother interrupted her by advising her to go and get something to do. She really couldn't afford to feed her out of her web any longer, she said.

"If the sunbeam kills me, you'll be sorry, mother," said Twinette, in a pet.

"Nonsense about the sunshine," cried the old spider, now thoroughly roused. "I dare say it's only a little more light than usual. There's more or less light up here in the corners even, at times. You talk nonsense, my dear."

So Twinette scuttled off in silence, for she dared not ask what light was, though she wanted to know.

But she felt too cross to begin to spin. She preferred a search after truth to her dinner, which showed she was no commonplace spider. So she resolved to go down below in another place and see if she could find a really empty space; and accordingly again prepared the family rope. When she came down, it was about half a foot further east than before, and a very prosperous journey she made.

"All's safe so far," said she, her good humor returning. "I do believe I've found nothing at last. How jolly it is!" As she spoke she hung dangling at the end of her rope, back downwards, her legs tucked up round her as before, in perfect enjoyment, when suddenly the south door of the church was thrown open, and a strong gust set in. It was a windy evening, and the draught that poured into the church blew the family rope, with Twinette at the end of it, backwards and forwards through the air till she turned quite giddy.

"Oh, dear, oh, dear!" cried she puffing, "what shall I do? How could they say there was nothing here—oh, dear—but empty space for flies—oh, dear—to fly in?" But at last, in despair, she made an effort of resistance and, in the very teeth of the wind succeeded in coiling up the family rope, and so got back to the rafters.

It was a piece of rare good fortune for her that a lazy, half-alive fly happened to be creeping along just at the moment. As she landed from her air-dive she pounced on the stroller, killed him and sucked his juices before he knew where he was, as people say. Then throwing down his carcass, she scrambled back to her mother and told her what she thought, though not in plain words. For what she thought was that the old lady didn't know what she was saying when she talked about empty space with nothing in it.

"The sunbeam is nothing," cried she at last, "though it blinded me because it and I were in one place together, which couldn't be if it had been anything; and now this is nothing, though it blows me out of my place twenty times in a minute, because I can't see it. What's the use of rules one can't go by, mother? I don't believe you know a quarter of what's down below there."

The old spider's head turned as giddy with Twinette's arguments as Twinette's had done while swinging in the wind.

"I don't see what it can matter what's there," said her mother; "if there's room for flies to fly about in. I wish you'd go back and spin."

"That's another part of the question," remarked Twinette, in answer to the first half of her mother's sentence. In answer to the second she scuttled back to the rafter, intending to be obedient and spin. But she dawdled and thought, and thought and dawdled, till the day was nearly over.

"I will take one more turn down below," said she to herself at last, "and look round me again."

And so she did, but went further down than before; then stopped to rest as usual. Presently, as she hung dangling in the air by her line, she grew venturesome.

"I will sift the matter to the bottom," thought she. "I will see how far empty space goes." So saying she re-opened her spinning machines and started afresh.

It was a wonderful rope certainly, or it would not have gone on to such a length without breaking. In a few seconds Twinette was on the floor. But she didn't like the feel of it at all, so took to running as fast as she could go, and luckily met with a step of woodwork on one side. Up this she hurried at once, and crept into a corner close by, where she stopped to take breath.

"One doesn't know what to expect in such queer outlandish places," observed she; "when I've rested I'll go back, but I must wait till I can see a little better."

Seeing a little better was out of the question, however, for night was coming on, and when, weary of waiting, she stepped out of her hiding-place to look around, the whole church was in darkness.

Now it is one thing to be snug in bed when it is dark, and another to be a long way from home and have lost your way, and not know what may happen to you next minute. Twinette had often been in the dark corner with her mother, and thought nothing of it. Now she shook all over with fright, and wondered what dreadful thing darkness could be. Then she thought of her mother's rules, and felt quite angry.

"I can't see anything, anything, and I don't feel anything," murmured she, "and yet here's something that frightens me out my wits."

At last her very fright made her bold. She felt about for the family rope; it was there safe and sound, and she made a spring. Roll went the rope, and up went its owner; higher, higher, higher, through the dark night air; seeing nothing, hearing nothing, feeling nothing but the desperate fear within. By the time she touched the rafter, she was half-exhausted; and as soon as she was safely landed upon it, she fell asleep.

It must have been late next morning when she woke, for the sound of the organ music was pealing through the church, and the air vibrations swept pleasantly over her frame; rising and falling like gusts of night, swelling and sinking like waves of the sea, gathering and disappearing like vapors of the sky.

She went down by the family rope to observe, but nothing was to be seen to account for her sensations. Fresh ones, however, stole round her, as she hung suspended, for it was a church festival, and beautiful flowers were grouped round the altar and pillars, and filled the air with fragrance. Still, nothing disturbed her from her place. Sunshine streamed in through the windows—she even felt it warm on her body—but it interfered with nothing else; and meanwhile, in such way as spiders hear, she heard music and prayer; whether as music and prayer come to us, or as deaf men enjoy sound by touch, let those say who can! A door opened, and a breeze caught her rope; but still she held fast. So music and prayer and sunshine and breeze and sweet perfume were all there together; and Twinette was among them, and saw flies flying about overhead.

This was enough; she went back to the rafter, chose a home, and began to spin. Before evening, her web was completed, and her first prey caught and feasted on. Then she cleared the remains out of her chamber, and sat down to think; for Twinette was now a philosopher. It came to her while she was spinning her web. As she crossed and twisted the threads, her ideas grew clearer and clearer, or she fancied so, which did almost as well. Each line she fastened brought its own reflection; and this was the way they went on:

"Two or three things can easily be in one place at the very same time—" she fixed that idea in her mind very tight as she fastened a thread of her web. "Sunshine and wind and perfume and sound don't drive each other out of their places"—she said to herself. "Light and darkness, and sunshine and wind, and sound and sensation, and fright and pleasure, don't keep away flies"—the little interlacing threads of her tiny web now looked quite pretty as she placed them. "How many things I know of that I don't know much about"—the web got thicker every minute. "And perhaps there may be ever so many more beyond—ever so many more—ever so many—beyond." Those were her very last words. She kept repeating them till she finished her web; and when she sat up in state, after supper, to think, she began to repeat them again; for she could think of nothing better or wiser to say. But this was no wonder, for all her thoughts put together made nothing but a cobweb, after all!

And when the sexton's broom swept it, with others, from the roof, Twinette was no longer in the little chamber below. She had died and bequeathed her cobweb-wisdom to another generation. But, as it was only cobweb-wisdom, spiders remain spiders still, and still weave their webs in the roofs of churches without fathoming the mystery of unseen presences below.

BY

Hon. HENRY B. RUSSELL
The Distinguished Historian

Hon. REDFIELD PROCTOR
United States Senator from Vermont and ex-Secretary of War

Hon. JOHN M. THURSTON
United States Senator from Nebraska

THIS magnificently-illustrated, richly-filled, and scholarly volume gives a complete and authentic history of the Spanish-American War from its beginning to its close. Its authors are three world-famous men, Hon. Henry B. Russell, the distinguished historian, Hon. Redfield Proctor, Senator from Vermont and ex-Secretary of War, and Hon. John M. Thurston, the brilliant Senator from Nebraska, men who have made their mark in literature and public affairs.

This great historical work covers the entire period of the war. The subject naturally divides itself into two parts: I. How we got into the war with Spain; and II. How we got out of it and with what results. This volume tells the whole story, makes clear all the causes of action that led up to and culminated in the conflict, gives pen pictures of the men who have figured in it, and relates the exciting incidents, the sad tales, the brave deeds, and the thrilling adventures, of which there were so many. The mutterings of the distant war cloud, the indignation and uprising of the whole people, North and South, when the veterans of the Blue and the veterans of the Gray took their places side by side behind the same flag, the departure of fleets of powerful modern warships, the march of hostile armies, the strife and carnage of battle on land and sea, the deeds of valor and heroic sufferings of our gallant soldiers and sailors in field and hospital, all are portrayed with consummate skill.

Every event is placed in chronological order and the fullest and most authoritative statistics are given. As might be expected from the high positions filled by its distinguished authors, the War and Navy departments and other branches of the Government extended every possible aid to make this volume not only a standard and official history of the war, but the most complete, well-rounded, and elaborate record of the struggle that will probably ever be written. No three living American writers could more fitly assume this responsible task or produce a more honest, truthful, and impartial book They are equipped by education, training, and experience to do it. Their entire familiarity with the political history of the country, their exhaustless fund of statistical information, their independence and fearlessness, all guarantee that this work is one of more than than ordinary value. It presents a deeper, broader, more exhaustive exhibit of the long train of causes which culminated in the conflict than can be found in any other work.

Never before has there been published a book so rich in historical information, so instructive in its method of presentation, and so brilliant and fascinating in narrative. Competent critics have declared that it ranks with the very best specimens of English literature. ☞It is the only book that rises to the dignity of a real history of the Spanish-American conflict.

This great work is printed on fine paper and is issued in one splendid large octavo volume of 780 pages. Its many magnificent illustrations include superb steel-plate portraits of President McKinley (from a photograph approved by himself), Generals Miles, Shafter, and Merritt, Admirals Dewey, Sampson, Schley, etc. (It is worthy of note that these are the only steel-plate portraits of these famous men ever published.) It contains magnificently colored and elaborate maps, each 14 x 21 inches, showing in great detail Cuba, the Philippines, Porto Rico, the Hawaiian Islands, etc., besides a large number of maps and diagrams inserted in the text to illustrate battles, campaigns, naval operations, etc. There are also many magnificent full-page illustrations, including battle scenes, thrilling incidents, striking events, etc. In the preparation of these illustrations no expense or pains have been spared. In no other history of the war can anything even approaching them be found All in all, it is one of the great historical works of the century, and one of the most attractive volumes ever issued from the American press.

☞Presidents of Colleges, Famous Preachers, Prominent Educators, Politicians, Editors, and the best known public men of the day have ordered this work for their libraries and homes. It is the greatest selling book published in twenty-five years.

Our Liberal Terms and Great Inducements to Agents.

Important.—This high-class book is sold through agents only. We want 5,000 first-class men and women agents everywhere,—ministers, teachers, students, ladies, farmers, and others. Hundreds of book agents now at work can testify to its unequalled merits as the fastest-selling and the best-paying book they ever sold. ☞They are making money. NOW NOTE:—There are worthy men and women in every community who desire profitable and respectable work requiring no capital and unattended by risk. We address this class. We want one agent in every City, Town, Village, and Country District in the United States and Canada, and we offer you work that will pay splendidly. Take hold with us and you will thank us (as hundreds have already done) for the money this agency will surely bring. No capital is required, except a nominal sum for an Outfit, as follows:

AGENTS' OUTFIT.—This consists of a most beautifully bound Canvassing book of 200 pages, showing all the various bindings, containing all of the fine steel plates and beautiful full-page illustrations, all of the extremely valuable Maps, etc With it we send very full instructions telling each agent, and especially new ones, just what to do and how to do it to win success

The cost to us of these very effective Outfits and the postage is nearly $2.00 each, but we will send one to any reader of "COMFORT" on receipt of only One Dollar, and this sum may be deducted from your remittance for your first order for Twenty copies. We require this trifling deposit for the Outfit as a guarantee of good faith on your part, and to protect ourselves from trifflers and curiosity seekers. You will receive by return mail a letter from us and this very beautiful and complete Outfit with very full instructions, a detailed statement of the liberal terms we offer to our workers, and an authorized agency for a book that has already returned to our agents over $50,000 in cash profits in the past few weeks, and its sale has only just begun. We will tell you the secret of the success of these agents, and how you, too, by our system, and with this great book and with our help, can earn $100.00 a month and more. ☞If you prefer to know what our terms to agents are before sending for the Outfit, write to us at once and we will send detailed information by return mail. But you will be perfectly satisfied with our terms, for they are the most liberal we have ever given. We only suggest that you send One Dollar for the Outfit at once in order to save time, get to work at once, and enable you to make the most of the best time of the whole year for agents. ☞Send for this Outfit now, and canvass your own vicinity and you will be surprised and delighted at your success.

How to Remit for the Outfit. Send a Post-Office Money Order or an Express Money Order, or a Bank Draft for One Dollar; but if none of these are available inclose a bank bill in a Registered Letter. All Postmasters are obliged by law to register letters when requested to do so. If there is any good reason why you cannot remit in either of these ways, then we will accept postage stamps.

WHAT OUR AGENTS SAY.

We can fill this entire paper ten times over with letters from agents thanking us for the money they have made with this fast-selling book.

One of our old Agents in California, a Clergyman, writes:—"I am happy to inform you that both boxes arrived safely, and the books are beautiful. You have shipped to me over 1,200 books since I began working for you, and I wish to say that our business relations have invariably been so very pleasant that I always find pleasure in thinking of myself as your agent, and try to make myself worthy of the house."

One of our Agents on the Pacific Coast says: "I have 148 orders in my canvassing book, with a strong prospect of bringing the list up to 200. It is the fastest selling book I ever tried, and I have tried lots of them."

An Agent in New York writes: "I have canvassed just a little around where I live, having made only 35 calls in the neighborhood, and I secured 29 BONA FIDE subscribers, netting me over $35.00 profit last week, besides attending to my other work."

An Agent in Illinois writes: "I only canvassed a week, and have taken orders as follows: 14 copies in morocco binding, 34 copies in extra cloth, and 2 copies in plain cloth, making 50 copies, netting me a profit of about $75.00."

A Lady in Iowa writes "I would rather sell this book than any book I ever handled I have 203 orders in my canvassing book now. My profits thus far exceed $360.00."

One of our Agents in New York recently re-canvassed a township that had been run over by another agent for a worthless "History of the War." He writes: "I sent you a draft a few days ago for $382.30. Since then I have been working in the country and have taken 56 more orders in three days. I find that the agent who preceded me with that poor, miserable book has been all over the town, but did not sell twenty copies."

One of our Agents in Iowa writes:—"I would rather sell Russell's 'History of Our War with Spain' than any book I ever handled, and I have sold many different books. I have 183 copies to deliver next month." Two agents selling "war books" came into town, but when I showed them mine they were so delighted with it and so discouraged with their own, that both have written you for an agency.

An Agent in Texas writes:—"I have had good success in delivering my books. They give perfect satisfaction to everyone and my subscribers are delighted. I never liked anything that was work so well. I cleared $138 on last delivery."

An Agent in Kansas took 100 orders the first week he canvassed, and 274 orders the first four weeks, working an average of 4½ days each week. (His profits amounted to over $250.)

One of our Agents in the State of Washington writes: "The book takes beyond all my expectations. Some seem eager to subscribe. I shall work as fast as my strength permits and shall canvass thoroughly." (This agent sold over 200 copies in a very short time.)

From one of our old Agents.—"I have had a very good week. One of our first business men told me that I have more orders already than were obtained by five different agents who recently canvassed the place for as many different books."

From another new Agent.—"This week's work shows 33 names. I have kept ahead of all other agents, and the grass has not grown under my feet. For two days I took an order from everyone I approached." [This agent never canvassed before. He has sold over 300 copies, and has made more money than he ever earned in the schoolroom as a high-grade teacher.]

One of our Agents in Kansas writes:—"I have secured 25 orders from the first thirty persons I called upon. I have handled many books in the last twenty-five years, but I believe I never saw a book before which literally comes as near selling itself as this one does. If I do not order a couple of hundred in a few weeks, I ought to be turned off." (This agent took 95 orders in the first two weeks, working only four days in each week and he cleared over $160.00. He says he will double that in the next two weeks.)

One of our Agents in Georgia writes:—"Enclosed find my first weekly report. I have taken 49 orders in three days, and have only begun work. The fine illustrations captivate all. The evident value and beauty of the book make it easy to sell." (This agent had sold up to the time this paper went to press 175 copies.)

From a New Agent.—"I was out on the 13th and 14th, and obtained 19 orders in 24 calls, and the outlook is good for a rich harvest in this section of the country, in spite of the hard times. I have lived in this town for twenty years. I want more territory, for I know this book is going to have a large sale, and I propose to devote most of my time to it. I have never canvassed before."

An Agent in Indiana writes:—"I have used my best efforts this week, and have succeeded in getting eighty-seven subscribers. I have, all told, one hundred and sixty-four bona fide orders. My profits thus far amount to over $200.00."

☞And thousands of other letters from successful and delighted workers.

We are publishers of thirty-five years' standing, and we represent the best authors in this country. We have never published a book that pays agents so well. ☞This is our agents' harvest time. It is really the chance of a lifetime. Those who need profitable work who neglect this opportunity do not deserve to succeed in life, and it is safe to say they never will succeed. ☞Industrious people have never been offered an opportunity to make money so easily and rapidly. ☞Considering its size, its great authorship, magnificent illustrations, valuable maps, elegant binding, etc., it is the cheapest book ever sold by agents, and this fact enables them to make sales where all other books fail. ☞It is the king of all subscription books.

☞Any intelligent man or woman, willing to work, can earn from $75 to $100 a month, and more, with this grand book. We will send circulars free containing our terms to agents, and very full information on every point. Better than anything else, send One Dollar for an Outfit and let us start you at once in an honorable and pleasant business that will pay you well if you will only work.

And now, dear reader, will you not make one of our agents? Do you wish to make money speedily and honorably? You can do it if you will. We offer you the opportunity. Locality has nothing whatever to do with success, for all territory is fruitful for this book, and small places pay better than large ones. ☞DISTANCE IS NO HINDRANCE, for ☞WE PAY FREIGHT CHARGES, and if necessary WE WILL GIVE CREDIT. Some of our very best agents are on the Pacific Coast, and in foreign countries, and we take good care of them. Experience is not essential, for WE WILL TEACH YOU. Do you want work? We offer it to you. Are you looking for something to do? Here is steady employment. Do you want to Earn Money? Here is your opportunity, and a better one cannot be found.

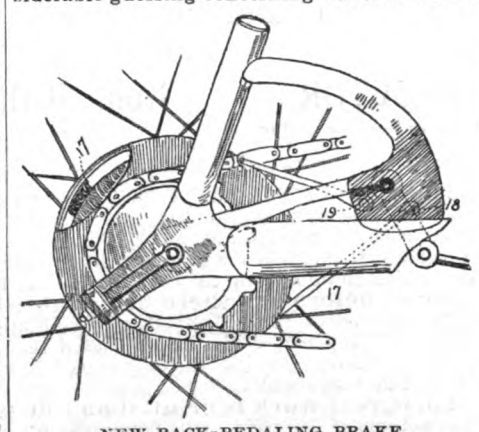
☞We are the sole and exclusive publishers of this, the most handsomely illustrated, the greatest selling, and the best paying book of the century. We have no General Agents, no branch offices, no middlemen. If we had we could not give to our agents the liberal terms we offer, nor sell our books at such low prices. ☞More than 3,000 agents are now canvassing for this book, and they are delighted with their success. Some of them are making more money than they ever did in all their life before. Why not you?

CONDUCTED BY EVERETT G. WHEELMAN.



NEW inventions for the bicycle multiply with every wind that blows. The Patent Office at Washington sees a constant stream of them coming in; some odd, some worthless, some excellent and all interesting to a wheelman.

One of the recent ones that seems really of practical benefit is a back pedaling brake. The new brake is the result of a year and a half's study and work on the part of two Minnesota boys and will probably be on the market another year for general sale. The brake is attached to the hub of the rear wheel of the bicycle and is applied by a slight back pressure of one of the pedals. In coasting, the cranks assume a horizontal position, and should the wheel go too fast a slight back pressure of one of the pedals applies the brake and stops or checks the speed. The brake is released by a pressure on the other pedal. The device is compact, so much so that it would not be noticed on a passing bicycle. In connection with the accompanying cut the following is taken from the description in the patent. The brake mechanism comprises means whereby, upon applying a slight back pressure to the pedal, the wheel may be placed under the complete control of the rider, allowing him to bring the wheel to a full stop, or, in coasting, to regulate its speed. These means consist of a bell crank lever, pivoted upon a stud-bolt by a nut in a horizontal slot formed in a brace, brazed or otherwise secured to the lower end of one of the back stays and the rear end of one of the back forks of the frame of the machine.

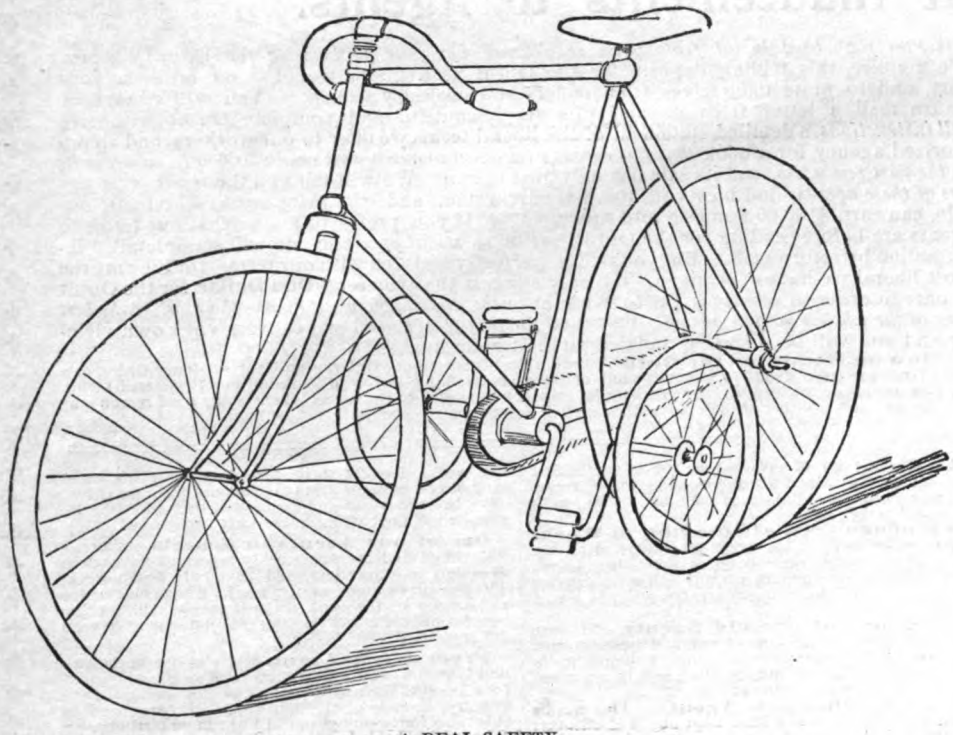


Figure seventeen denotes a brake band which encompasses the brake wheel and has one of its ends attached to 18, a stud on the bell crank lever, and the other end secured to a stud, 19, on said bell crank lever, so that when said lever is rocked or actuated the band will be drawn tightly about the brake wheel and thereby check or completely stop the motion of said wheel. This band is preferably formed of spring steel, so that when pressure is removed from the bell crank lever the band will spring from frictional contact with the brake wheel. It is one of the lightest and neatest and most powerful brakes invented. It is hardly noticeable on a wheel. The pedal stop is not visible. Brakes on the tires have been discarded by most riders, as there is too much injury to the tires, and too severe a strain on the forks of the forward wheel. Besides, they are apt to cause accidents to the rider instead of preventing them. With pedal rest and brake the rider does not remove his feet from the pedals to coast, and has a brake that will stop in one-half of the distance that he can by back-pedaling without any exertion whatever. Then with the pedal stop and brake combined it is all worked by the feet without removing them from the pedal. The hands are not used in any way in applying the brake, nor is the position of the body changed in anyway. The pedal rest works automatically; the pedals stop all movement when the rider is not working the feet. This will not affect the running of the wheel until the brake is applied, or it stops of its own accord. If when descending a hill he stops the feet in any position desired the wheel will glide along the same as though he removed his feet from the pedals for coasting. If he wishes to apply the brake he has the right pedal back on a horizontal line with the left in front, or can have them the reverse. By bearing down on the back pedal he applies the brake, which works very gradually, if so desired. The more he bears down the tighter it will brake. The device is powerful and the rider can put his weight on the pedal braking the wheel, if so desired. This will lock the wheel almost solid and cause the bicycle to stop on any hill without any danger of lifting the rider over the handlebars. To relieve the brake he simply bears down on the forward pedal; then he can still coast or pedal the wheel. The pedal stop makes coasting safe. It takes only a very modest amount of weight to apply the brake, from five to twenty-five pounds of pressure will brake it on any hill.

The bicycle that will not upset has long been the dream of bicycle inventors and wheelmen. The so-called "safety" is not really safe at all, at least until its capricious tendencies have been mastered according to the known laws of physics. The name "safety" was given to it to differentiate it from the high wheel of years ago, the high wheel having no elements of safety but many of danger. When the foreign wheel makers hit upon the idea of the modern wheel it was so much safer than the old model that its name seemed natural enough. The one illustrated is a new model and is a "real safety"—one on which it is impossible to "get a spill."

During the past season there has been considerable guessing concerning whether wheeling is truly increasing or has entered upon a decline. It has been a wholly natural speculation. The story from the trade, well confirmed, is that there have been more bicycles sold this year than ever before during a twelvemonth, and this on its face means that more wheels are being ridden. On the other hand, many roads which have for years been most popular and which on every fair day have been a cycling promenade have shown smaller crowds than ever before, and therefore, many have come to the conclusion that bicycle riding is dying out. The impression has become deeply seated in the minds of riders and some other observers, especially those inclined to be pessimistic. To them nothing would fully explain the unusual circumstances. The rains of spring and the protracted heat of midsummer might be considered sufficient to explain the slackness of wheeling traffic at this time of the year.

NEW BACK-PEDALING BRAKE.

A REAL SAFETY.

The real truth, however, is that there are more winter riders now than ever, more who go out on wet days, windy days and hot days than ever, but less proportionately to the total number who ride. There is no doubt, too, that it is the spreading of good roads that has caused the change. This is something that has come upon the community so gradually that it has been but little recognized. As an explanation of the facts of cycling, it can be pertinently presented in paradoxical fashion, by saying that the apparent decrease in the sport is due to its actual growth. There are more riders than ever, but they are not so much in evidence. Bicycle riding has been disseminated and is outspread instead of concentrated. Formerly wheelmen had only a few local roads on which to find good riding. Gradually the good districts have been increasing, and now they are beginning to exist everywhere.

Riders a few years ago kept their wheels for home use, the asphalted boulevards and macadam roads and cycle paths. Now when they leave town for the summer, or for a week or two, they take their wheels with them, because the improved highways make it worth while. In bygone years they kept together in companies of club parties. The ways to-day are so manifold that no one needs a guide. Any habitual rider with a large circle of acquaintances is pretty sure to meet acquaintances on the road. If he does not he will find amiable hotel keepers, who in other years refused shelter to cyclists and set dogs on them, but who now have maps and guidebooks and cycling literature in the parlors.

According to a Strasburg Justice, a bicycle suit is not a fit thing in which to go to court. A rider who was summoned recently for violating an ordinance went to court dressed in his bicycle costume. He pleaded guilty to the charge and paid the fine. The judge then imposed an extra five marks "for appearing before the court unbecomingly dressed."

Cheap and poor bicycles are now being manufactured in Japan and are having some sale, but American and English machines are generally used. French machines are used there, but are so heavy that American wheels will entirely supersede them. The use of bicycles in China is somewhat peculiar. Only the upper or richer classes ride, the poor people of China hardly having sufficient means to keep body and soul together. Their use is certainly increasing, though at present there are very few in the country. That would be an excellent country for a young man to go to and establish a bicycle factory.

JUST LIKE RAIN.

Every person who cultivates plants should have one of these Bent Neck Sprinklers for sprinkling plants or flowers in house or garden. Also useful to sprinkle clothes for ironing, spraying clothing or carpets to prevent moths, and to disinfect sickrooms, etc. Much better than dipper or watering pot for every purpose. For plants, destroys red spiders, knits, caterpillars, etc. Sprinkles plants and flowers very quickly without injuring or soaking the earth and soiling everything else near. Constructed so simply of a rubber bulb and hard rubber spray that it cannot get out of order, and will last almost a lifetime. Acts exactly like nature and is the only true substitute for rain in plant life.
AN OFFER TO YOU. To induce you to take a six months' trial of our great Home Story Paper, we will send you one of these large size Sprinklers and the paper on trial six months, all charges prepaid, for only 63 cents. Don't neglect this. Address

YOU MAY BE NEXT

One person out of every four has a weak or diseased heart, and still very few people are aware of it. The trouble is that most doctors don't understand heart troubles. They very often treat patients for disorders of the Stomach, Lungs, Kidneys and Nerves, when the trouble is in the heart itself.

You can tell whether your heart is affected better than a physician. The signs and symptoms are sure and certain. If you have any one of the following symptoms, you are in grave danger, and may be the next victim to drop dead.

Symptoms of* HEART DISEASE

Fluttering, Palpitation, or Skipping Beats (always due to weak or diseased heart); Shortness of Breath from going up stairs, walking, etc.; Tenderness, Numbness or Pain in left side, arm or under shoulder blade; Fainting Spells, Dizziness, Hungry or Weak Spells; Spots Before the Eyes; Sudden Starting in Sleep; Dreaming, Nightmare; Choking Sensation in Throat; Oppressed Feeling in Chest; Cold Hands and Feet; Painful to Lie on Left Side; Dropsy; Swelling of the Feet or Ankles (one of the surest signs); Neuralgia Around the Heart; Sudden deaths rarely result from other causes.

MEDICINE SENT FREE. I have a positive cure in my Heart Tablets for this most dreaded of all diseases. I am daily curing hundreds of men and women. To show my confidence in my Heart Tablets, I will send, postpaid, a box for trial absolutely free to any sufferers who will send their name and address. This liberal offer should be accepted at once, because heart disease is always fatal, and death comes like a flash of lightning. Enclose stamp for postage. Address, DR. Widows Who Married Famous Men.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

It is not generally known that several of the greatest captains of humanity have chosen widows for wives. Whether it was that they considered these much maligned ladies as being better housekeepers than mere inexperienced girls, or that they had to succumb to fascinations all the more seductive in proportion to their mellow maturity is one of those problems the solution of which is outside the range of the present paper. Sufficient to say that most of these captains were on the best of terms with their wives—even though these women had been previously widows.

Among the illustrious men who became the husbands of fair relicts may be mentioned two presidents of the United States, several kings, one First Consul (afterward Emperor), the founders of two religious communities, the adherents of each of which may be counted by the hundred million, and a host of literateurs, scientists and philosophers. Washington, the Father of his country, became the husband of Mrs. Custis, the widow of a southern gentleman who died leaving his wife encumbered with several children. George Washington was as fond a father of these tots as Bonaparte was of Josephine's son and daughter, the fruit of a former union of that lady. Like Napoleon's, Washington's marriage was barren. Unlike the "little corporal," however, the President of the United States did not repudiate his wife because she bore him no issue. Mrs. Washington was the soul of good nature, and in thorough touch with her husband till death called him from her side.

Andrew Jackson, another of our presidents, became enamored of a buxom and beautiful widow named Mrs. Robard whose former husband was of French extraction; and after some difficulty, which only made him all the bolder in his wooing, he won her lily white hand, and never had any reason afterwards to regret his marriage, for the lady loved her grizzly warrior as dearly as Desdemona did the dusky Othello.

The first and last of Henry VIII. of England's wives were widows, Catherine of Arragon the relict of his elder brother, and Mrs. Parr whose first husband was a respectable British bourgeois. George IV., while still the Prince of Wales, contracted a secret union, solemnized by a Roman Catholic clergyman, with Mrs. Fitzherbert, the charming young widow of Mr. Thomas Fitzherbert, a Catholic country squire. Mrs. Fitzherbert was known as the "sweet lass of Richmond Hill" where she resided. Her widow's cap and weeds enhanced so much the charms of her pretty face, and the symmetry of her dainty figure, that poets addressed sonnets to her in those days and gallants gay knelt at her feet. The Prince, however, was the lucky individul who bore off the prize. He soon tired of her however, and taking advantage of the fact that the union was annuled by the Royal marriage act which refused to acknowledge the legitimacy of marriages contracted by members of the Royal family without the consent of the reigning sovereign, he publicly espoused a German princess, the unfortunate Charlotte.

Bonaparte's first wife was a widow. Her maiden name was Josephine Tascker de la Pagerie. She was born in 1761, and at the age of sixteen became the wife of the Viscount de Beauharnais, who it may be interesting to note, fought side by side with Lafayette in the war of American independence. Beauharnais was guilotined by the Revolutionists of Paris in 1794, leaving his wife a widow at 33. A short time afterward her beauty and lonely condition attracted to her the admiration and pity of General Bonaparte, and as pity is akin to love, the great warrior eventually proposed for her hand and was accepted. It is doubtful, however, if she loved him. He seems to have magnetized her into submission to his will. Writing to a lady friend before her marriage, the Viscountess observes: "You have met the general in my house. Well, he it is who would supply a father's place to the orphans of the Viscount, and a husband's to his widow. 'Do you love him?' you might ask. Well, not exactly; yet he dazzles me, and I know I will have to surrender him my heart. Moreover all my friends are urging me to marry him." The union was very happy throughout its opening year; but Napoleon, anxious for an heir, treated Josephine with the utmost cruelty by procuring a divorce from her, and marrying the daughter of the Emperor of Austria. Lucien Bonaparte, Napoleon's brother, married the widow of Jacques Jouberthon, a wealthy French trader who died in the West Indies. Napoleon was so deeply incensed at this mesalliance that he refused to confer the title of Prince on his offending brother, and he and his family were excluded from all rights to the succession of the crown. The French Emperor's sister, Pauline, married Gen. Leclerc, and accompanied him to San Domingo, where he succumbed to the yellow fever after only a few months of matrimonial bliss. His afflicted widow—she was scarcely twenty-two years old at the time—had his embalmed body covered with her jewelry deposited in a coffin, and returned with the precious casket on board a French vessel to France where Leclerc's remains minus the ornaments were buried. Alas for the constancy of a widow's love! Ten months had barely elapsed since the death of the "dear defunct" than, arrayed in these very jewels that were once strewn on Leclerc's corpse, she stood at the foot of the altar pledging her heart and hand in marriage to an Italian nobleman, Prince Borghese, a millionaire, worth $250,000 income a year. The Princess a few years afterward developed into the most handsome woman in Europe. Her second marriage, despite its splendor, was a failure, and the pair soon separated.

Widows captured the hearts of the messiahs of Mahomedanism and Methodism. Mahomet was an impecunious young man when he entered the employment of Madame Khadijah, who was a wealthy widow, and in business for herself. Mahomet was appointed her traveling agent in which capacity he had to attend to the transportation of her merchandise from Mecca, where she lived, to Pyria. Khadijah fell devotedly in love with Mahomet, though she was "fat, fair and forty," and he was only twenty-five years of age. Seeing the widow's infatuation for him, and wishing to please the lady in every way possible, he asked for her hand, and she willingly consented to give it to him. Their marriage was a most happy one. He now had wealth as well as a devoted wife who had yielded to him cheerfully the entire management of her business affairs. This union raised Mahomet very high in social circles in Mecca, and enabled him to start the religious movement which afterwards assumed such remarkable proportions, and which numbers to-day in its communion several hundred million souls. His wife, it may be interesting to note, was the first of all his nation who believed in Mahomet as the Prophet of Allah. Her death, which occurred when he had just inaugurated his crusade was a sore affliction to the prophet; but he was somewhat compensated by the fact that the vast wealth, which he now possessed, enabled him to succeed in the mission which he had undertaken. Perhaps, if the Widow Khadijah did not happen to have taken a fancy to Mahomet, Mahomedanism might never have been heard of. A woman's amatory whims have often revolutionized the world. John Wesley in an unfortunate moment married the widow of a London merchant, named Vaseille. Mrs. Vaseille, was, it seems, as mild as a sucking dove while Wesley was her suitor; but when she became the wife of that eminent divine, she displayed her shrewish propensities, took no interest in his religious mission, and annoyed and exasperated the good man so much by her purse-proud vulgarity that he had to separate from her.

Only one post is on record as having married a widow. Poets are too gushingly fond of innocent maidens to have any sentimentalities left to shower on the love of dead men's wives. Addison, who was an essayist as well as a bard, and who reached the zenith of his fame in the beginning of the last century, was anxious to connect himself with the English aristocracy. With this object he wooed and won Dowager Countess of Warwick, widow of Edward Rich, Earl of Holland and Warwick. Dr. Johnson said of Addison's marriage: "It is very much like the espousal of the daughter of a Sultan, who addresses the young lady as follows during the ceremony: "Daughter, I give thee this man for thy slave." Though the poet through his union with the countess became the occupant of Holland House, that famous haunt of literary and political wits, he lived under petticoat rule; the proud countess, who had abandoned her title to become plain Mrs. Addison, regretted when it was too late her marriage with one who, though he was Secretary of State under George I. was nevertheless her social inferior. She had her revenge however, and led him many a sad dance in the gorgeous salons of Holland House. Addison must have had his unruly spouse in his mind's eye, when he wrote these lines, in his Opera of Rosamond:

"I glow, I burn, I freeze, I shiver,— Whence rises this convulsive strife?
I smell a shrew—
My fears are true—
I see my wife!"

Dr. Johnson fared better at the hands of the widow whom he made his wife, although, like Mahomet, he was some fifteen years her junior. The doctor met his lady love during his salad days in Birmingham. He was the very reverse of an Adonis or a Don Juan in personal appearance. He had unpolished manners, long straggling unkempt locks, a scrofulous face and seedy clothes. Yet Mrs. Elizabeth Porter, the widow of a shopkeeper, a corpulent dame provided with a grown up family, married this young man who was at the time a mere literary hack. The union of this pair was one continued honeymoon. Johnson was accustomed to call her his "Tilly" and she in return gave him the pet name of "Sam." The doctor used to make himself very ridiculous sometimes among his friends of referring to his wife as "that pretty creature." The fact was that she was almost as ugly as himself, but love is blind. Her death, which occurred some ten years after the marriage, was a great shock to her husband. A decade or so afterwards, however, he entertained a deep but platonic affection for another widow, Mrs. Throle, till that middle-aged relict eloped with a young Italian tenor.

Several English statesmen of our own day have not disdained to become the husbands of consolable widows. Two of them, Disraeli and Salisbury comforted the fair relicts of deceased colleagues by stepping into the shoes of their dear departed. Disraeli in his early career was a colleague for the same constituency in the British Parliament of a wealthy Tory Squire, Mr. Wyndham Lewis. On Lewis's death he paid his addresses to the widow whom he persuaded to marry him. He was a much more brilliant man than Lewis, and eventually became prime minister of England and Earl of Beaconsfield. He owed much of his success in life to the wise counsels as well as to the wealth of his wife. Lord Salisbury married the widow of his colleague, Lord Derby, and at the same time took the place vacated by that deceased nobleman in the British cabinet. In this way Derby's death was a double boon to the Tory leader. The widow of the good-for-nothing Duke of Manchester—I refer to the dowager Duchess—gave her hand at fifty to that old bachelor the Duke of Devonshire, formerly the Marquis of Hastington. They had, it seems, been lovers thirty years ago, but a lover's quarrel induced the lady to marry the Duke of Manchester. She bitterly repented of her hasty conduct afterwards; but when she was left a widow she was glad to become the wife of her old flame, and so all was well that ended well.

Mrs. Patterson, the widow of an obscure Oxford professor, gave her hand to Sir Charles Dilke at a time when his name was scandalously compromised in the London Divorce Court.

Such are a few of the interesting widows who have enmeshed geniuses and potentates in their dainty toils, and thus associated themselves intimately with the sealing spirits of many ages. To the credit of these fair ladies be it said that on the whole they managed these petted darlings of fame much better than any boarding-school maidens could have done.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

THE Fall and Winter season of '98-'99 is heralded by an unusual change in modes, bringing consternation to more than one woman who has trusted to renovating last season's garments. One of the first things noticed are the coats with rounded basques, falling much deeper at the back than in front. It is rather a risk at present to declare positively as to whether long or short coats will take first place in popular favor, but it is altogether likely that an extravagant license will be granted in this case, from the number of both styles of garments being made. To the tall woman, the long-tailed coat cannot fail to prove attractive, whereas to her of five feet nothing such garbing would merely result in a tragedy, and consequently Fashion, unusually kind and considerate, will, I am sure, give forth the decree that smartness will be stamped on the coat of curtailed character. No half-measures, however, will be permitted us; we either must wear a coat decidedly long or one decidedly short. There are obvious signs of the return of the newmarket, to each and all of which the added basque terminating invariably either side of the back, cut in one piece from top to edge, is a pronounced feature.

All shades of violet, heliotrope and all the soft, pinkish shades inclining toward that delicious mauve, are the pets of the hour. A smart costume is built of pink cloth, a rose color, very much faded and subdued, lending itself admirably to its decoration of brown fur. There is a skirt panel and vest of white, elaborately braided over in black and gold, and edged everywhere with a narrow band of Russian sable. There is a mulberry tint which promises to be very much in vogue; indeed, I may say that reds, too, have practically taken the lead next to mauve.

For those who can afford the cost, strapping and braiding in most elaborate patterns are being pressed into service. A feature of the strapping being the piping of white on both edges, or the outlining cord of gold braid. Long, slender effects are the acme of good style, a smart model of such a rig showing a costume in brilliant mulberry red broadcloth, with pipings of black satin edging the straps. The tight fitting skirt has a kilted flounce much deeper at the back than at the front, giving a wide fan effect at the foot, which effect is necessary to the well-being of all up-to-date skirts. The long coat is single-breasted, and half tight-fitting, the slender look intensified by the strapped seams in the back, and those laid on the front, forming pockets at the bottom. The rather broad coat collar has a facing of black velvet.

The new capes are the quaintest things imaginable, dropping low at the back and sloping upward to nothingness at the neck in front. Bias frills are their decoration, most frequently of their own material, while one and all are elaborately strapped, fur trimmed or braided. In the sketch shown the material is black velvet, the bias flounce set on by a tiny scallop of jet. Across the shoulders is a ruching of black taffeta ending in big rosettes, with fluted ends. The standing collar has a decoration of rosettes at the back.

The favorite hat is of course flaring from the face, sometimes trimmed with a couple of long, drooping plumes, arranged in a flat fashion, and sometimes decorated with tufts of lace and handsome jeweled ornaments.

Is it the outcome of the sash, or the mutability of the modistic mind that leads to the increasing demand for skirts with visible fullness at the back? Be it as it may, the demand is there, and to gratify it comes the skirt with two double box-pleats. For the right and proper hang of a box-pleat, it is essential that the center be on the straight of the material, which entails a bias seam either side of the back and consequently rather more material is required than for the skirts of latter days. However, they are modish and new, and will be very popular during the winter.

Now that Dame Fashion has set her seal of approval on dressing the hair low in the nape of the neck, she should provide some way of fastening the hat on securely since there is no place to safely insert the regular hat pin, and no sane woman would resort to the unsightly elastic. It will be all right when we are wearing toques and capotes especially modeled to meet the coiffure exigency, but as things go at present, there is mostly a vacuum between the brim of the hat and this low dressing, and it is a mystery at present hidden away in the recess of each individual heart, or I should say head, as to where and how the hat-pins find a hold.

Although it has been rumored for some time now that veils are to terminate just below the nose, I have scarcely met any one yet bold enough to personally advocate this departure.

But there is certainly a decided inclination to do away with extravagant drapery beneath the chin, and this is to be regretted when for it is substituted that hideous little twisted knot so many girls resort to to keep their veils in position beneath the chin. Although a draw-thread answers all purposes, there is apparently a rooted objection to this mode. An ingenious device resorted to by a harassed friend is to pin the folds together with a tiny jeweled pin, which is unfastened when the veil has need to be raised. This appealed to me as a wrinkle worth repeating.

Always dampen tailor's canvas before using. Join all skirt seams at the top and work downward. Always cut the skirt of a dress first; odd pieces are quite as well for the bodice.

Put an interlining of tailor's canvas down the fronts of dresses in which buttonholes are to be made.

If the material is thin, bind the buckram all round with a piece of soft muslin cut crossways.

It is better to sew a sleeve in by hand; in doing it with a machine the gathers or pleats are apt to be pushed out of place.

Before inserting whalebone, soak it for a few minutes in hot water; it can then be bent to fit the seam for which it is intended.

Ladies' or Gent's Size

Having recently purchased the entire stock of watches from a bankrupt firm, consisting of solid gold, silver and gold-filled cases, we shall offer a portion of the entire lot at prices never before heard of in the Watch trade. Among the stock are 5,780 AMERICAN STYLE WATCES, in SOLID GOLD-FILLED CASES, which we shall sell singly or by the dozen to private parties or the trade, at the unheard-of LOW PRICE of $3.98 EACH. Each and every watch is guaranteed a perfect timekeeper, and each watch is accompanied with our guarantee for 20 years. Think of it! A genuine American Style Movement watch, in solid gold-filled case, and guaranteed 20 YEARS for $3.98. Those wanting a first-class, reliable time-keeper at about one-third retail price, should order at once. Watch speculators can make money by buying by the dozen to sell. CUT THIS OUT and send to us and we will send a watch to you C. O. D., subject to examination, by express, upon approval. If found perfectly satisfactory, and exactly as represented, pay $3.98 and express charges, and it is yours, otherwise you do not pay one cent. Can we make a fairer offer? Be sure to mention whether you want ladies's or gents' size. Price per dozen, $2.00. If full amount, $3.98 is sent with the order, we will include one of our special heavy GOLD FILLED CHAINS, which retails the world over, for $1.00. Satisfaction guaranteed. Address at once,

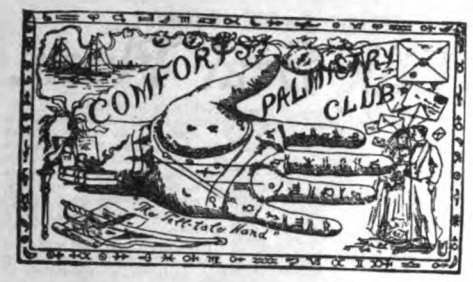
DOCTOR. The reason why Ripans Tabules cure so many apparently widely differing diseases is found in the fact that nearly every illness from which men, women and children suffer is a direct outcome of a disordered stomach. Old Dr. John Abernethy, the father of modern medicine, used to say to his patients that he regarded the stomach as the kitchen of the body, that when that was out of order the whole house would very soon be disturbed in proportion to its disarrangement. So firmly did this idea fasten upon him, that he was wont to attribute most of the ills that flesh is heir to, to abuse of the digestive organs, and, when the good old man came to die, full of years and honors, he insisted that his disease was all in the stomach, saying, "We all treat our stomachs ill when we are young, and when we are old they fail us." The well-known efficiency of Ripans Tabules as a medium for the rehabilitation of a stomach that has been worn out or abused, has established in the minds of people generally the three well-known catch phrases: they banish pain, they prolong life, one gives relief.

A new style packet containing TEN RIPANS TABULES in a paper carton (without glass) is now for sale at some drug stores—FOR FIVE CENTS. This low-priced sort is intended for the poor and the economical. One dozen of the five-cent cartons (120 tabules) can be had by mail by sending forty-eight cents to the RIPANS CHEMICAL COMPANY, No. 10 Spruce Street, New York—or a single carton (TEN TABULES) will be sent for five cents.

Remnants of Silk Ribbons.



We have purchased at recent wholesale auction sale several large lots of Remnants of Silk Ribbons, at prices which will enable our lady customers to secure splendid bargains. These remnants are all from one to two and three yards in length, and many of them are the finest quality of Ribbons in the market, of different widths, in a variety of fashionable shades, in fact, nearly all colors are represented; also different kinds of Ribbons adapted for bonnet-strings, neckwear, trimmings for hats and dresses, bows, scarfs, etc., etc. No lady can purchase such fine Ribbons as these at any store in the land for many times our price, so that the bargains offered by us should be taken advantage of by our customers. Our stock of Silk Ribbons from which we put up these 23 cents packages consists of Crown Edge, Gros Grain, Moire, Picot Edge, Silk Brocade, striped Ottoman, and various other styles of Plain and Fancy Silk Ribbons suited to the wants of our lady friends. We put up carefully-assorted packages of Silk Ribbons, no remnants less than one yard long and all first-class, useful goods. One package for 23 cents with subscription, 3 for 60 cents, or one dozen packages, $2.00. Carefully packed and sent by mail, postpaid upon receipt of price.

Whether you have one or three packages we give in addition a six months' trial subscription; when you send for a dozen you receive them in addition to a whole year's subscription to this paper. They are our special premiums sent with the paper.

SPECIAL OFFER. We want you to get up a club and will send you a package of these ribbons when you send us two subscribers at the yearly trial price of 25 cents each; or, send us a club of six yearly subscribers at the special price of 25 cents each, and we will send six packages to you free.

Address SUNSHINE, Augusta, Maine.

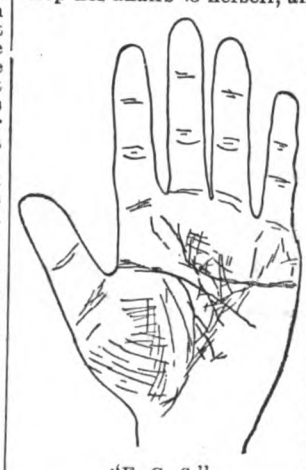
CONDUCTED BY DIGITUS.

I HAVE several questions to answer this month. One of our club members asks what the marriagel ine marked on the fate line means when a small line comes between crossing it, when both marriage lines on the Mt. of Mercury have slight forks at the end. I should say it meant where the little line comes between the marriage line and the fate line, some disturbing influence is felt for a short time; that some other person comes between husband and wife for the length of time that this lasts. But where the interference line draws away and the other two lines come together shows where this influence is lost from the life and where the husband and wife come together again as they should. Slight forks at the end of the marriage line have nothing to do with this line, the fork, according to its position may mean a thwarted marriage, or an unhappy one. When the marriage line under the little finger runs down toward the heart line without touching it, it means that the woman possessing it will be left a widow. The complexion of the future husband or wife cannot always be foretold, but when the lines show that this influence comes in under the Mt. of Saturn, it is pretty clear that the person will be a Saturn man; that is a dark one.

"Misfortune" asks a few questions in regard to his hand, says he does not mind answers that indicate misfortune. He asks if he shall be very wealthy. No, he will never be rich. There are no lines to indicate extreme poverty, but he will never be what is known as a wealthy man. His marriage will be a happy one and he will marry the woman he loves. He will travel somewhat toward the close of his life, and will have several lucky journeys but he will not travel during the middle of his life. As I have said before with regard to his hand, the early part of his life is much the more trying; from thirty-five onward his luck will change and everything will be more to his liking.

"Ardent Student" wants to know what the best books on palmistry are, after COMFORT's "Palmistry Guide" and Cheiro's "Language of the Hand." The book by Heron Allen, which can be obtained from any well-stocked book-store, is the best one probably, being made up largely from the old French writers on Palmistry, and containing the old theories which have come down to us from generations back. She also asks what the interpretation of the close joining of the fourth finger to the hand would be. I should say it would mean that the person would not be a good public speaker. That there would be a fear of one's own voice in public, and that the subject would be apt to have stage-fright if she appeared on the platform. If this quality appears in a woman it might mean difficulty in childbirth.

"MILL POND."



I have three hands to read this month. The first of these belongs to "Mill Pond." It is a hand denoting much delicacy and refinement of character; great tact and strong will-power. This woman could get along with almost any one and manage him easily so that the person would not know he was being managed. There is great delicacy of temperament and of thought. Nervousness is developed to a high degree. There is a love of art and music and of all the beautiful things of life. There is good ability for planning new moves, and an enormous amount of perseverance and courage to carry out ideas. The life line shows a delicate childhood and much illness until after the age of forty-five, when the health will improve with the prospects generally. A change of some sort comes into the life at near forty. I think there will be an illness at about that time, with some preservation from danger, and some radical change in the manner of life. I should think that marriage came at about that time, and it will be a happy marriage lasting for some fifteen years or more, and resulting in wealth, if not actually bringing wealth at first hand. The subject of this hand will be a widow. She does not marry the first one to whom she is engaged. In fact there have been some troubles caused by the affections, bringing deep grief, which have in some way affected the mind during the earlier part of the life. The subject is inclined to melancholia, but will improve as time goes on. There has been a good deal of trouble during the past ten or fifteen years, but much brighter times are ahead. There are several long journeys to be taken which will result in good. This is a decidedly peculiar hand in some ways. It shows a high-minded and refined woman, very delicate in all her tastes and pleasures. I think she will have no children. She has always received a good deal of admiration from the opposite sex. The best of her life comes during the latter half of it and she will live to be some sixty-five or seventy years of age; possibly more, as the lower part of the impression which I have is a little blurred.

"O. M. C."

A good impression comes from "O. M. C." This is the hand of a sensible business person; a person of good judgment and courage, and one who will probably succeed in life. He will have his way to make, however, through his own exertions, and it will take him a number of years to get fairly on his feet. After the age of twenty-five he will go on smoothly in his business matters until he reaches the age of forty-five, when something will happen that will cause him grief and somewhat unsettle his convictions. It will probably be something connected with a near relative, or his marriage relations. A decided change comes in about five years later, and at not far from the age of fifty he will have a serious illness but he will live on for some twenty years or so after that. I think he will be wealthy during his old age, but will make the money by his own exertions, and not from any favor of others, or any streak of luck. He will always work hard and do well. He will make a good husband, being faithful, honest and true, and is very steadfast and constant in his nature. On the whole, his hand is a fortunate one, and indicates prosperity from the time he gets fairly onto his feet until the end of his life. In matters of the heart he will be affectionate, and will probably marry a woman of dark complexion. Marriage with him will not come until about the age of forty or forty-five. In money matters he will be a wise speculator, and will never be a spendthrift, foolish in regard to money. He would succeed if he went into politics, but should not undertake to be a public speaker. On the whole his hand indicates force of character, perseverance, business judgment, and ultimate success.

"E. G. S." is the hand of a woman of delicate and refined character; one who is inclined to keep her affairs to herself, and to bear her own troubles. She lacks in tact, perhaps, but has strong will-power and a strong religious nature, with love of music and books. During the first fifteen years or so of her life she was very much bound down by the influence of others, and has not had a chance to come out for herself, or to form her own ideas. This has in some ways hampered her very much. Her life line is somewhat delicate but it is strengthened by an inner line, showing a better constitution than the life line alone would warrant. She is somewhat pugnacious in disposition and will not sit calmly down and see her own rights trampled upon without uttering a word in protest. She is fond of the opposite sex, of admiration, and is somewhat inclined to be coquettish. She has a good head line, however, which will keep her from being silly in this direction, although I do not think her marriage will come until late in life. Life for her will not be so long as in some cases, although she may confidently expect to see forty-five years at least. She needs to develop a spirit of self-reliance, and to cultivate her own thinking powers more; she depends too much upon the judgment of other people. I don't see signs of great wealth nor of extreme poverty. The latter part of her life, and in fact the middle portion of it looks fortunate. She is not a person who would succeed in any work where she must depend upon her own judgment; that is, if she works for a living she will have to be under guidance, and would never make a successful business-woman by herself. She is better fitted for married life; would make a good mother and a faithful wife.

"E. G. S."

I trust you have all preserved the directions for taking impressions of hands given in the last number; and also that you will bear in mind the rules for having your palms read in this column.

HA! HA! HA! FUN ALIVE!
The Comical Mirror.

A handsome convex mirror in a case suitable for carrying in the pocket. For many years the funniest and most laughable attraction in nearly every museum has been the large convex mirrors in which a person appears drawn out as long and narrow as a bean pole, or flattened down like a gridiron with a face as broad as a cellar door. This mirror produces the same effect as the large and expensive mirrors in the museums.
By holding the mirror in an upright position stout people look thin and in a horizontal position thin people look stout; anyone can recognize themselves at once, but their features are so distorted and their general appearance so changed that they cannot fail to have a good laugh over it. If you have a friend (lady or gentleman) who think they are a little better looking than anyone else, let them take a peep into the mirror and it will take them down a peg or two—either the "short and fat" view or the "long and slim" view are stunners and will cure the blues every time. Send for one it will afford you lots of fun.

GRAND OFFER TO YOU. Send us 12 cents and we will send this splendid literary monthly for the Home, three whole months on a trial subscription and one Comical Mirror, postpaid; for 27 cents we will send you the paper 3 months and three mirrors all paid; or, for only 76 cents we will send the paper a whole year and one dozen mirrors by express. Address SUNSHINE, Augusta, Maine.

A Complete Outfit of 44 Tools FREE.

GREATEST MONEY MAKER AND MONEY SAVER EVER SEEN: NEEDED IN EVERY HOUSE IN THE WORLD.

Hundreds of dollars are wasted every year in paying for repairs which could be done by you just as well as by the person you hire. "Yes," you will say, "I could do this work if I only had the tools." You have to hire the plumber or cobbler and pay him for his time while you stand around and look on, watching him do the work which you could do as well as he, but it is always that you have no tools. We have put together the best kit of tools for repairing which was ever seen, and we will sell the entire outfit for less than half the money for which you could buy it at any store. The outfit consists of forty-four first-class tools, as shown in the above cut, viz: 1 iron last for men's work; 1 iron last for boy's work; 1 iron last for women's work; 1 iron last for children's work; 1 iron stand for lasts; 1 shoehammer; 1 shoeknife; 1 peg awl handle; 1 peg awl; 1 wrench for peg awl handle; 1 sewing awl handle; 1 sewing awl; 1 stabbing awl handle; 1 stabbing awl; 1 bottle leather cement; 1 bottle rubber cement; 1 bunch bristles; 1 ball shoe thread; 1 ball shoe wax; 1 pkg. clinch nails, 4-8 in.; 1 pkg clinch nails 5-8 in.; 1 pkg. clinch nails, 6-8 in.; 1 pkg. heel nails; 4 prs. heel plates, assorted sizes; 6 harness needles; 1 harness and saw clamp; 1 box slotted rivets, assorted sizes; 1 rivet set for same; 1 harness and belt punch; 1 soldering iron, ready for use; 1 handle for same; 1 bar solder; 1 bar resin; 1 bottle soldering fluid; 1 copy directions for halfsoling, etc., 1 copy directions for soldering all securely packed, together with directions for use, in a neat case. These tools bought at a hardware store separately would cost between $7.00 and $9.00. You can repair boots and shoes, tap and heel them, mend your harness or make a new one, mend all kinds of tinware, repair pumps, plumbing and similar work, and do all kinds of leather work about carriages, etc., as well as renesses and filing saws. Has a coil spring and is made of iron. You can easily save five times the cost of this outfit in six months and make a heap of money doing little repairs for your neighbors and others. "A stitch in time saves nine," and if you have these tools in your house you can make repairs and save a great deal of money which you would pay if you let a break go or hired a man to do your repairing work for you. Every one of these tools are full sized, practical, neat and cheap. It is the only complete outfit in the market and thousands have been sold in past years for $3.00 when the outfit contained but about half as many smaller articles to people living in the country and small towns as well as in the city. This repairing outfit, weighing 20 lbs. will be sent by freight complete as above described for only $2.50 which includes a 6 months' trial subscription to this paper.

GREAT PREMIUM OFFER.—If you will get up a club of 12 yearly trial subscribers to this paper at the special price of 25 cents each, we will send you one of these repairing outfits as a present to you. Address,

We ought to have a particular and special feeling of thankfulness this 1898 Thanksgiving over the abundant proof of the wealth of this nation. With the high Dingley tariff at our ports of entry and the regular internal revenue bill plus the special war taxes storing up the money of the country, we are yet able to scent prosperity afar. We pay it all and still "don't care."

The Czar's great manifesto for peace seems to be more provocative of discussion than results, and for that reason pessimists declare that it is a useless piece of rhetoric. This can hardly be admitted. It is only one more word added to the sentiment that prompted the advanced thinkers of England and America to urge arbitration as an equivalent for war. The idea of national disarmament has been brought before the conscience of Europe, and the discussion it provokes will prepare the public mind for action at some future time.

The West is nothing if not practical. For years French and German have been a part of the curriculum of public High Schools in spite of the fact that the greatest business outlook for the United States was in the South American Republics where Spanish was entirely the language of business. Chicago and St. Louis schools have recognized the business outlook of our probable new possessions by teaching Spanish in the public schools. The High Schools of New York gave this same opportunity to students last year. This is practical business ability. We have taught some nations to "walk Spanish" and our triumph will be complete when our business men can "talk Spanish."

Thanksgiving Day 1898 will be a real day of thanks all over this great land. The American nation feels that it has fought the good fight and kept the faith of freedom and the right, that it has vindicated the principles of the Declaration of Independence to all the monarchies of the Old World. The nation seems to be entering upon a new era of prosperity with widened commercial aspirations. In thousands and thousands of homes is thanksgiving for the safe return of loved ones who have become heroes in the eyes of the world. In hundreds of others is a mournful feeling of thankfulness that if sons, fathers and husbands must die they have died for their country's honor and fighting for a righteous cause.

Now that Cuba is to be allowed to experiment in governing herself and Porto Rico, and the Philippines are likely to become the property of America, it is interesting to recall the fact that fifty years ago the territory seemed to be passing into the hands of France. The Queen of Spain, Christina, offered to sell these possessions for forty million of reals. The French king haggled over the price but was willing to give thirty million reals for Cuba. Finally he offered seven million in addition for the other possessions. "This," he said, "is my price or else the contract must be thrown in the fire." The Spanish minister who was secretly opposed to the bargain at any price, sprang to his feet and threw the contract in the fire. Fifty years have passed and Spain sees those dependencies passing forever from her control after the expenditure of thousands of precious lives to retain them.

In spite of the undoubted bravery and popularity of the army officers who won fame at Santiago, Dewey is still the popular hero of the war. It is a strange fact in our history that naval men have never won their way to presidential honors through their victories. With army men military success has seemed the "open sesame" to the doors of the White House. We have but to recall the names of Washington, Jackson, Taylor and Grant to prove this statement. Among the candidates for presidential honors may be named McClellan and Hancock. What civil office has been awarded to men like our first hero, John Paul Jones, to Decatur, to Perry, to McDonough, to Porter, or to Farragut? The fact that naval men of prominence are usually line officers who have been long in the service and who engage in it as a life work, while many men who have risen to military prominence are not "regulars," may account for the seeming caprices of the goddess Fortune. It would seem now that if Dewey or Hobson would accept civil honors any office in the gift of the people might be theirs.

The murder of the Empress of Austria will doubtless result in international effects to suppress the Nihilists. It is just thirty years since the doctrine of Nihilism or total destruction of all existing forms of government both national and individual was first promulgated. Bakounine first advanced the theories at the Congress of the International in Geneva in 1868. Bakounine was a Russian noble who in his youth was a page of the Czar Nicholas. He was a giant in stature but exceedingly repulsive in appearance. At the Congress he proclaimed that he came to announce a new doctrine. The old world must be destroyed and replaced by a new. "Let your own happiness be your only law," said this destroyer of things as they are. The followers of this doctrine have increased during the thirty years of its existence and two European sovereigns and numbers of officials have lost their lives as a direct result of this teaching. If European nations take active measures to drive all suspected anarchists from their dominion the United States will be filled by this refuse of Europe. That is unless the United States takes its rightful position as the sixth great power of the world and acts in concert with the other nations.

The government has at last considered the needs of a very important part of its population and issued an "Old Maid's Chart." That isn't just what they call it but that's what it is. Every state in the Union is colored to represent the excess of its bachelor population over its spinster. Talk about superfluous women! The chart proves that such statements are malicious perversions of fact. The cold figures show that there are actually 2,200,000 more unmarried men than women in this country and that not one state has an excess of female population. Idaho has 1000 per cent. more men than women, Wyoming comes next and not even Massachusetts which has long been considered the special stamping ground of the anxious and aimless mass of unappropriated femininity, shows an excess of men. The old nursery rhyme says, "There's no goose so old and gray but that some gander walks that way." If this seems likely to be disproved the "goose" now has but to examine the government chart and betake herself to the section where the highest per cent. of "ganders," is indicated. The "Passing of the Old Maid" has been one of the most marked features of the woman movement. We have "bachelor girls" but the real genuine "old maid" belongs to an era of bachelorbuttons, marigolds and patchwork quilts. Now if we can prove by a chart that she never existed in statistical reality but was only a seeming result of geographical selection, half the romance of New England is gone. Tear up the chart, dispute the figures and give us back the romantic pathetic self-sacrificing "old maid" of early days. She was a minor chord that is needed in the crashing turmoil of modern life.

There are few virtues or vices of modern life so unimportant that they cannot claim a society for their advancement or suppression. Next to assisting our fellow mortals to do something they don't want to do, nothing is more entertaining than to prevent them doing something they do want to do. "SCAPA" is the latest society for looking after the scapegoats of business who are sent forth into the wilderness to make it blossom like a peony with hideous and glaring advertisements. We have commented before on the growing desire of an esthetic and beauty loving public to "get after" these people who prefer rocks, buildings and fences as a medium for reaching the public rather than the advertising columns of a paper. "SCAPA" translated means, "Society for the Correction of the Abuse of Public Advertising." It originated in England and Lord Herchell is its president. It already has branches in this country. It is proposed to have wheelmen take snap shots at some of these monstrosities of modern hustling and then to have these made into lantern slides with which to arouse public sentiment. One prominent man said, "A world entirely free from 'ads,' is a dream too enchanting to be realized." The "Scapa" ites will have to be very much in earnest and very energetic if they follow the trail of the serpent all over this land. The Adirondack wilderness is popularly supposed to be "far from the madding crowd," but over every boulder and ledge of rocks in the least frequented portions of the mountains was the glaring white and black of an advertisement. There are two interested parties to reform even after the public sentiment has been directed against the matter. The chief sinners live in cities and are the proprietors or "boomers" of the articles advertised. Then there is the farmer who has no artistic perception of the element of beauty which the soft gray "wood color" of his barns or rocks adds to the landscape. To cover these with black paint and gigantic yellow or white letters or to paint some figure of heroic size upon the broadside of the barn seems to him quite legitimate, especially when the price paid adds very materially to his income. "Scapa" has a hard task before it. The remark that a hard-headed old Yankee used to make as the final condemnation of any and all matters was, "There's no bread in that." It's an unanswerable argument to the larger portion of humanity. "There's no bread" in beauty and when sentiment for the beautiful clashes against sense for the needful the battle is sure to be to the strong.

November affords the best time for certain features of "Nature Study" as the acquaintance with the phenomena of the material world about us is termed in the schools. Children are now taught to observe all the facts of animal, plant and mineral life about them. It is claimed that this study cultivates the mind and develops the senses to a remarkable degree. There is another side to this work whose benefit cannot be measured. A person trained to a sympathetic observation of Nature is never alone. The secret of happy living lies in the number and variety of the things which we can find of interest. When we cease to feel an active interest in life we cease to grow. The majority of "grown up people" do not avail themselves of the pleasures of Nature which lie about them because they have not been trained to observe. "Tree Study" is at its best during the month of November. The trees, stripped of their mantel of foliage show distinctly their characteristic trunk and branch forms. How many of us observe that the elm always branches in two parts. This separation into two parts is repeated from the first mighty branches out to the tiniest little nodding twig. The oak offers as characteristic a form of branching. The evergreens carry their trunks up to the very top and branch at right angles and parallel with the earth. The varieties of maple present certain signs, the branches always giving an oval or egg shaped structure to the tree. These are facts that we see about us every day and yet how many of us really see them. How many branches or sprigs in a pine cluster? The number is always the same and yet we have seen pine clusters all our lives without being able to give a definite answer to the question. A certain portion of the Adirondack land has been set apart for the use of Cornell University. The scientific study of trees and tree growth is to be carried on here. We are beginning to feel that "the wide, beautiful, wonderful world" will repay all the study which we may give it and "tree study" is but one form of this new and widespread interest.

PATRIOTISM IN MUSIC.

How the Hearts of Soldiers and Sailors are Stirred to Deeds of Valor.

Topics of Interest to Every Music Lover.

The part which music plays in nerving the heart to battle has often been the theme of writers. In all ages some form of martial music has inspired heroes to acts of daring. We all recollect how important a part the music took in the Biblical wars and history shows that all ancient nations depended upon this source of inspiration.

In later days three instances have been recorded, each noteworthy and showing how music aids in time of peril. In the terrible storm that wrecked several warships in the harbor of Apia several years ago, in the moments of most sublime peril the bands both on the American and English ships played National airs. In the deadly trenches of Santiago and on the awful heights of San Juan the bands inspired the Americans by playing "The Star Spangled Banner" and "There'll be a Hot Time in the Old Town To-night." And last, as the white flag appeared on the last of Cervera's ships, the bands on all the fleet played the National air.

War always inspires both poet and composer and every strife brings out popular poems and tunes, bearing on the war. Our late civil war was replete with such compositions, and following our late successful strife with Spain, we may look for a large number bearing on that struggle.

"Our Brave Laddies" on this page is one of these war songs and is full of patriotism and fine feeling suitable to the theme. The music is of a nature which will at once render it popular. COMFORT congratulates its readers on securing a piece so deserving of merit and so full of timely interest and sentiment.

One of the most noticeable events of late years in the musical world has been the introduction of large and complete sheet music into homes at a nominal cost. Formerly the cost of sheet music, ranging as it did from fifty cents to a dollar and a half a piece, made it almost impossible for others than the extremely wealthy to indulge their tastes to any extent.

Under new conditions, rapid machinery and improved methods, the same class of music is now offered by COMFORT at prices which are but little more than is paid for mailing expenses. A few years ago this would have been impossible; but now it is an accomplished fact to send large, clear white sheet music with proper score and words at a trifling cost. Thousands and thousands of people are buying this music and all are delighted with it. The announcement is found on another page and is well worth the attention of every person interested. Even if the reader be not interested, personally, each one has dozens of friends who would like to see the offer and no better service can be rendered than to show it to them.

CONDUCTED BY AUNT SARAH.

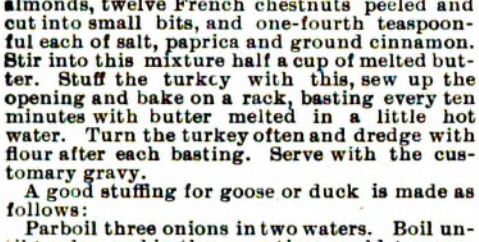
THIS is the month when the savory things flourish and the air is full of the odor of mince pies and all the other good things that grace the Thanksgiving feast.

Feasts on this day are more or less the same, the country over. Some have simply the roasted turkey, chicken pie, onions, squash and potatoes for the main portion of the meal, and for dessert the squash or pumpkin pie and mince pie, with fruit, nuts and raisins. This always fills the bill, yet it is often varied by using a goose in place of chicken pie, and by having salads instead of the heavier vegetables. In some parts of the country, notably in the farming districts, the menu is made up of what is easily gotten at—which certainly is not such vegetables as make a nice salad,—celery, radishes and lettuce,—but the vegetables which have been raised on the farm and which are reposing in the cellar waiting to be eaten. The fruit also, apples, pears and not infrequently hickory nuts and butternuts, are the product of the farm,—as is also the monarch of the feast, the turkey.

Every housewife knows, better than we can tell her, how to dress and stuff a turkey, so we are not going to try and make her dissatisfied with the dressing she has been using forty years,—but we have a dressing recipe which is used in Turkey and for those who love a change, and particularly anything that is served in the foreign style we think it will be a good chance to try it.

Clean and truss the turkey; wash and parboil one cup of rice in boiling water which has been salted; when partially cooked, drain and mix with it one quarter of a pound of washed currants, two ounces of blanched and chopped almonds, twelve French chestnuts peeled and cut into small bits, and one-fourth teaspoonful each of salt, paprica and ground cinnamon. Stir into this mixture half a cup of melted butter. Stuff the turkey with this, sew up the opening and bake on a rack, basting every ten minutes with butter melted in a little hot water. Turn the turkey often and dredge with flour after each basting. Serve with the customary gravy.

A good stuffing for goose or duck is made as follows:



Parboil three onions in two waters. Boil until tender, and in the meantime scald ten sage leaves in hot water; dry thoroughly and chop with the onions very fine: add one and one-fourth cup bread crumbs, one-fourth teaspoon each of paprica and salt; mix well and add two tablespoons butter and bind with two eggs, well beaten.

Another stuffing is made by chopping the liver fine, fry in two tablespoons butter with one tablespoon chopped onion; mix with one-fourth loaf bread crumbs, one-fourth cup butter melted in one-fourth cup hot water; add one tablespoon parsley chopped fine, and the beaten yolk of one egg.

About the most satisfactory dressing, and one which an inexperienced housewife may not be afraid to tackle, is made of one cup of cracker crumbs mixed with one-fourth cup melted butter, salt, pepper and sage to taste; moisten with two-thirds cup of scalded milk.

Prepare the turkey by placing on a rack in a dripping pan; rub the entire surface with salt, spread breast, legs and wings with one-third cup butter rubbed until creamy with one-fourth cup flour. Dredge the bottom of the pan with flour. Bake in a moderate oven about three hours, basting every fifteen minutes with one-half cup butter melted in one-half cup boiling water, and after this is used up, use the fat that is in the pan.

For making the gravy, pour off the liquid from the pan in which the bird has been roasted, skim off four tablespoons of fat, return fat to the pan and brown with four tablespoons flour; add two cups stock in which giblets, neck and tips of wings have been cooked.

FAIRLY CAUGHT.

Cook five minutes, season with salt and pepper and strain.

CRANBERRY SAUCE.

Pick over and wash three cups cranberries; put in a stew pan, add one and one-fourth cups sugar and one cup boiling water. Cover and boil ten minutes; skim and cool.

POTATOES IN HALF SHELL.

Bake six medium sized potatoes. Cut a slice from the top of each and take out the inside; mash and add two tablespoons butter, moisten with three tablespoons hot milk, add salt and pepper and then the whites of two eggs well beaten. Refill the skins and bake eight minutes in a hot oven. Sprinkle, if desired, with grated cheese, before baking.

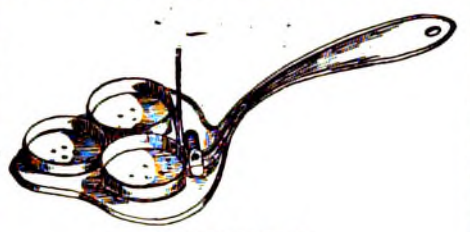
CHICKEN PIE.

Dress, clean and cut up two fowl. Put in a stew pan with half an onion, a sprig of parsley and a bit of bay leaf; cover with boiling water and cook until tender. When the chicken is half cooked, add one-half tablespoon salt and one-eighth teaspoon pepper. Remove chicken, strain stock, skim fat and then cook until reduced to four cups. Thicken stock with one-third cup flour diluted with enough cold water to pour easily; place an inverted cup in center of baking dish, arrange around it the pieces of chicken, pour over gravy and cool. Cover with plain paste and bake in a moderate oven.

PLAIN PASTE.

Work together one and one-half cups flour and one-fourth cup lard. Add one-half teaspoon salt and one-half cup cold water; wash and chill one-fourth cup butter, fold into the dough, and roll out three times, chilling between each rolling.

FRENCH FRUIT PUDDING.



To one cup finely-chopped suet add one cup each of molasses and sour milk; then add two cups flour mixed and sifted with one and one-half teaspoons soda, one-half teaspoon each of salt and cloves, and one teaspoon cinnamon; add one and one-fourth cups raisins, seeded and chopped, and three-fourths cups currants mixed with one-half cup flour. Turn into buttered mould, fill two-thirds full, cover and steam four hours. Serve with

STERLING SAUCE.

Cream one-half cup butter, add, gradually, one cup brown sugar, one-fourth cup milk, drop by drop, and two tablespoons wine or brandy.

We illustrate a neat little egg poacher. The dropping of eggs, or poaching, is extremely difficult, and this utensil, which is quite inexpensive, costing only 25 cents, does away with all the difficulty. Butter the poacher and drop the eggs into the rings. Set poacher into a pan of boiling water, and when the eggs are done, lift out the poacher, press back the spring which raises the rings from the flat bottom, and let the water drain off; carefully pass a knife under the eggs and slide them from the poacher onto slices of buttered toast. This poacher is for only three eggs, but larger ones may be bought,—though sometimes it is easier to manage three at a time than more.

Vegetables may be put to other uses than the nourishment of the human body, as will be seen by the following suggestions regarding window gardening, which will interest many a small boy during the cold season, when there are so many stormy days in which he cannot go out, and when his stock of playthings gets exceedingly tiresome. Give him some carrots and sweet potatoes and let him busy himself by taking a carrot and cutting it off about five inches from the thick end; scrape out the yellow center until there is a hole three inches deep. Tie a stout string around the carrot and hang it in a light place, filling the hollow center with water. Soon the young sprouts will begin to shoot, and the feathery leaves will grow out and up and entirely cover the yellow root. Parsnips may be treated in the same way, and we all know that a sweet potato, stuck into a wide mouthed bottle filled with water and hung in the sun, will sprout and soon flourish and brighten the corner in which it hangs.

We recently heard of a small boy who experimented in a very ingenious way. He put a bunch of grape blossoms, still hanging to the mother vine, into a small-necked bottle, tied the bottle to the vine and let it stay there; soon the blossoms dropped off and the grapes began to form and completely filled the bottle; it hung on a sunny side of the vine and so the grapes developed fast. The bottle must, of course, be kept free from dew and water which would fill it after a heavy rain storm, otherwise the fruit will decay. When fully developed, the stem is cut from the vine and the bunch may be preserved in the bottle by filling the bottle with boiling water, into which has been put a few teaspoons of alcohol, and sealing fast with a cork and sealing wax.

GUARANTEED ...FOR 20 YEARS...

A $5.00 SHAVING SET FOR ONLY $1.49.

TEN MILLION MEN WILL SAVE $250,000,000.

The average man saves about twenty-five dollars a year by shaving himself and by having a good outfit, you can take comfort enough and save dollars enough to carry you over many rough places in life. We have tried to get up a practical shaving outfit for many years, but the expense of fitting out a suitable case of bang-up A No. one tools has been so great that not until a visit to Norway and Sweden revealed the fact that Swedish Razors were now the best in the world and the makers were anxious to prove it to the American people could we do so. Thus we bargained for a large lot of the best quality at very low figures. By getting the goods from different countries and buying in large lots, we have made up a case of great value at very small cost. These outfits come packed in cases eight inches long, six inches wide and five inches high. The combination consists of 1 Royal Steel Swedish Razor, single value $3.00; 1 Genuine, Horsehide, Double, Reversible, Canvass-back, Nickle-hung, Ebonized Handle Razor Strop, value $1.00; 1 Real China Shaving Mug; 1 Cake Star Shaving Soap; 1 Best Bristle, large handle Lather Brush; 1 Cake Perfumed Lump Magnesia; 1 Stick rich perfumed Cosmetic—making a grand $5.00 combination, all packed in a compact case ready for shipment. We estimated that nearly every man in the country out of necessity shaves himself at some time or other during each month and one long wait in a barber shop sometimes costs more than this whole outfit is valued at. Every man should have an outfit in the house for emergency's use at all events and we have thus got it together at a low cost so as to be able to offer the best articles at the lowest cost. Every woman should see to it that either her Father, her Husband, her Brother or her Sweetheart has one of these outfits. They make the best presents one can give to a gentleman, and you can get one free as follows: Send a club of six yearly subscribers to Illustrated Family Herald, at 25c each and we will send an outfit all charges paid, or send $1.49 in cash and we deliver it free—extending your subscription one year.

DEAR NIECES AND NEPHEWS:

November is with us again, and with our first letter a "glance is backward cast" into the Novembers that lie behind us, and have become history. Meteoric showers are common in this month, but the one here described was so far ahead of any other that it will be many a long year before it loses its fame.

"Perhaps some of my readers may have heard, through tradition or through their grandparents, of the great meteoric shower of November, 1833. But as there are few persons now living who were eye witnesses of this grand phenomenon, I will here subjoin a description of it, taken from an old record in my possession, written by an old inhabitant of Lynchburg, Virginia.

"'Those who did not witness the magnificent spectacle of the falling meteors,' says the writer, 'are apt to underrate the event, but its grandeur could not have been surpassed. Imagine a heavy snow storm, with this difference, that the flakes seemed to be of fire. I shall never forget the awful splendor of the scene. Aroused from a profound sleep by the sound of many footsteps, the hum of voices and distant cries, mingled with agonized appeals for mercy, in that awful time when the stars of heaven had apparently fallen and the great and terrible day of the Lord had come. The greatest terror and excitement prevailed at a bridge on the river where were moored about fifty bateaux manned by brave, hardy mountaineers who would not have quailed before an army, but who now fell prostrate with superstitious terror, their loud cries and prayers being echoed back from the cliffs opposite Lynchburg. The fiery meteors, mirrored in the river, assumed to their excited imagination, the form of swords, reaping hooks and scythes, and they were filled with terror, believing the day of judgment to be at hand. A well-known tobacconist in Lynchburg who was in pecuniary straits at the time told me that he was greatly shocked at first when he thought the Judgment Day had come, but became more reconciled when he reflected that he need give himself no further concern about his notes in bank. It was an inexpressible relief to me, early next morning, when I heard my mother call the dining-room servant and send him to do our marketing. I took this as an indication that the world was not coming to an end, immediately.'

"The above narrative shows us how little scientific knowledge was possessed by the generality of people, in those days, since even intelligent and fairly well educated persons were unable to account for the phenomenon on scientific principles. Nowadays any intelligent school boy would be less staggered by this phenomenon than were the men and women at that day."

MARY W. EARLY, Wingina, Va.

Here is a letter from a San Antonio cousin admonishing us to pay more attention than we do to the beauties which lie spread around us in our own country before we rush off to foreign countries for sight seeing. His advice is certainly well worth following. He says:

"It is often said that Americans know more of the wonders, scenery and industries of foreign lands, generally, than they do of their own, and that they marvel more over, take greater interest in and spend more money on the former than they do on the latter.

"In our broad expanse of territory we have so-called deserts which, were it not for railroads that traverse them, would to some extent rival Sahara. Mineral springs abound in many sections of our country, Texas being full of them. The waters of these springs vary in temperature from hot to cold, and contain a variety of mineral constituents, including iron and sulphur. Their medicinal virtues are great, rivalling if not excelling, those of Europe and other portions of the world.

"As for Artesian wells, they are also common here. A natatorium in the very heart of the business portion of this city is supplied by one of these, and a stone's throw away another furnishes part of the water supply for this city of sixty thousand inhabitants. Both of these are within a few feet of the banks of the San Antonio river. Private institutions like Santa Rosa Hospital, St. Joseph's Orphanage for boys and St. Louis College have their own water supply of Artesian wells, and elsewhere gardens and nurseries are made to blossom like an eternal summer time by this priceless gift which comes gushing and sparkling from the bosom of mother earth.

"As for natural scenery, what is there grander or more awe inspiring than our own Rocky, Adirondack, Alleghany and other mountains? Consider the infinite grandeur of the Yellowstone region, the Grand Canyon of the Pecos in Texas, or the Yosemite Valley.

"What could be more picturesque than the sylvan banks of our own San Antonio river, which winds its serpentine course for miles through the city of the Alamo.

"It is not enough to heed the injunction 'Know thyself.' It should be supplemented with 'know thy country.'"

FELIX PROBANDT, San Antonio, Texas.

A new correspondent from southern Alabama sends us a very interesting letter on truck farming in that region. I wish others of our southern and western cousins would send us letters on kindred subjects.

"Truck farming in the South is an industry which has assumed large proportions in the last few years. The opening up of new railroads, the fast freight accommodations afforded and the cheapening of rates, has made it possible for the grower of early vegetables in the South to put them in the Northern markets at a time of the year when prices rule the highest.

"In southern Alabama, which has been my home for the past eight years, the pine belt extends inland about one hundred miles from the Gulf of Mexico. Wherever the timber has been removed and the land is nearly level and convenient to some shipping point are the places selected by the truck farmer. All kinds of vegetables grow readily, but the crops that receive the most attention are cabbage, string beans, cucumbers, melons and Irish potatoes. The soil most sought for is a sandy loam with a clay subsoil. The plowing is done in December and January. By the middle of January cabbage plants are put out, having been raised in a cold frame and protected from the frost. From the first to the fifteenth of February Irish potatoes are planted, and during the month of March cucumbers, beans and melons. About the first of May cabbage can be shipped and the other vegetables follow soon after. The railroads run fast freight trains starting from Mobile and taking on cars at different points. In twenty-four hours they arrive in St. Louis and a few hours later in Chicago. The rates on produce are about thirty-five cents per hundred weight. The goods are consigned to commission merchants who usually charge ten per cent. on sales. The colored people are depended upon for help, and there is no trouble in getting men at seventy-five cents a day, and women at fifty cents, to work in the field, boarding themselves. Fertilizers have to be used on these lands and make the largest item of expense. Cotton seed meal, kainit and acid phosphate are bought and mixed in varying proportions for different crops. Cotton seed is a product of Alabama. Kainit is used for the potash it contains and is brought from the salt mines in Germany, and phosphate is produced in Florida and South Carolina. It costs about ten dollars an acre to fertilize cucumbers and melons, and from thirty to forty dollars per acre for cabbage. After the first crop is shipped, corn is planted or a crop of hay raised on the ground without any additional fertilizers.

"This business of truck farming has its drawbacks as well as other kinds of farming. An untimely frost may do much damage, or a dry time just as crops are maturing. We have a very healthful climate in the midst of the pine woods. The water is pure and good. The expenses of living are much less than in the North. Fuel is abundant and cheap, and we require very little in this climate even in the winter time. Fruit of all kinds is plentiful. We have hot days in the summer, but the nights are always cool, as we get the breeze from the Gulf. To the health seeker, if not to the wealth seeker, this is an ideal country."

GEORGE H. JORDAN, Citronelle, Ala.

The following letter is from a cousin who takes us with her on a voyage to Gibraltar and the Mediterranean sea. It should have appeared in the issue of COMFORT for September as a prize letter, but was accidentally omitted in the "make-up" of the paper. I hope it will be none the less welcome now. Many good things, you know, are improved by keeping.

"I have been much interested in the letters which Aunt Minerva opens for us to read, and wonder if some of you would not enjoy a glimpse of an old city and fort as I have recently seen them. Our trip was by the German Mediterranean service, and it proved to be a delightful voyage.

"Our first glimpse of land was the Azores Islands. They are very beautiful in the distance, rising out of the clouds. We also had sight of Cape St. Vincent as we passed, but it was when we neared Gibraltar, and the great Rock, mighty in its vastness, stood out as a fortress, that enthusiasm reached the highest point among the passengers. We were three hours in Gibraltar, giving us sufficient time to see the grand old place. It is, indeed, a sight to be remembered, with its narrow, crooked streets, the places where people live hewn out of solid rock, the beautiful flowers growing everywhere, the funny little carriages drawn by stout mules, and the old Moors in their flowing robes; and above all, around all, through all, the English soldiers. It seems not only that the Rock is a fortress, but that the whole town is a mass of forts. The inside seems one continual ascent, with oval places about the size of small rooms beautifully smoothed and containing large guns. The Rock itself, viewed from the sea, is never the same. To-day, with the bright sun upon it, it is brilliant, rosy, and lovely; to-morrow it may be dark and gloomy, and frown fiercely upon you.

"The old Moorish markets, or the quaint bazars of the Turks and Arabs, the smart English shops and Spanish cafes, are well worth seeing. The Park of Gibraltar is called the Alameda, and here is almost a wilderness of flowers; they climb, with their wealth of verdure and bright blossoms, over the grim cannon and fortress; hedge-rows of geraniums and heliotrope, higher than a man's head, nod in the soft sea-breeze, and well-kept walks, fringed by stately trees, thread in and out. Across the sea can be seen the Mount of Apes, in Africa; and across the bay nestles Algecirals, one of the white, Spanish villages.

"Returning to the ship we were soon in the Mediterranean Sea, journeying on, through the blue water upon whose shores once lived Homer, Horace, Virgil and Dante." B. T. O.

"It is not generally known that there is a notable cave in the South besides "Mammoth" at Louisville, Alabama, however, has an underground Mecca which is situated thirty-three miles from Birmingham on the Southern Railroad and three miles north of that popular old camping ground for society folks, Blount Springs.

"The cave is in the midst of a beautiful park, and, (whisper it softly) it is said, was once presided over by a well-known boy with a magic lamp, and the Witch of Endor. The custodian of recent years is a mysterious creature who for five cents dispenses brilliant fortunes by means of coffee grains. I may be a traitor when I tell you, in strictest confidence, that there have been various grounds for complaint by her patrons, as the wrong fellow always gets the right girl, and the boy's predictions are seldom verified. The church is quite an imposing edifice, as the illustration which accompanies this attests, and it may be seen on emerging from the cave, from the summit of a hill to the eastward. The hotel and county store may also be seen in the picture. The drawing was made after a light snow storm. But to return to the cave—it is really beautiful even by the dim illumination of candle light, and it is quite a perilous ascent to the top. The growth of fungus moss lends a disagreeable odor to the retreat. There are some glittering stalactites crusting the most remote portions of the cave. Altogether the experience of a visit to Bangor cave is unique and pleasurable to the lover of subterranean wonders."

RUBY KYLE BEALL, Birmingham, Ala.

From Alabama to Vermont is hardly more of a step, physically, than the mental stride from truck farming to the wonders of Ausable Chasm, but I think my readers will enjoy making the change with me.

"I visited, not long since, my native State of Vermont, and while there renewed my acquaintance with many beautiful places which were still fresh in my mind, though I had lived twelve years in the far west, and had seen many wonderful and beautiful bits of scenery during my absence. I had looked forward with great eagerness to a visit to Ausable Chasm, being anxious to see if it still seemed as weird and beautiful as when I had first been there, and I must say I was not at all disappointed when I was again in the cool, deep gorges of this most wonderful natural chasm.

"Though this striking bit of nature is not in Vermont, it is only across Lake Champlain and very easy of access. The steamer is taken at Burlington for Port Kent, on the west side of the Lake. This is a most delightful sail of an hour, and Port Kent is an interesting old village, well worth an hour's stroll. There are many old mansions, one called The Castle being the most noted; it is very old and built of stone, being copied from a French chateau; it was a famous house in its time, and saw many grand scenes. Here lived Elkanah Watson, a man of considerable note in the early history of the country. A picture of historic interest in the house is a portrait of said Watson painted by Copley. When King George recognized the independence of the United States Elkanah Watson stood on the steps of the throne; he went at once to Copley and had his portrait painted with the design of the American Flag in his hand. This was the first time the Stars and Stripes were transferred to canvas.

"At Port Kent, in the old days, a Tally-ho coach was taken for the three mile drive over a plank road to the Chasm. Now the railroad is run and one has to go by train, which is to be deplored, as one of the loveliest drives imaginable is thus done away with. Arrived at the Chasm the visitor roams at will through the caves, corridors and natural rooms, gaining access to same from long flights of steps leading, apparently, into the bowels of the earth. A ride over the rapids in a large, flat-bottomed boat that will hold twenty people, is one of the features of the trip through the Chasm, and the novel sensation of shooting the rapids and floating over unknown depths, is something long to be remembered; the boatman is trustworthy and understands the narrow cuts, and so guides the boat in safety, between the steep walls one hundred and fifty feet high, out into the open river and into the sunshine of the outer world."

CONSTANCE LESSING, Los Angeles, Cal.

Many thanks to my niece, Isabel Hissard, of Coxsackie, N. Y., for her personal letter to me. I think you must be mistaken, Isabel, in thinking that I did not notice the one you sent me before. Your name is in my book, and I think I must have acknowledged your letter. However, write to me again soon, and give me a chance to become better acquainted with you.

Now we have a letter from a cousin in Cleveland, Ohio, describing the process of making an iron column.

"The moulder first digs out a hole in the sand as long as the pattern, which may be either for a square, or a round column. For the square column the pattern is made in one piece; for the round one, which is the one I propose to describe, it is made in two pieces. Next he puts down in the hole a plank two inches thick, five inches wide, and as long as the pattern. On top of this plank he throws about five inches of sand, and with one-half of the pattern he makes an impression in this; after that he takes the pattern out and puts on what he calls facing sand, about half an inch thick, replaces the pattern, and with a sledge hammer he raps it down solid. Then he rams it with sand up even with the joint at its top, and makes a parting. After that he puts on the top half of the pattern, or cope, as it is called, next to the flask. This is rammed up and lifted off. Then the cope is rolled over and the pattern is drawn out of the sand, which is finished by polishing with blacking or plumbago. The bottom half is done in the same way. Gates through which to pour in the metal, are cut at one end of the cope, and at the other end is a riser to show when the mould is full. Then chaplets are driven into the bottom plank for rests for the core which makes the column hollow, and side chaplets are put in. The same is done with the cope in order that it may stand perfectly even and true. The cope is then put on; then weights, which are about three times as heavy as the column to be made, are put on top of the mould and chaplets are applied to make everything secure. The mould is then ready to be filled. The gas that accumulates in the copes escapes at both ends of the mould and it is lighted as it comes out and burned off. This ends the work on an iron column."

J. M. BROOKS, Cleveland, Ohio.

And now I will leave you to the delights of an old-fashioned Thanksgiving dinner and festival, hoping that such pleasures are in store for every one of my readers. We have much to be thankful for this year. In addition to the many private blessings that come to us all at every moment of our lives, we have this year the added blessing of peace in our land—of the early and happy ending of the war with Spain into which we were forced last spring. That it is so, and that this issue has been brought about with so little loss of life upon our side is a cause of great rejoicing for us; but while we lift our hearts to our Heavenly Father in thankfulness for his watchful care and love let us not forget those among us whose dear ones have given their lives for their country, and who, on this day of feasting and merriment, are gazing with brimming eyes on the vacant seat of husband, father or brother. May God comfort them.

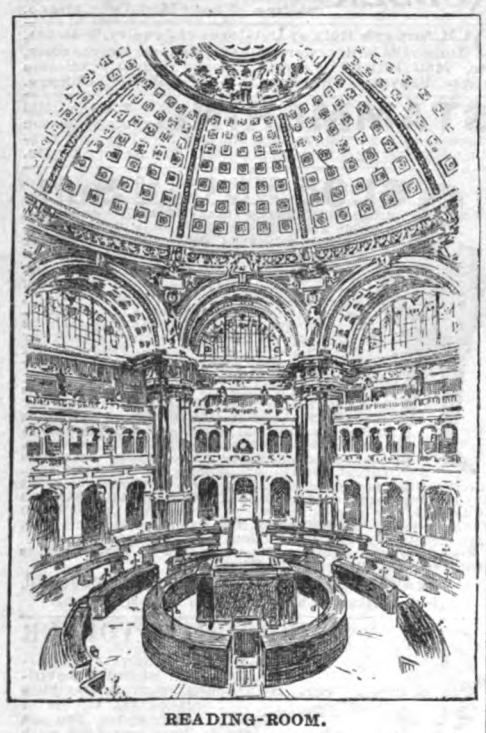
The Reading Room of the Congressional Library.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

THE Congressional Library Building has been so widely and exhaustively written upon during the past two or three years that it would almost seem to be "carrying coals to Newcastle" to offer another paper on the subject; and yet the writer feels that a few words on the library in its new home, and especially on the Reading-room and its workings may not be unacceptable to the readers of COMFORT.

The reading-room of the Congressional Library, which is octagonal in shape, occupies the center of the building, directly beneath the great dome, and is open to the top of the lantern. Upon the ceiling of the lantern, which forms the apex of the domed ceiling of the room, is an exquisite picture painted by Edwin H. Blashfield, representing, together with the series of pictures in the collar of the dome below, "The Evolution of Civilization." It is not the purpose of this article to describe at length the decorations of the room, so the extreme beauty of the design and coloring of these paintings must be left to the reader's imagination.

The room is lighted, almost entirely, by eight semi-circular windows, measuring, each one, thirty-two feet across the base. These are high up in the wall, directly beneath the convexity of the dome, and furnish a most agreeable light to the reader, as they are not so trying to the eyes as though on a level with them, nor so dazzling as are skylights. These windows are double, and are made of softly-stained and crackled glass which subdues the entering light and shuts out the direct sunbeams. In the middle of each window, near the top, is the great seal of the United States, four feet high, and made of beautifully colored glass; while surmounting the seal is the American eagle, whose outstretched wings measure eight feet from tip to tip. To the right and left, following the curve of the window, are the seals of the States and Territories, three on a side, or six in each window; so that forty-eight States and Territories, excluding only Alaska and Indian Territory, are represented.



Besides these large windows are four small ones in the four walls of the octagon which face the courts, and, above all, the eight windows in the lantern.

In the evening the light, which is furnished entirely by electric lamps, is quite as perfect in its way as in the daytime. On the floor the reading desks are equioped with sixty-eight bronze standards, each holding three lamps, making two hundred and four in all. Add to these the seventy-six lamps in use in the distributing desk and the bookstacks, and we have two hundred and eighty on the floor alone. About the walls and cornices are thirteen hundred and fifty more lamps, making a brilliant illumination when the lights are turned on.

Beneath the large windows is the circular gallery, extending entirely around the rotunda, from which sightseers may look down—and up—into the reading-room. Beneath this still, are two tiers of bookstacks where are arranged the most necessary and most frequently called-for standard works on all important topics.

The floor of the reading-room is fitted up entirely in mahogany—heavy, dark, rich and solid. The reading desks are arranged in three circles, surrounding the distributing desk as a center. They are supported on iron standards with gratings admitting warm or fresh air for heating or ventilation. The inmost row is a combination of reading-tables, settees and standing writing-desks, with shelves for reference-books, encyclopaedias, dictionaries, directories, atlases, etc. The outer rows are double-faced, and are arranged exclusively for persons reading and studying. The desks are capable of seating two hundred and forty-six readers, and, including the alcoves which are adapted to the needs of special students, the total number of readers that can be accommodated here at one time is two hundred and eighty-nine.

The distributing desk is surrounded by a circular counter where books are delivered and received, and which contains cases for the card catalogue of the Library which is used only by the attendants. Besides the distributing desk there is in this enclosure the desk of the superintendent, raised high on a dais in the center, and thus having an oversight of the whole room. There is also here a small elevator for bringing books from the basement, the terminus of the system of the book-carrying apparatus connecting the reading-room and the stacks, a stairway leading to the basement, and a row of pneumatic tubes for the transmission of messages.

Books are only issued to readers for use in the room. Formerly, according to a rule adopted in 1815, the librarian was allowed to loan books to any person not a Member of Congress upon a deposit of five dollars, the same to be returned upon the return of the books in good condition; but, as this conflicted with the Revised Statutes, the plan was discontinued in 1895, and the deposits returned. Upon entering the room the reader fills out a printed slip for each book which he wishes to consult, signs it, adds the number of the desk which he will occupy while reading, hands it to one of the librarians, and seats himself in his chosen desk to wait. The books are soon brought to him, and he reads and writes in quiet and luxurious ease as long as he wishes; then returns the books at the central desk and receives again his filled out and self-signed blank as a receipt or voucher that he has returned the books.

No noise is allowed in the room and no conversation. "SILENCE" is printed in large golden letters on the doors of the room, on the circular counter, and in the visitors' gallery. No sight-seers are allowed on the floor of the reading-room; a watchman is stationed at the door to whom every one is obliged to state that he wishes to read before being allowed to enter the room. This watchman also keeps a record of the number of readers entering in the course of each day.

Among the readers are to be observed many students and others who are diligently occupied in jotting down the facts gleaned from the books they read. Here is an old, white-haired man, whose four-score years have nearly rounded out his life in this world. He has a tower of books beside him, and is utterly absorbed in his work of writing a history of "Ye Olden Times." A pretty girl at the desk across the way has one huge volume from which she is gathering facts on art, ancient and modern. Yonder is a newspaper correspondent who writes fast and furiously for a time, and then lolls back with one leg over the arm of his chair, and his eyes fixed rapturously on Blashfield's beautiful painting in the ceiling. This is called "The Human Understanding," and represents an exquisitely lovely female figure with lifted veil and eyes gazing wistfully and searchingly above her. Our weary N. C. evidently hopes to gain from her an inspiration for his next paragraph. Here, at three different desks, are as many gray-haired, but middle-aged ladies, with books and notebooks, "writing for the press;" and at the counter are two pretty young girls who each want "a nice story to read."

Below, in the basement, in a plain, unadorned apartment, is the reading-room for the blind. Although subdued and quiet in its coloring the room is exceedingly artistic and picturesque by reason of the labyrinth of narrow arches and columns which support its roof. The room is filled with tables and chairs for the use of the blind readers, and perhaps three hundred of the immense volumes printed in raised type used by the blind are here. These are arranged on low bookshelves at the side of the room. Little Women, Ruskin's Sesame and Lilies, Pilgrim's Progress, some of Dickens' works, volumes of poetry, works on mathematics and the sciences, and many other equally useful and valuable books are on the shelves. About fifty new books have been purchased, and will be added to this collection at once. A most gentle and pleasing young lady is in attendance to give any assistance in her power to the helpless frequenters of the room. Unfortunately, many of those who would gladly avail themselves of the privileges here offered them are too poor to pay the car fares to and from the Library, especially as they must always have a companion to lead and care for them. Some of the ladies of Washington have taken this matter up, and are now making systematic search for such needy ones and providing them, free of expense, with escorts and transportation to and from the Library.

FOR YOU

FOR that sour stomach use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because they digest the food before it has time to sour, ferment and poison the blood.

FOR loss of appetite take Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because food promptly digested creates a natural desire for MORE.

FOR loss of flesh, use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets; they increase flesh in the only common sense way, that is, by digesting flesh-forming food, and assisting the weak stomach in disposing of it.

FOR gas in stomach and bowels, causing distress, belching and headaches, use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets; always indicated in such cases.

FOR palpitation of the heart use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets because this symptom in nine out of ten cases is caused from a disordered stomach.

FOR impure blood use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets; pure blood can only result from wholesome food thoroughly digested.

FOR every form of weak digestion and stomach trouble (except cancer of the stomach) Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the safest, most natural, most successful cure. No patent medicine, but composed of digestive acids, pepsin, bismuth, Golden Seal and similar valuable stomach remedies.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

THERE comes to this department, frequently, inquiries regarding articles already described and illustrated, or articles that some one wants to have described; these inquiries are answered by personal letters, when stamps are enclosed for reply,—but, there are some this month that can be answered through these columns, and then all the readers will get the benefit of them.

To Miss B. Wheeler of Fort Jones, California, in reply to her inquiry about the Ascot tie,—it takes a yard and a quarter of ribbon to go around the neck and tie in what is called the four-in-hand, with one end reaching to the belt. The Ascot is the same as the four-in-hand except that the latter is made up with a lining, and the former with a loose end of the silk only,— somewhat broader than the four-in-hand—but the knot is tied in the same way. We will endeavor to give some illustrations in the near future in this department, that will show you just how to tie an Ascot.

To Mrs. D. M. Norwood of Seymour, Texas, would say that the patterns of Battenburg work used in the September issue of COMFORT are quite common, and that any large fancy shop or dry goods shop has patterns similar to these on hand and would be glad to tell a purchaser how much material would be needed. If you live away from the city or a large town and so cannot make your own selection, write to the nearest town where such things are kept and ask them to send you the material for a Battenburg centerpiece, and any enterprising firm will gladly do so.

We are greatly obliged to Mrs. Whigham of Savannah, Ga., for her suggestion regarding embroidery on gingham. This is something new to us, but if we come across any of it will gladly describe and illustrate same.

We give some more letters from the alphabet for the benefit of those of our readers who care to copy them for use in marking linen. Cut them out and keep them always on hand, with a piece of impression paper, as they are very useful.

Next month we hope to be able to make some suggestions for Christmas gifts; there seem to be very few really new ideas on the market, especially as early in the season as the present writing, for which reason we are obliged to postpone giving anything in this line until our next issue, which we hope will not be too late for you to avail yourselves of any which may strike your fancy. While waiting for these suggestions, why not make up some cold cream to be presented to intimate friends and relatives; it is a most acceptable present and highly appreciated by the recipients, who are sure of its being made of only wholesome ingredients and so is perfectly harmless. The little glass jars with silver tops cost only fifteen cents each, or two for twenty-five cents, in city stores, and if one bought six or more there would probably be a reduction in the price—and what a neat little present the jar filled with the cream would be; of course toilet articles of this nature are generally only exchanged in a family and not sent outside to friends, unless very intimate ones. To make a good cream, shred half an ounce of white wax and one ounce spermacetti very fine and mix in a bowl placed in a larger dish of boiling water. When well blended, add a gill of almond oil and stir well; then add one and one-half ounces glycerine and twelve drops simple tincture of benzoin, and continue to stir until the cream is nearly cold, when pour into the jars. If glycerine is irritating to the skin use rosewater in its place.

Here is a recipe for cleansing gloves which is vouched for by a certain society belle, and is so simple it is well worth trying: Take a jar or tin box with a tight-fitting cover and put into the bottom of it a lump of ammonia; the jar must be deep enough to allow of the suspension of the gloves from the cover without their touching the ammonia; leave them in the jar five days, and every spot and stain will have vanished; several pairs may go through the process at the same time, if the jar is a large one.

Many people have a rooted antipathy to rubbers; it must be admitted that they are uncomfortable, and if one wears boots with very heavy soles they may be dispensed with if one will follow these directions for waterproofing the soles of the boots: Mix together equal quantities of mutton suet and beeswax, place over a fire until soft and then rub the stitching at the edges of the soles with the preparation.

When furnishing a bedroom, bear in mind not only the general appearance of the room and convenience to yourself of the arrangement of the furniture, but more particularly the placing of your bed; the bed should by rights be placed out from every wall, so that there may be a free circulation of air around all sides; if room for this arrangement cannot be spared, place only the head of the bed against the wall, and for goodness' sake don't have any draperies above it, as these same draperies, while very entrancing to look at, are anything but healthful, as the sleeper breathes and rebreathes the air contained and held in the folds, and so brings upon herself untold headaches which she is at a loss to account for; above all things avoid a draped bedstead which is placed in a corner, as the corners are the very hardest parts of the room to thoroughly ventilate.

I wonder how many of our readers ever heard of clothes balls? They are simply a mixture formed into the shape of a ball, and to be used in removing spots and stains from clothing. If you care to make some to test their value, use the following recipe: Dry some fuller's earth in the oven until it forms a crumbling powder; moisten it with lemon juice, add a small amount of pearl ash, and knead the whole into a stiff paste. Form into small balls and harden in air. When a spot is to be removed moisten it with water and rub it with one of the balls; rinse thoroughly with clear water and the stain will disappear.

A POPULAR BOOK FOR AGENTS.

IT IS ONLY OCCASIONALLY that a book is published of such great authorship and value as to create for itself a demand that makes its sale by agents an extremely lucrative business. No book ever met with a more generous reception than HON. HENRY B. RUSSELL'S, SENATOR AND EX-SECRETARY OF WAR PROCTOR'S, AND SENATOR THURSTON'S "HISTORY OF OUR WAR WITH SPAIN." Nor has any other received such strong testimonials in its favor. It is by far the fastest selling book published, and its great popularity offers to agents a golden opportunity to make money.

THOUSANDS OF PERSONS whom the hard times have thrown out of their customary employment have accepted an agency for this book, and in many cases they have made far more money than they ever earned at any other work. Most of these successful workers will never return to their former employment, because they have found that canvassing for this book pays. Its publishers, who stand in the very front rank, have a full-page advertisement in this issue of our paper, and we take great pleasure in calling the special attention of our readers to it.

This volume is worth more than all other books and manuals on this subject, for in none of them nor in them all combined can be found so much solid information as this thoroughly standard high-class book contains, which has, in addition, many beautiful illustrations and the inestimable value of being truthful. If we speak warmly of this book, it is because it is richly worth all the praise that can be bestowed upon it.

Our friends who are in need of profitable employment this fall will find this good book just the thing to work for, a book they need not hesitate to offer to their friends, and they will be pretty sure to do well with it between now and the approaching holidays.

This book is sold only by agents, and is published by the old and reliable firm of A. D. Worthington & Co., Hartford, Conn., whose advertisement appears on another page of this issue of our paper, and whose imprint is sufficient guarantee of the excellence of this volume. They want more agents for it, and its sale offers about as good a chance to earn money as we have seen in many a day.

Should you send for an outfit please mention this paper so that we may have credit for calling special attention to the merits of this good book, the circulation of which we desire to help as much as possible. Read the Publishers' advertisement.

BIG JOB LOT OF SILK REMNANTS FOR CRAZY PATCH-WORK.

OWING to the hard times there has been dumped on the market an extra big lot of odd pieces of silk and satin that are just what ladies want for crazy patch-work. We were fortunate in securing them cheap, and will give one of our special PANIC PACKAGES to any one sending 10c. for a three months' subscription to COMFORT, the Prize Story Magazine. Three lots and an elegant piece of SILK PLUSH contain 36 square inches, together with five skeins of elegant embroidery silk, all different bright colors, all for 25c. postpaid; three 25c. lots for 65c., five for $1.00.

A Cute Foot-Rest FREE.

Useful Ornaments are sought after at all seasons of the year. People do not realize the quantities of goods that are sold through the mails. Inventors are daily trying to get up something to sell by mail that will be pretty, useful, and cheap. A pretty foot-rest could never be obtained at a low price before (they sell for $1.00 each at the stores), but by getting up something that is turned out by machines in pretty colored durable goods, to be filled with cotton or any cheap or cast-off substance and then sewn up, we can now give a premium that will be welcome in every room in all the homes from Maine to California. It comes in the shape of a handsome Spaniel Bow-Wow, lying down, size about 8x12 inches, and can always be placed for an ornament when not in use by grandma or yourself or company as a Foot Rest. It will create untold-merriment when lying in front of the fire, it is so life-like in shape and color. Although entirely new, 57,396 have already been sold, and millions more will be in use before many months. Agents will find them great sellers, and should order at least a dozen to start with.

BIG OFFER. We will send a sample postpaid to anyone sending 13c., for a three months' subscription to this paper. Two Rests and this paper 6 months for 25c.; five for 50c.; one dozen, $1.00; one Rest and 10c. lot Remnants 20c.; one Rest and 25c. lot of Remnants, 25c.

WE WANT TO ENGAGE YOU to take orders for our Made-to-Order and Measure Custom Tailoring (Men's Suits, Pants and Overcoats). We put you in the way to take orders from almost every man in your county, a business better than a store with a $20,000.00 stock. You will have no competition.

WE ARE THE LARGEST TAILORS IN AMERICA..... of Fine Custom-Made Garments. We buy our cloth direct from the largest European and American Mills. We control the product of several woolen mills. We operate the most extensive and economic custom tailoring plants in existence, thus reducing the price of Suits and Overcoats made-to-order to $5.00 and upward; Pants from $1.50 to $5. Prices so low that nearly every one in your county will be glad to have their Suits and Overcoats made to order.

RIO, WIS., June 30th, 1898.
GENTLEMEN:—In reply to your letter requesting the use of my photograph for advertising purposes, and asking how I am pleased with the work, would say I do not object to your using my photograph, as your prices are very low and garments so exact to my measurements that I gladly recommend you. I would add that I have never made less than $80.00 per month since I received your first outfit, and in the best months have made as high as $350.00 per month. Very truly, E. J. DOYLE.
Should you write Mr. Doyle, be sure to enclose a 2c stamp for reply.
We have hundreds of letters similar to Mr. Doyle's.

WE FURNISH YOU A large, handsome leather bound book containing large cloth samples of our entire line of Suitings, Overcoatings and Pantaloonings, a book which costs us several dollars to get up, also Fine Colored Fashion Plates, Instruction Book, Tape Measure, Business Cards, Stationery, Advertising Matter, your name on rubber stamp with pad complete. We also furnish you a Salesman's Net Confidential Price List. The prices are left blank under each description so you can fill in your own selling prices, arranging your profit to suit yourself. As soon as you have received your sample book and general outfit and have read our book of instructions carefully, which teaches you how to take orders, and marked in your selling price you are ready for business and can begin taking orders from every one. At your low prices business men, farmers, and in fact every one will order their suits made. You can take several orders every day at $1.00 to $5.00 profit on each order, for every one will be astonished at your low prices.

YOU REQUIRE NO MONEY Just take the orders and send them to us and we will make the garments within 5 days and send direct to your customers by express C. O. D., subject to examination and approval, at your selling price, and collect your full selling price, and every week we will send you a check for all your profit. You need collect no money, deliver no goods, simply go on taking orders, adding a liberal profit, and we deliver the goods, collect all the money and every week promptly send you in one round check your full profit for the week. Nearly all our good men get a check from us of at least $40.00 every week in the year.

THE OUTFIT IS FREE We make no charge for the book and complete outfit, but as EACH OUTFIT COSTS US SEVERAL DOLLARS, to protect ourselves against many who would impose on us by sending for the outfit with no intention of working, but merely cut of idle curiosity, AS A GUARANTEE OF GOOD FAITH ON THE PART OF EVERY APPLICANT, we require you to fill out the blank lines below, giving the names of two parties as reference, and further agreeing to pay ONE DOLLAR and express charges for the outfit when received, if found as represented and really a sure way of making big wages. The $1.00 you agree to pay when outfit is received does not begin to pay the cost to us but insures us you mean business. WE WILL REFUND YOUR $1.00 AS SOON AS YOUR ORDERS HAVE AMOUNTED TO $25.00, which amount you can take the first day you work.

Fill out the following lines carefully, sign your name, cut out and send to us, and the outfit will be sent you at once.

THE PEACE NEGOTIATIONS.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

READERS of COMFORT will remember that in one of our former articles on the war with Spain we recorded how the French ambassador met the Secretary of State in Washington and signed the famous peace protocol. The protocol is the preliminary treaty by which the war ended and will be amplified and signed by the Peace Commissioners now meeting in Paris, and representing both countries. This treaty of peace will then become binding if ratified by the governing powers of both nations. By which it will be seen that the end may be several months away.

At the time the peace protocol was signed at Washington, the representatives of a paper published in New York, seeing the great historic value that such a picture would have in the future, had a photograph of the group taken. In it appear President McKinley, Secretary of State Day, the French Ambassador and a number of the other prominent people connected with the State and War Departments. It is probable that in the near future some artist will place this scene on canvas and that it will adorn the walls of the National Capitol in company with many other historical paintings.

The fact that President McKinley and Secretary Day both appear in this picture suggests something which was brought about by this meeting. After the signatures had been attached to the document that closed the war the President made a brief impromptu speech, which was eloquently responded to by the French Ambassador.

Judge Day says that, by one of those mental phenomena for which we are not responsible, while M. Cambon was speaking, his mind went back thirty years to the time that he first met President McKinley. Both had recently come to Canton, O., to practice law and were employed on opposite sides of a case that involved $20. It was tried before a country Justice of Peace in a blacksmith shop down in the southeast corner of Stark county, and to save expenses the opposing counsel drove there in the same vehicle. Thirty years later they stood together as the chief figures in those great diplomatic negotiations which closed the most successful war in history, one a President and the other the Secretary of State of the giant Republic of the West.

The Peace Commission is now meeting in Paris and considering the definite articles of Peace, which must be based on the terms of the protocol already signed.

These meetings are necessarily secret and much of the newspaper report is manufactured by the writers. It is not probable that the public will know exactly what the terms of the final treaty are until such time as the two countries are ready to give them out. Meantime, newspaper reports of wranglings and disagreements should be looked upon with distrust, as much of such matter must be guesswork. The great questions which will divide this commission are those affecting the disposition of the Philippine islands; the future government of Cuba and as to whether Spain shall be relieved of the so-called Cuban debt; and the disposition of public and church property in the former Spanish colonies.

The prompt evacuation of Porto Rico and the raising of the United States flag there on October 18th, together with the partial evacuation of Cuba gives proof that Spain realizes that it is hopeless to try to place herself in position to strongly oppose our country. That the Spanish commissioners will oppose and delay negotiations is to be expected, as this is the only way to insure any settlement at all in their favor; but the prompt and incisive style of American diplomacy as shown at the meetings assures us that a prompt decision is to be reached, or Spain will find a naval demonstration of American warships off her coast cities. That our great navy has been held in such a position that a demonstration of this character can be quickly accomplished if necessary, is apparent to every person familiar with naval strategy.

It is to be hoped that such a demonstration will not be necessary; but should the Dons delay the negotiations beyond endurance, in the belief that all the questions may be submitted to European arbitration, such a display of force may be necessary. America believes she won the fight; and that she alone must settle the terms of peace with her late adversary.

In this connection it is well to once more look at the friendly attitude of Great Britain. We all realize that only the position of that country prevented a combined attack of the European nations upon us when the Spanish War first broke out. The people of our country now have learned how valuable that friendship is to us. Besides this all thinking people now see that our aims, ideas and hopes are in the same line; and that our sublime belief of the liberty of the individual citizen has no part in the creed of other nations. With the continuance of the favor of Great Britain we may rest assured that no combination of nations will dare to intervene to wrest from us the legitimate fruits of victory, no matter what the inner desire may be.

For several weeks the country has been flooded with reports of mismanagement in the Army. That there was incompetency cannot be doubted. The yellow journals of the country realizing that the President has been supported by the people throughout dared not attack him but have endeavored to make a scapegoat of Secretary Alger. They called for an investigation which has been granted. It appears at the present time that the situation has been much overdrawn; and that sad as the conditions have been, they are no worse than is ordinarily expected in war. Our people are people of peace and naturally the horrors of war made a deep impression on their minds and rumors flew thick and fast. It becomes evident that it is much easier to suspect and allege mismanagement than to prove it. Whatever may be the truth COMFORT hopes that a full and thorough investigation may prove it. That the yellow journals were not sincere in their request for an investigation is proven by their attacks on the commission as soon as it was formed; and now that the testimony is not as damaging as was expected, they sneer at the whole idea.

This Commission appointed by the President consists of nine members. It has been evident from the high standing of the people selected, as well as those to whom positions were tendered and who declined, that the President has been influenced entirely by a sincere desire to have the truth told impartially and without fear; and notwithstanding vicious attacks of enemies, the people of this country without regard to party affiliations, will recognize this fact.

During his recent trip through the West the enthusiasm which greeted him at every step proved most conclusively how loyally the people at large stand behind him.

The month closes with the peace negotiations well under way and a surer feeling that the final settlement will be on whatever lines may be laid down by our American Commissioners now in Paris

New Cure for Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc.—Free to Our Readers.

Our readers will be glad to know that the new botanical discovery, Alkavis, has proved a certain cure for all diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or by disordered action of the Kidneys or urinary organs. It is a wonderful discovery, with a record of 1200 hospital cures in 30 days. It acts directly upon the blood and kidneys, and is a true specific just as quinine is in malaria. Rev. W. B. Moore, D. D., of Washington, testifies in the New York Christian Witness that Alkavis completely cured him of Rheumatism and Kidney and Bladder disease of many years' standing. Many ladies also testify to its curative powers in disorders peculiar to womanhood. So far the Church Kidney Cure Company, No. 409 Fourth Avenue, New York, are the only importers of this new remedy, and they are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free treatment of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of COMFORT who is a Sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disorder, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, difficult or too frequent passing water, or other affliction due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all Sufferers to send their names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavis free. It is sent to you entirely free, to prove its wonderful curative powers

SENT FREE TO MEN

Free Trial packages of a most remarkable remedy for sexual weakness are being distributed by the State Medical Institute. They cured so many men who had battled for years against the mental and physical suffering of lost manhood that the Institute has decided to distribute free trial packages to all who write. It is a home treatment and all men who suffer with any form of sexual weakness resulting from youthful folly, premature loss of strength and memory, weak back or varicocele, can now cure themselves at home.

The remedy has a peculiarly grateful effect of warmth and seems to act direct to the desired location, giving strength and development just where it is needed. It cures all the ills and troubles that comes from years of misuse of the natural functions and has been an absolute success in all cases. A request to the State Medical Institute, 558 First National Bank Building, Ft. Wayne, Ind., stating that you desire one of their free trial packages, will be complied with. The Institute is desirous of reaching that great class of men who are unable to leave home to be treated, and the free trial package will enable men to see how easy it is to be cured when the proper remedies are employed. The Institute makes no restrictions. Any man who writes will be sent a free sample carefully sealed in a plain package so that its recipient need have no fear of embarrassment or publicity. Readers are requested to write without delay.

We Present You With This Great Stock of Goods, Anyone Can Now Start in Trade and Make Money.

The Spanish War has brought Prosperity to America. Peace claims the honor of this Great Bargain to You. Immense stocks of goods were delayed by the War. The Auction rooms were finally filled with results from War Prize Ships. To pay a big ad. bill we took about a car load of novelties from a big city debtor. We have stock enough to more than supply Maine and decided to let our many patrons away from home share our Prize Capture. There are thousands of good honest boys and girls who want to earn money but cannot get a start—you can now set up a little store at home or tell your neighbors and playmates at school about your goods and sell them rare novelties cheap at big profits to yourself. Many great millionaires like Jay Gould, sold small articles and thus got a start in life. You can now do the same.

Our Bonanza Bargain box contains over seventy different useful and pretty articles of household value and personal wear. You can see by the illustration and following list what a great variety there is and all up to date, in style and quick sellers.

1 Badge Pin, President McKinley; 1 Old Glory Pin; 1 Reversible Pocket Penholder; 1 Bright Finish Napkin Ring; Six Assorted, Ornamented School and Fancy Badge Stick Pins; 6 Silver Finish Allumonide Rings; 6 Fancy Twist Friendship Rings; 1 Small Gilt Frame Toy Mirror; 2 Gilt Frame Colored Pictures; 6 Brass Charm Ornaments; 1 Small China Doll; 1 Pair Fine Cuff Buttons; 1 Pearl Bead Necklace; Half a dozen Steel Pens, assorted; 1 Tortoise Shell Pocket Comb in Case; 1 Lead Pencil Sharpener; 1 Glass Bead Necklace; 1 Long Gilt Watch Chain; 1 Bunch French Hairpins; 1 Glove Buttoner; 1 Boy's Toy Watch and Chain; 1 Coraloid Bosom Pin; 1 Key Ring Ivory label; 1 Fancy Pin Metal Frame Picture; 1 Pocket Folding Mirror; 1 Shrill Whistle Animal call; 1 Chatelaine Watch; Brownie Pins; 1 Album Decalcomanie Transfer Pictures; 6 Assorted Fancy Colored Neck Charms; 1 Punch and Judy and imitation Bird and Animal call; 1 George Washington Hatchet Charm; 6 Brass Bells for Cat and Dog or fancy uses; 1 Fancy Colored Celluloid Mascot Bow Pin; 3 Fancy Jet Stick Pins; 1 Hobson Badge Pin etc.

These six dozen articles retail in large department stores anywhere from one to 25c each. We present the whole lot to you outright that you can sell a few and keep the rest and still make a dollar clear by a few hours' work. We give you the whole lot free. Any parent wishing to have some Holiday presents handy had best send for this lot now and look them over before paying out many dollars for something not as good. For church fair grab bags, prize packages, county fair and school entertainments they offer boundless opportunities. With each lot we send special wholesale prices of separate articles so you can deal in them right along.

These goods readily retail from $2.50 to $5.00 according to where you live. We want to get "COMFORT" into new homes and have it read by people who have not heard of this greatest of all family papers, and will therefore offer this unheard of chance to all men and women and boys and girls to get this Great Bargain Box of Goods Free. We want your co-operation and good will, and as we have but a few remaining, agree to send this complete array of novelties, all charges paid if you secure only two yearly subscribers to COMFORT at 25c. each. You can secure the two subscribers in less than thirty minutes. All you then have to do is to send us the 50c. and the box of goods is yours as quick as the mail brings your letter, as we ship them the same day order is received. If it is so you can't get out and secure subscribers send 50c. for your own subscription for two years.

HOW WE DO IT.

OFFER NO. 2. Many boys and girls will want the lot of goods to sell, but can't get the 50c. to pay subscription condition. If you will drop us a postal giving full address we will mail you ten copies of COMFORT which you agree to sell at 5c each (many do the same day received). Then send the 50c to us and goods will be sent you without the subscription condition free. We want to help and encourage all Boys and Girls who will try and help themselves. Positively no Bargain Boxes sent out only as per above conditions. Address BARGAIN BOX, COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

PROJECTILES.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

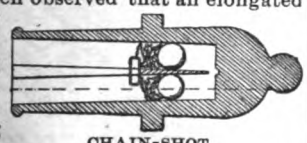
THE vagaries as well as the useful workings of inventive minds, are nowhere better illustrated than in the Division of the U. S. Patent Office that examines and passes on the applications relating to Ordnance and Projectiles.

The average Nimrod would find here subject-matter both instructive and amusing.

Broadly classified, anything that may be thrown from a gun is a projectile, but for convenience in the Patent Office, the title of shells is given to all those projectiles which contain a bursting charge, and as opposed thereto, the title of projectiles to all the remaining devices that are thrown from a gun. It is with this latter class that this article deals.

Before the days of patents, and from the earliest days of the use of gunpowder, the question of form and material of the projectiles used has always been a vital one, and it seems that stones, fragments of metal, bolts, in fact any and everything that could be rammed down a gun bore have been used. To this day, the walls of some Chinese cities have piles of stone balls for ammunition for their old style bronze Spanish guns.

It was very soon observed that a maximum effect was obtained by making the projectiles fit the bore, so that a minimum of gas would escape, and accordingly stones were chipped and metal balls were cast to the desired shape.



With the progress in the art of gunnery, the spirit of humanity (?) seems to have also grown, and it is interesting to note that in A. D., 1718, Mr. James Puckle, realizing the fact that the "horrid Turk" was not on the same plane as his Christian brother, was granted a British patent for a machine gun to fire "square bullets against Turks, and round bullets against Christians!"

That the same gentleman's religious tolerance was on a parity with his humanity, is shown by the quaint inscription on the face of his patent:—

Defending King George your Country and Lawes
Is Defending Yourself and Protestant Cause.

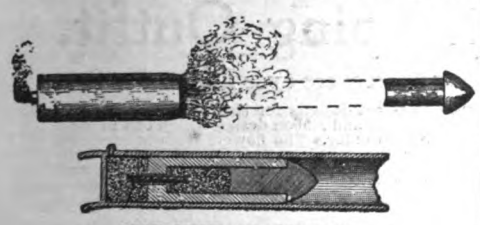
Just when chain-shot were invented is not known, though W. Clark Russell, in one of his charming sea tales, with true British insularity and self-righteousness, gives his Yankee cousins the credit therefor; anyhow, in 1851 a U. S. patent was granted for such a device.

It had long been observed that an elongated projectile, owing to its greater weight, would have greater striking efficiency, but the difficulty of giving it rotation around its major axis seemed to be insuperable from A. D. 1600 down, and from 1836 to about 1850 numerous and costly experiments were made, which finally resulted in the modern systems of rifling which consist, broadly, of projections on the projectiles to engage grooves in the gun bore; projections on the arm bore to engage corresponding grooves in the projectiles; making the gun bore and projectiles of the same shape, or better than all, and our own system, a soft band on the projectile of slightly greater diameter than the bore of the gun, or else of the same diameter and adapted to be forced outward into engagement with the gun grooves by the gas of the propelling charge.

CHAIN-SHOT.



About the year 1600, small-arm gun-barrels were rifled, though owing to the fact that elongated projectiles could not be adapted thereto, and when fired from smooth bore guns, they would "tremble," that is rotate end over end, or else adopt some erratic path, round projectiles only were used. To increase their efficiency numerous inventions were devised, whereby the escape of gas was prevented and the projectiles were kept from "balloting," that is, according as the projectile touched last on its left or right side as it left the bore, would it deviate to the right or left, and thereby destroy all accuracy as to aim.

These devices consisted of patches of paper, cloth or leather; separable bands, made of wood or other light material that dropped off and lagged behind owing to the resistance of the air.

As a means to cause rotation and avoid the difficulties set forth, one inventor in 1859 filled tangential pockets in the periphery of his projectile with powder, the gas from which, when ignited, impinged on the air.

Another bright mind put wheels on his projectile and thereby overcame the barrel resistance.

To cause his projectile to soar, another genius attached a lot of folding blades which flew out by centrifugal force, while better still was a "corner-shooter" consisting of a deflective curved plate at the head and rear of the projectile. This is of the nature of boomerangs, which by the way, are subjects of patents.

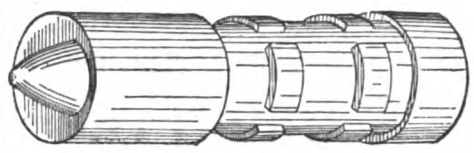
Another kindly disposed creature in 1857 proposed to fill a projectile with red-hot metal, and carefully explained how the "enemy" would be thereby discomfited.



As a theoretically successful departure in the art of gunnery, one genius in 1862 capped a long slender wooden projectile with metal, the major diameter of the whole being smaller than the bore; his theory being that the gas would push or uphold the projectile in the center of the gun, at the point of least resistance, thereby totally avoiding friction between the gunwalls and the projectile. It is quite needless to say that his device was never adopted.

To increase the range, numerous expedients have been devised, as projectiles in projectiles, each with a propelling charge of its own.

To avoid the use of powder or other explosive, another original mind had a chamber in the projectile itself filled with gas under high pressure. In use the ordinary gun hammer penetrates and shatters the rear wall of the chamber, and the rebound of the escaping gas forces out the projectile.

Since the advent of armor, to increase the penetrative power of the projectiles has been the great desideratum, and various inventions have been brought to light, such as a projecting and shouldered shot, the recess being filled with tallow to present a smooth surface to the air.

Yet another, a German inventor, realizing the difficulty of uniting weight and length, without breadth necessary to fit the gun-bore, attaches a long sharp bolt-like projectile through the center of an ordinary shell, the two parting company on impact.

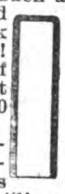
With the same object in view, as far back as 1866, a genius evolved the cone-ended hollow projectile which presents less front surface to the air and bores or cuts into the object struck much the same as our grandmothers used to cut out the succulent doughnut. The moral effect of such a projectile could be very demoralizing, as its demoniacal shriek would tend to unnerve even a veteran. Many a boy in blue will remember the Whah is yow! Whah is yow! of the enemy's shells as he personally seemed to be the object singled out.

The latest and greatest improvement to date, however, is the Johnson armor-piercing projectile, consisting of the hard-pointed steel body, a soft steel cup to fit over the point, and a layer of graphite between the two. The action is exactly the same as when that great prestidigitator Hermann drives a pin through a coin, by simply supporting the pin in a cork, through which the pin is first thrust, the cork and soft steel cap, each giving the necessary side support. Of course, if the point of the projectile is not broken off, the full effect of the graphite lubricant is realized.

PIERCES ALL ARMOR.

Recently, 10-inch projectiles of this class were fired through 14 inches of steel armor without affecting the projectile body in the least.

The introduction of the high pressure nitro-powders has necessitated the covering of lead projectiles with a steel jacket, in order to prevent "upsetting" while in the gun bore, as such a terrific shock is apt to do. These projectiles, owing to their small caliber, (.236 in the Navy rifle) and high velocity will pass through the fleshy part of a man of low nervous organization, without "stopping" him, as in a charge. To remedy this, the present plan is to cut longitudinal slots in the jacket walls, thereby weakening the same, and the effect of which is terrible, as on impact, even with the flesh of a man, the projectile "mushrooms," or flattens out over considerable space, and literally tears a person to pieces. A man struck by such a bullet never needs the service of a surgeon!



When in 1864 the Geneva Convention placed its interdict on all projectiles that would cause unnecessary pain, such as square or irregular shapes, poisoned projectiles, or projectiles of small caliber, adapted to explode in the body, a great step was taken toward humane war, but the mushrooming projectiles above described, are an hundred-fold more terrible in action, and it would seem that another Convention will be in order to consider with such devices, torpedoes, torpedo boats, balloon warfare, and the modern high-explosive filled shell!

While the range and velocity of modern projectiles has increased almost beyond belief, the size of projectiles for modern heavy guns has correspondingly increased.

When Baron Munchausen told of the Turkish defenses on the Bosphorus consisting of guns throwing 1000 pound stone balls, such a tale was thought worthy to be classed with that of the severed horse that drank a river of water to satisfy his thirst! What would the worthy Baron think of a projectile for our new 16-inch gun, that weighs over a ton, and requires 600 pounds of powder to project it?

In addition to the ordinary uses, projectiles are used to afford a means of communication between grounded vessels and the shore, technically known as "line-throwers."

An analagous use, as a life saver, as well as a ship protector, is that of the oil-distributing shells, used in similar cases, or thrown ahead of the vessel for the purpose of quieting the waves.

In the old days when hand fights occurred on the sea, when one vessel boarded another, a grappling device was thrown to entangle the enemy's rigging, and at the same time afford a means to draw the vessels together.

On the advent of torpedoes, a similar grapple was thrown ahead, to rake the torpedoes from their moorings.

WONDERFUL ASTROLOGY.

Here are some questions that interest most people. It is claimed they can be answered by astrological knowledge.

At what age am I liable to die?
What diseases, afflictions or accidents am I liable to?
Will I marry? Will I marry more than once.
At about what age? Will I have children?
What kind of a person should I marry?
Will my love affairs be successful? What person truly loves me?
Is my lover or husband false or true?
Should I be divorced? Should I have children? Should I travel?
Should I take a long or short journey?
In what direction should I go? When should I go?
In what part of the earth will I be most fortunate?
What are my lucky and unlucky days?
Should I remove? If so, how far?
Should I take a partner in my business?
What business or calling am I best adapted for?
Will I win or lose in lawsuits? In gambling?
Will I have more friends than enemies and who are they?
Should I purchase real estate or personal property?
At what age or in what years will I be most lucky?
Are my friends trustworthy? Who can I trust?
Shall I enjoy the luxuries of wealth?
Am I liable to recover lost property? Where is money buried?
Should I do business for myself or for others?

If you want valuable astrological information with a pen picture of your future wife, husband or sweetheart, send a lock of your hair, give date of birth, and full name and address. Enclose 12 cents in stamps. You will be astonished at the true revelations that I will make. Address, Dollars for Pennies.

"THE LIGHT THAT WON'T GO OUT."

Every family in America is ready to buy "The light that sells on sight"—the wonderful new invention called ARC-LIGHT WICK.

It burns a whole year without trimming. It kills a candle, discounts kerosene, beats gas, and almost equals electricity or sunlight.

It saves 20 per cent. of oil. It's clear, white and brilliant. It's the light that won't go out. It's the light in the window for thee.

The Light That Sells On Sight.

The ARC-LIGHT is something new. All need it, all buy it, all bless it. To show it means to sell it, and it yields from 100 per cent. to 300 per cent. profit to agents.

The same kind of carbon that gives the electric light its brilliancy is woven into the Arc-Light by a patent process. We hold affidavit showing that an Arc-Light burned 1040 hours, giving the last hour the same perfect, brilliant, light it gave the first.

A single lamp manufacturer in New England, who bought over 35,000 writes: "The Arc-Light beats all others. It sells our lamps, and turns night into day." Every home, store, hotel, saloon, hall, church, or car company will buy the Arc-Light Wick on sight. We have made arrangements with the manufacturers to introduce this wonderful discovery, and we offer for 60 days the following wholesale terms to agents:

Medium or A wick, 5-8 inch wide—the size for house lamps—by mail, sample 5 cents; per dozen, 25 cents; per gross, $2.50. Small or E wicks, for hand lamps, lanterns, etc., 3-8 inch wide, sample, 5 cents; per dozen, 25 cents; per gross, $2.50. Large or B wicks, for table, bracket lamps, 1 inch wide, sample, 5 cents; per dozen, 25 cents; per gross, $3.50. D wick, 11-2 inches wide, for incubators, hall, bracket, or store lamps, sample, 8 cents; 33 cents dozen; $3.50 gross. Argand wicks for parlor lamps, sample wick, 8 cents; per dozen, 33 cents; per gross, $3.50. On all orders for $10.00 accompanied by the cash, 15 per cent. off. Send cor sample dozen, giving width desired, and see how they go. We can supply you with any style ARC-LIGHT WICK in any quantities, from a single wick to a thousand dozen.

PHILANDA'S GOAT.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

WAS the only thing poor Philanda ever could claim as her very own—this meek, soft-eyed creature, with the silky milk-white fleece of the Angora goat. To Philanda, however, its chief beauty was that it was hers—all hers.

There was a large flock of these goats belonging to the Seminole camp, or more particularly to Aunt Susannah (Philanda's grandmother), which roamed over the chaparral, as the bush covered Texas plains are called—between the garrison where Marian Hart, the major's little daughter, lived and the huts of the Seminoles. But Marian coveted this one particular goat of Philanda's. As for the goat, he would gain nothing by this exchange of mistresses, for Marian simply wanted his skin.

In former times these negroes were the slaves of the Seminole Indians. Since their freedom they have wandered from place to place, a portion of them settling in the southwest part of Texas. The men are employed by the government as scouts, and their families are allowed to remain on the reservation near the garrison.

Such had been Philanda's home until at the age of twelve she had gone to the major's house as servant. Poor, ignorant, untrained little Philanda! You can imagine what a life she led Mrs. Hart, her mistress, and also, though no one seemed to think much of this, what a life Mrs. Hart led Philanda.

It was a delicious day in December and Philanda's "afternoon out" so she joyfully turned her back on civilization and started for the camp. As Marian caught sight of her she decided that there could be no better time than the present to wheedle Philanda into selling her the goat, for she wanted the skin for a birthday gift to her mother and the day was now coming on apace. She joined Philanda, saying that she would walk half way out to the camp with her.

By and by Marian's quick eye discovered Aunt Susannah's goats going down to the creek to drink. She begged Philanda to follow them and point out her especial property.

"Yaa's dats my goat," said Philanda at length. "My fader he done giv it ter me de las time he was down ter der camp. He sez ter me sez he, 'Hi yes Philanda, I'se gwine ter sprize yer now. I'se gwine for ter gib yer a present.'

"'Dat'll be a mighty big sprize sho enuff,' sez I an' I gits up an' go hide down by de crick cause I b'lieve wot he wuz gwine ter gib me wus jest a big lickin'. But laws I'm bleezed ter say dat he tole de troof fur oncet. So dat goat Miss Mayan, do it herds in wid my gramther's goats b'longs ter me. I kin sell it but I ain't gwine ter sell it. I'se gwine ter keep it fer allays so's ter own sumpin'."

"But Philanda don't you see if I give you twenty-five cents for his skin you'll own that instead," said Marian, blandly.

"Sho now Miss Mayan how long d' yer spose I'se gwine ter own twenty-five cents?"

"You'll buy something down to the store with it, say a ring. I saw some for twenty-five cents—lovely ones with diamonds in them."

"MINE AM DE BIGGEST GOAT."

But Philanda shook her head solemnly. Rings were well enough in their way—very well indeed, but looked at as property they were not comparable to goats.

"Yaa's dats my goat an' he's de bigges'," she said. "I kin sell him but I aint a-gwine ter sell him. No Miss Mayan taint no use coaxin'."

Marian looked down rather crossly at the lazy outstretched figure of poor Philanda who had flung herself on the ground and was gazing with a contented sense of proprietorship at the coveted goat.

"You are a disobliging selfish g..l then!" she cried. "Just to think how good mamma has been to you and how much she has taught you and you just as aggravating all the time as you could be. I should think you would be glad to let me have the skin for her."

"De goat am mine an' I aint a-gwine fur ter sell him nohow," murmured Philanda pleasantly. "It's de bigges' ob de hull flock."

Exasperated and disappointed Marian no longer tried to control herself.

"I hope mamma will send you back to your grandmother and I believe she will. She says you don't even try to improve and her patience is worn out. To think of your eating up the chicken pie she made for papa and then of the dishes you break. There isn't a day Philanda that you don't break one."

"Mo dan dat," interrupted Philanda, cheerfully, "mo dan one, cos dere wuz de sugar bowl an' one tumbler terday, an' I disremember de partikilers ob de day befo'."

"And when she scolds you," went on Marian, severely. "You just stand and laugh. No wonder she is discouraged. She says you don't care anything for her and I see it's true."

"Did she say dat? laws! it aint true, but I cert'ny did eat up de pie she done made fur de major. I wuz mighty hungry dat time or I jes wouldn't have done it an' anyhow Miss Mayan nobuddy would eber a eaten dat pie dat would a wanted it mo 'n I did. Yaas I do break de dishes—heaps an' heaps ob dishes but it's dere fault more 'n mine, dere aint no sense in dere hoppin and skippin bout' de way dey do. Mebbe I larf w'en yer mudder scolds me but I cert'ny feel powerful bad inside only if yer see I'm bleeged ter look pleasant. Dat las you see do, ef yer'll scuse me Miss Mayan, aint de troof fur I jes tink a heap ob yer mudder."

Marian however, now convinced that Philanda was not to be coaxed into selling her the goat, was already hurrying toward the garrison. She was horrified at the ingratitude of the little Seminole and not for a moment realized that her own part in the affair was not altogether creditable, yet she was trying to drive a sharp bargain with Philanda whose debt of gratitude after all, was not to her but to her mother.

Philanda gazed after her with reproachful eyes. Those manifold sins Marian charged her with had already slipped off her easy conscience but she was not ungenerous nor unloving and a sense of Mrs. Hart's displeasure troubled her. Every now and then during the pleasant free hours of the afternoon she muttered to herself.

"'Twan't de troof no how, fur I tink a heap ob her mudder."

Late in the afternoon she sauntered on to her grandmother's jacal. The old negress was sitting outside her door under the shelter of the queer rough porch or piazza, which is built as a sort of extension to each hut.

Aunt Susannah was a person of distinction. To begin with she was older than any one in the camp and she carried herself with a dignity that become her years. She had enjoyed the advantage of travel, once having been to Indian Territory to see her daughter and years ago she had been taken as nurse to Charleston by one of the army ladies. This last fact added a great deal to her sense of her own importance. When she caught sight of her grandchild she stood up brandishing a stick, crying:

"Yer lazy triflin' nigger, yer. Whar've yer ben all dis arternoon. I'se jest ben a-waitin fer yer I'se gwine ter teech yer ter eat up w'ite folks chicken pie an' den larf at 'em. I'se gwine ter gib yer a lickin' now as is wuth wiles."

"Laws now, gram'ther yer powerful smart ter fin' out 'bout dat ar' chicken pie," said Philanda skipping about to avoid the blows. "Pears if Miss Mayan run clar up hyar ter tell yer 'bout it. Ow! ow! gram'ther I ain't gwine ter eat no mo chicken pie fore her ar' sher."

"Miss Mayan? no sar, but Mis' Hart herself drove up here dis mawning fur ter tell me she wuzn't a gwine ter keep yer no longer cause her temper wuz a-gittin' ruz up orfle a tryin' to teech yer ter be a spectable nigger.

"She sez 'twant no kinder use yer wuz dat ongrateful an' didn't 'pear ter keer nuffin 't all fur her."

"Dat ain't de troof cos I do keer fur her," said Philanda, solemnly. "I don keer nuffin 't all fur Miss Mayan but I keer a heaps an a heaps fur her mudder." Presently she broke out again. "Gramther Miss Mayan wants de skin ob my goat. She sez in Marsachusetts whar she kums fum dey puts 'em on de floor in de houses. Whar's Marsachusetts, gramther?"

Aunt Susannah lifted her shoulders and spread out her skinny, old hands.

"I nebber heerd on it, chile, an' I spect it ain't no account no how. I disremember eber hearin' 'bout no sech a place as Marsachusetts. De Major kum fum dar I reckon, cos Mis' Hart she kum fum South Carliny. Laws now I know whar 'tis. I heerd 'bout it w'en I wuz down in Charleston. It's dat place dey wuz a buildin' up on de udder side ob de crick. How much wuz Miss Mayan gwine ter gib yer fur de skin?"

"Twenty-nve cents," answered Philanda.

"Wal, 'taint nuff. Dat ar goat am de bigges' goat ob de hull flock. Yer jes tell her yer ain't a gwine ter sell de skin fur no sech a price as dat ar."

"I ain't gwine ter sell it fur no price 'tall," said Philanda, firmly. "I know jes wot I'm gwine ter do."

December was passing away without a touch of winter weather. The days were balmy and beautiful and Christmas found the roses still blooming in the little gardens in front of the officers' quarters. Mrs. Hart's birthday came early in January and long before that time Marian's gift was bought and daintily tied up in white paper with pink ribbons. Instead of the goat skin she had been forced to content herself with a selection from the poor little stores in the town for which fact she could not forgive Philanda.

Philanda's month was now nearly out and the time was drawing nigh when she must go back to her grandmother at the camp. With all her strength she had striven to amend—to be useful, to be forgiven, and poor little soul, the effort had not been even suspected.

So the days passed till the birthday morning dawned. When Mrs. Hart opened her chamber door her eyes fell on the soft, glossy fur of an Angora goat. There was no card upon it but with a pleasant smile as if, nevertheless, she recognized the giver, she passed on. At Marian's door she stopped, smiled again and looked back at the skin, then, since it was early and not wishing to waken the family she crept softly from the main hall into the L.

The door of the cook's room was open—for the cook had already gone below—but a voice, soft and musical, issued thence. Then she saw the little black girl on her knees, her eyes closed tight and rocking herself to and fro in the earnestness of her petition.

"Oh, Lord," pleaded Philanda, "make me clean an' smart an' handy like de wite folks. Make de dishes so dey ain't gwine ter drap ebery time I go fur ter tech 'em. An' jes lemme not be hungry w'en I'm lef alone wid de pies an' de cake. Oh, Lord, make Mis' Hart b'lieve dat I keer a heep fur her cos it's de sollum troof. An' oh, Lord, in partikerler make me forgit dat I own nuffin 'tall on dis yarth, not eben a goat no mo'. Amen."

With tears in her eyes Mrs. Hart passed silently on, grateful for this glimpse into Philanda's heart, and with the determination of giving the little Seminole a further trial.

An Orchestra in Your Home.

These words in connection with the advertisement that appears in our present issue from that well-known and enterprising firm, Messrs. Cornish & Company, of Washington, New Jersey, have doubtless attracted the attention of our readers. The perfection to which Messrs. Cornish & Company have brought their Celebrated American Pianos and Organs certainly justify them in making the assertion that they can furnish what is practically a full Parlor Orchestra.

Another very striking statement made by Messrs. Cornish & Company in their advertisements, catalogues and circulars is to the effect that they will allow one year's trial of an Organ or Piano—that is to say if any instrument purchased from them is not satisfactory after twelve months trial it can be returned to them and they will not only refund the purchase money and the freight charges but also six per cent. interest from date of purchase.

Messrs. Cornish & Company have long enjoyed a splendid reputation and are more strongly endearing themselves to the public at large by their unique method of business, selling as they do direct from the factory at home at wholesale cost.

They send a large descriptive catalogue of their instruments free to all who may write for them. Readers interested in music will do well to write to them at once.

FREE BOOK TO WEAK MEN.

Early indiscretions and excesses sooner or later rob a man of vigor and result in a train of symptoms such as Drains, Impotency, Lame Back, Nervousness, Varicocele, etc. The patient oftentimes, however, looks well and strong, his friends saying his complaint is imaginary. They are wrong. They are unjust. I have treated weak men, young and old, single and married, for 30 years and know what mental torture some suffer. Reader, I wish you would give me a fair chance. I wish you would consider seriously what I am about to say. In the first place

I NEVER USE DRUGS.

I couldn't give you medicines for weakness and be honest, because they only stimulate. They don't cure. It seems so strange that people will hesitate to take advantage of a great natural remedy like electricity—a remedy recognized and recommended by scientists the world over. I use it and cure 95 per cent. I am the inventor of the Dr. Sanden Electric Belt, the great weak man's home self-treatment, with which during the last year, 1897, I cured over 5,000.

It gives a current of electricity instantly felt by wearer, and can be made mild or strong by using regulator attachment. Put it on when you go to bed and wear it over night. Keep this up a while and live to bless the day you read this advertisement.

THE LIQUEFACTION OF AIR.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

HAD any one gifted with second-sight foretold, fifty years ago, the wonderful discoveries soon to be made in the world of science—the marvelous strides in the way of improvements which would go on in the civilized world during the next fifty years—he would have been regarded either as demented or a brazen liar. The steam engine and the telegraph took the world by surprise; the telephone caused it to fairly gasp in amazement; but when Edison followed this by his many inventions in electric lighting, heating and power, people received these wonders, as they came into existence from his fertile brain, as marvels almost too great for comprehension.

Two years ago, when word came from Germany that a certain professor there had succeeded in passing light through opaque bodies, such as leather, wood or flesh, people were slow to believe in the truth of the report. The marvel was too great for credence. To-day the Roentgen Ray is an established fact, and the fluoroscope is a necessary part of every surgeon's outfit.

Now we are called upon to accept and believe in another newly-developed wonder—the liquefaction of air. It must not be supposed, however, that because this process has only lately been brought before the public that it is altogether a new thing. As was the case with the X ray, the liquefaction of air has long been a partially solved problem. For at least thirty years scientific men have thought and made experiments upon this subject. Pictet, Wroblenski, Olzewski, Dewar, Linde, have all won renown by their studies and experiments in converting various gases into liquids, and several of them have succeeded in producing liquid air; but in so small quantities and at so great expense as to be valueless to commerce. It is said that in these preliminary efforts liquid air cost as much as $2,500 for a quantity ranging from a cupful to a quart.

Mr. Chas. E. Trippler of New York has lately, after several years of experimental work, developed a process for the economical liquidation of air in large quantities and at a comparatively small cost. Mr. Trippler's process is based upon the well-known fact that if a gas be compressed and then allowed suddenly to expand, it absorbs the heat of the surrounding medium, thereby producing intense cold. In this method air is subjected to a pressure of two thousand pounds to the square inch, passed through a coil and permitted to issue from a needle-point orifice. There it expands and cools. This cold stream of air circulates round a second coil through which compressed air is flowing, reducing the temperature of the latter. The air issuing from this second coil has its temperature lowered to a point due to its own expansion plus the cold imparted from the first expanded and extremely cold air from the expansion. The second coil is used similarly to cool a third coil, the air in which is brought down to a temperature of 312 degrees Farenheit and below, at which it condenses and flows from the end of the coil in a liquid stream.

This product, which is called liquid or fluid air, is opalescent, and has a milky appearance, from the presence of some carbonic acid gas which is in solid particles, and which can be very easily filtered out. The liquid air has a density little less than that of water—0.93. It is very difficult to keep it from boiling, as its boiling point is at the very low temperature of 310 degrees Farenheit. It bubbles constantly, and will only gradually resolve itself again into air when exposed to ordinary temperatures.

Liquid air solves the problem of saving ninety per cent. of power lost in converting heat into steam and electricity. It can run the most ponderous machinery, and it can fire the greatest projectiles of war. It can not only light and heat, but it can produce the most extreme cold. A single gallon of it will perform wonders in an ordinary city house. A tumblerful dipped out and placed in an ice chest will keep its temperature at zero for twenty-four hours. A quart of it, placed in a ventilating apparatus, will keep the atmosphere at sixty degrees during the hottest summer day. The remainder of the gallon, put into the proper motor, with an electric dynamo attachment, will generate heat enough to do all the cooking, run the electric lights, warm the water for the bath, and, in the winter, heat the entire house by electric radiators. Its application as a medicine shows wonderful possibilities. It is the most powerful tonic ever applied to the human system. It can be used for many purposes in manufactures and the trades. Indeed, there are so many uses to which it can be put that scientists hardly know where its usefulness will end if it can be produced at a low cost in commercial quantities.

Unburstable Water Pipes.

WHEN water in pipes turn to ice, the expansion in this change from a fluid to a solid, amounts to an increase of about one-tenth of the volume of water. Thus, if full pipes contain ten gallons of water near its freezing point, and it freezes, the pipes are suddenly called upon to contain eleven gallons of ice, one more than their capacity. It is not a matter of wonder, therefore, that the house water pipes sometimes burst in zero weather. Pipes for the water service are now made of fluted iron (corrugated longitudinally); so that when ice forms in it the fluted iron is pressed out to a direct circular line, giving a greatly increased aperture, and saving the pipe unruptured through successive freezes and perhaps all the years of a lifetime.

A Balloon Spider.

IN the island of Java there is a species of spider whose web is so strong that it requires a knife to cut it. There is another species of spider in Texas which weaves a web in the form of a balloon, four feet long and two feet wide, and fastens it to a tree by a single thread. When everything is all ready she marches her family onto it, cuts the thread and they go sailing away to some other neighborhood.

PHONO' PARLORS

GIVING PROFITABLE EMPLOYMENT

Will be established in all parts of the country. Hundreds of thousands of people have never heard a talking machine. Late improvements in the Gramophone Records now make it possible for any one to open up entertainment resorts right at home and make a large amount of money without any capital. The latest machines can be relied on to furnish not only the very best of vocal and instrumental music, but they talk and reproduce all sorts of exquisite voices or sounds in a decidedly clear and distinct manner sounding exactly like the original from which the matter is reproduced. The Talking Machines we are introducing come in a nice box case about a foot long and nearly nine inches wide. They make a very attractive article for home use. The construction is very unique and strong; nothing to get out of order and they are the marvel of the age. For House, Home and Church entertainments we have machines that are just perfect in the required volumes of sound given out that make them marvelous amusement makers, and melody producers. We want to establish proper Parlor, Store and Hall and Street amusement centers in every part of the country and require at once one thousand persons in different parts of the United States to either devote part or all of their time to looking after the business or furnish space in their homes in which to display and show up these marvelous machines. Remember you do not have to invest one cent. Simply say you are prepared to co-operate with us and devote part or all of your time to displaying these wonderful phonograms to your friends and neighbors, provided it is proved beyond a doubt to be a money-making profitable employment for you. One thousand of these new machines will be ready to ship, all charges paid, during the next three months. Write at once if you are willing to have one sent to you. This new business will be adapted to all persons from sixteen to sixty years of age and competent persons earn from Twenty-five to Two Hundred Dollars Per Month according to location.

TALKS WITH GIRLS.

COUSIN MARION.

Here is a Thanksgiving welcome to you all, my dears, and may each of you have a hundred more. I fancy not many of you will, but it would be pleasant to feel that we were to have a hundred years of youth and hope, wouldn't it? The long winter evenings are coming and it behooves all of you to be thinking of how you may best improve the flying moments. Let us see what there is in your letters touching upon this subject.

The first one I open is from Ethel B. Lea, Tiskilwa, Ills., who, after speaking her mind about silly girls and the "beauty" questions they ask, wants to know if it is better to sleep with the head elevated or level. Level is very good; an elevation of an inch or two is not bad. Propped up as some people sleep is bad, though most of the people, who have passed their three score and ten, sleep that way.

Frankie and Lizzie, Cowan, Tenn.—Girls of sixteen should not "accept gentlemen's company." An engaged girl of any age may accept the attention of other men as long as her fiance does not object. But she usually does not care to. No, don't speak to soldiers or any other men without proper introduction.

Mai. M., Lang, Kans.—A nice present for a young man is a cane, a scarf pin, some silver trinket for his desk or pocket. The kind of a young man would determine. (2) Don't say "gentleman friends," because it is not the thing among those who are in authority. That is reason enough. (3) Do not flirt with the young man you are trying to get rid of. Accept the attentions of other men to his exclusion is a better way. Some men, though, cannot be driven off with a club. Send him this notice marked.

M. W., Wallaceburg, Ark.—A young lady may go buggy riding in the country with a young man. (2) The man must write first. (3) Yes, go to church with the young man alone. (4) Certainly if she loves the man and he loves her and tells her so, she must tell him. (5) Be very careful in your choice of a man that your parents object to.

Cornelia and Edith, Warren, Ark.—Girls of sixteen should not take nine mile surrey rides with young men at night unless they have a chaperon.

Millie Trent, Donaldsonville, La.—How can you possibly ask a young man to call on you when you do not have a speaking acquaintance with him?

Ethel and Irene, Henryville, Ind.—The hair is blond. (2) At nearly any drugstore you can get an almanac with a floral dictionary in it.

Too Shy, Winnipeg, Man.—A girl of nineteen should wait till she is twenty-one before she marries. If the man insists on your marrying now, you will have a great deal more trouble with him before one of you dies. I don't much like your young man if he wants you to be more forward than you are. Modesty is one of woman's sweetest traits.

Cousin Lillie, Joliet, Ills.—The hair is baby blond.

Mattie Bronser, Dover, Ind.—The very prettiest, inexpensive wedding presents are those in the various little articles of silver for the toilet, or desk, or table, or pocket.

Goldenrod, Praha, N. D.—There is no known reason why you or any woman should change her mind in the matter of loving. Men likewise. The best thing for you to do is to wait for a year to be sure that you do not love him. Mistakes sometimes follow haste, either in marrying or not marrying.

Bessie Babb, Cedar Grove, Tenn.—Thank you for the pleasant letter. As the dear old lady says, the world is in too great a hurry.

Josephine, Booneville, N. C.—A man of thirty-six is just the right age for a girl of twenty-four and you are silly to think of throwing him over because other girls say he is old. Marry him and be happy.

Atalanta, Glenlynn, Miss.—Dumas is considered standard. He is not "Unexceptionable" as you say. No mortal is. There are better books for girls than Dumas. (2) It is the proper thing to meet under your own roof. And tell him too that you are glad to see him there. That is hospitality. It is not under all circumstances correct for the lady to shake hands with strangers.

Bab, Duval, Fla.—Send the young soldier in Cuba a pretty match safe or a little silver pencil. Let it be something to carry in his pocket. The same answer applies to Popsy's question.

Rosebud, Marion, Ind.—Yes, true love is jealous, but not foolishly so. (2) A girl should never marry before she is twenty-one, and better, wait till she is twenty-five. (3) Only under extraordinary circumstances should a girl marry against her parents' wishes or in accordance with them. She should marry to suit herself or not marry as may be better. (4) An engagement should be short; that is less than a year. There ought to be at least seven years between a man and woman. (5) All days are alike for marrying except Sunday. The superstitions about days are foolish.

The Twins, North Judson, Ind.—Stamp collectors find the same pleasure in their collections that any other person does in any treasure he possesses. (2) The woman who marries because she loves the man stands a far better chance for happiness, rich or poor. Don't marry for money and happiness too. (3) It is not necessary for either to speak of starting, when an escort calls for the lady he is to take. The thing to do is to go. Would you expect to sit there all night waiting for each other to start?

Sorrowful, Morristown, Ind.—Two years is the proper time to wear mourning for father or mother. White may be worn after a year, or even earlier if the wearer is young. Second mourning follows the black. White and black is not exclusively for widows. (2) You should not ask a guest at your table to say grace unless you know he is accustomed to do so.

There, dears, all your questions are answered, and they are real natural girl questions which do me good to answer because they are so human and I like human people. May you have a fine turkey, each of you, at Thanksgiving and lots of other good things, and may you have very much besides to be thankful for. By, by, till the Chrfstmas month.

CONDUCTED BY REGULUS.

WINTER begins when the Sun touches his lowest point south of the Equator, which occurs this year at about two o'clock in the afternoon of the 21st day of December. At that moment of time the 14th degree of Taurus is on the eastern horizon and the 27th degree of Capricorn is culminating. The Moon is just above the horizon in the east; the Sun and Mercury are conjoined on the 9th cusp; Saturn is in the 8th; Herschel is conjoined with Venus in the 7th; Jupiter has set in the west and Mars is in the 4th, retrograde.

The New and Full Moon in December are eclipses. That of December 13, 1898, is a partial eclipse of the Sun and that of December 27, 1898, is a total eclipse of the Moon. The Sun is eclipsed in the 22nd degree of Sagittarius and the Moon is eclipsed in the 7th degree of Cancer.

The figures for the different phenomena do not show as favorably as could be wished. All point to increased mortality from heart, lung and liver diseases, and that of the last days of the year shows quite a degree of excitement in the land on account of increased prevalence of eruptive diseases among children. Particular vigilance is urged upon the sanitary authorities of our country, on this account, and also with reference to the health of the army. There are indications of some kind of an epidemic trouble among horses.

Mars retrograding in Leo in the 4th is indicative of strife and disorder involving the army; gives dry atmospheres and unusual heat for the season of the year, likely to give us a "green Christmas" and increase of feverish or eruptive diseases and many sudden deaths from heart disease, and unusual losses of property by fire and explosion.

Mars also points to some unusual excitement in France and Italy. The Church suffers some great loss, the clergy meets with opposition or loses some of the leading members. Mars stirs up animosities and gives violent disorder if not the sudden death of some illustrious persons in both France and Italy. The constituted authorities should be unusually alert against violence from anarchists or fanatics.

CELESTIAL CALENDAR FOR DECEMBER, 1898.

DECEMBER 1—Thursday. This month begins with quite an unfortunate day. The patience is short and the combative principle in man is peculiarly active and violence and contention are likely; matters now begun prove disappointing and result either in failure or dissatisfaction; important matters are best postponed. If this be the anniversary of thy birthday let special vigilance be exercised as this time is approached and passed for the avoidance, so much as possible, of sudden evils and misfortunes. Persons so born or who were born about the 15th of January, 25th of May, 18th of July, or 26th of November, of past years, should particularly shun these days in the beginning of the winter months for making any important beginning in their lives and be particularly watchful not to give cause for rupture of present existing business relations; should keep out of the way of harm from explosions, fires, machinery and animals; should favor themselves as to digestion and be prudent in their daily ventures.

2—Friday. Watch well thine expenditures of this day, being sure that necessity rather than whim prompts disbursements; the afternoon is the better part of the day.

3—Saturday. Begin thine exertions of this day with its dawn and urge all general business vigorously, pushing sales to the utmost; the day is peculiarly fortunate for contracts concerning building or for hiring or purchasing houses or lands, also for dealings in agricultural products and implements, building materials, coal, or metal ores; have surgical operations performed, consult thy dentist; institute legal proceedings; buy machinery; employ mechanics; and deal in hardware, artistic goods, chemicals and with cutlers, tailors, and all workers in metal or glass; choose the day generally for making beginnings in these classes of undertakings.

4—Sunday. One of the best Sabbath days of the month, especially so for the good and prosperity of church matters and for religious and moral improvement.

5—Monday. A fair day for literary work not concerned with poetry or the fine arts; the day does not favor the light and elegant occupations nor should any matrimonial engagement be formed at this time; dealings in fancy or artistic goods are best deferred.

6—Tuesday. An evil day for making commencement of any important work, particularly if it concerns real estate or mining. It is not favorable as a birthday anniversary and all persons claiming it or who were born about the 5th of March, June, or September, of past years, should be careful of serious pecuniary losses or impairments of health for several weeks to come; to many of these is due the caution that they shall be so guarded in their acts and so cautious in their associations as not to debase themselves or their good name and honor among their fellow men; let all such be on the alert against deceit or being misled into holding evil communications; for there is extreme danger that many of them will in the passing weeks "dip" into lower planes and spheres and become possessed to the doings of acts that besmirch the mind or reflect discredit upon the reputation. Many ladies so born have anxiety or unhappiness through the male sex; broken engagements or estrangements in parental or conjugal relations are likely to be now found in the experience of many are among the common effects of these conditions and ladies above indicated. The male sex so born should be unusually careful in their business ventures and diligent and faithful in forwarding and protecting the interests of those for whom they are acting, and very cautious not to give cause for business ruptures; many annoying disappointments are threatened to them during the winter months and they should beware of making changes in their business in such months. It will be better to "bear with the ills they have than to fly to others they know not of."

7—Wednesday. A more favorable day generally, though preferences are urged for the elegant pursuits; conditions encourage special activity in dealings in fancy goods, jewelry, perfumes, silks, and all articles of beauty and adornment; literary matters are not favored and correspondence of consequence is best postponed for a day or two.

8—Thursday. One of the best days of the month; bargain for lands and houses; make contracts for their improvement and deal with aged persons, the agricultural classes, and mechanics; surgical operations and chemical experiments generally succeed; consult thy dentist; travel, and trade in cattle, machinery, hardware, and cutlery; buy goods for trade and seek money accommodations.

9—Friday. Push business vigorously on this day; seek money accommodations; buy goods to sell again and transact business with bankers, lawyers, judges, and public functionaries.

10—Saturday. An evil day; form no hasty conclusions in business; litigation and contention are likely to interfere seriously with the happy outcome of affairs of magnitude or importance now begun; be not rash in thought or act and scrutinize carefully all business enterprises now presenting themselves; the afternoon hours are the best, but otherwise more than the ordinary amount of precaution is urged; bridle thy temper, keep out of quarrels and contentions and look out for fires. REGULUS cannot too strongly impress upon the minds of all persons born about the 28th of January, or April; the 2nd day of August or November, or the 11th day of March, June, September or December, of past years, the necessity for extreme caution in all their ventures in these passing weeks; let all such avoid, as much as possible, the chances for fires and contentions, also all acts inducing hurts and inflammations; the conditions are peculiarly unfavorable for children having such birthdays, being highly conducive to eruptive and acute febrile diseases; special care should be had for the prevention of scarlet fever, measles, chicken pox, diphtheria and all others of the class of eruptive troubles for two or three months to come; such diseases should be promptly treated at their first appearance and they should be jealously watched as they are likely to be unusually severe; it is to be hoped that conditions shall not be permitted to produce disease of epidemic proportions.

11—Sunday. A favorable Sabbath day.

12—Monday. Give preference to the forenoon for urging thy several ventures, but the progress of matters will be seriously checked as the day advances and the afternoon should not be taken for inaugurating any new enterprise; be sure to avoid any transaction connected with houses or lands or with persons concerned in business of such character.

13—Tuesday. Partial Eclipse of the Sun in early morning. Make no beginning in any matter of magnitude.

14—Wednesday. Begin early and improve every moment of this day for engagements with persons in the intellectual and literary pursuits. Aspirants for literary honors should make principal efforts at this time and take important steps of all kinds looking to their advancement and profit. Make intellectual efforts of magnitude, concern thyself with matters of study and education, make contracts and travel.

15—Thursday. Be in no haste to begin thy labors of this day and give preferences as much as possible, to the artistic pursuits; deal in fancy wares and articles of apparel, masical goods, and jewelry.

16—Friday. The middle hours of the day call for patience and suggest a bridle for the tongue and passions; have care in handling fire-arms, combustibles, and dangerous chemicals. Some bad fires, explosions and accidents are now likely.

17—Saturday. This is a fortunate day for all honorable pursuits; buy goods for trade; seek favor from persons in public office or in authority and conduct negotiations concerning money and with persons of wealth and prominence.

18—Sunday. An excellent day for improvement of the mind and for proper appreciation of the merits of literary productions; the day is not favorable for dealing with persons much advanced in years.

19—Monday. An indifferent day, discouraging applications for favor from public officials and the doing of things pertaining to houses and lands; look sharp at the expenditures at this time.

20—Tuesday. Push all business vigorously during this day, but particularly such as pertains to the mechanical pursuits and trades; travel, trade in cattle and metals, and deal with chemists, physicians, military men, and cutlers; electricians and persons in the inventive and ingenious pursuits are particularly favored.

21—Wednesday. Choose this day for urging all honorable business to the utmost; for buying goods for trade and money transactions generally; give preference to the forenoon hours for effecting engagements of consequence pertaining to houses and land or their improvement; also for dealing with farmers, contractors and builders, plumbers, ship-joiners and in agricultural implements and products.

22—Thursday. Be up before the Sun and employ every moment of the day until four in the afternoon; literary labors are performed with more facility from midnight till the noon of this day; have more than usual care in all money transactions and do not indulge in speculation in the afternoon hours, and see that loss from fire or explosion is not induced by carelessness as the day draws to its close.

23—Friday. Choose the first two-thirds of this day for literary pursuits and mental labors; do important correspondence and press sales of goods; as the day closes however, more mischievous and evil conditions prevail.

24—Saturday. A very favorable day generally for the pursuit of business and especially for dealings with public officials and persons of prominence in large corporations; domestic and musical matters are adversely affected in the evening.

25—Sunday. Christmas. The morning is excitable and patience and moderation are admonished; otherwise the day has an abundance of benevolence and conduces to the enjoyment of religious and moral elevation and intellectual improvement.

26—Monday. Have no dealings in real estate in the morning hours; avoid speculation during the middle of the day, and be careful what you sign during the last hours of the day when literary matters meet hindrances and embarrassments.

27—Tuesday. Total Eclipse of Moon. Give preferences to the forenoon for transactions with bankers and persons of means, and in money negotiations of all kinds

28—Wednesday. The conditions do not encourage dealings with mechanics or with persons in the dirty avocations or with real estate men, contractors, or shipwrights.

29—Thursday. The day is favorable for urging commercial transactions and such as depend upon mental labor; the early hours are especially favorable for literary matters and for prosecution of mathematical and scientific studies; let contracts affecting legal and educational matters be made; the evening is less fortunate.

30—Friday. Look to the purse in the forenoon; loan no money and gauge thine expenditures by thine actual needs; do not speculate, particularly by buying railway or mining stocks or shares; some unusual losses are apprehended for this time or some extraordinary misfortune in the financial world is apprehended for about this time; see that no chance is given for destructive fires and great losses therefrom in these passing weeks.

31—Saturday. The month closes with one of the best days for prosecution of commercial business; REGULUS particularly urges his friends in the intellectual pursuits to press their several vocations to the utmost and recommends the day equally for the merchant, tradesman and traveller; for change of residence and dealings with printers, booksellers, stationers, real estate men and counsellors; let the mind be employed to the fullest extent; let judges weigh testimony and decide important cases and lawyers take initiatory steps and urge proceedings in litigation of magnitude.

THREE HUNDRED PER CENT. PROFIT. A MONEY MAKER FOR AGENTS.

The ordinary store keeper can feel proud when he makes twenty per cent. on sales; but when you handle the Magical Sponge, which you will notice advertised in another column of this paper, you cannot make less than one hundred per cent. and can easily clear three hundred per cent. profit. It is the neatest and greatest seller ever seen and sells itself. Just look at a few orders within a few days and see how it goes. These are not selected orders, but a few picked out of the heap, all haphazard, just to give you an idea and encourage you in taking hold and winning your fortune. Here was Joshua Crosby, East Weymouth, Mass., ordered a gross, February 23rd, and on the 12th of March ordered another. That's nearly $52.00 clear (simply paid Exp. charges out of it), just for a little work done at odd times in a few days. Mrs. J. Cartwel, Milford, Ill., on April 2nd sent for 6 dozen and on the 7th sent for a whole gross. There's thirty-nine dollars cleared up in a few days. Almon L. Reed, Benton Station, Maine, sold a dozen. Annie T. Silvey, Stevensville, Mont., ordered five dozen in less than a month. Mrs. John Abbott, Georgiaville, R. I., had 3 dozen sent her March 19th, and on April 3rd had a whole gross. A. E. Bryson, Oakdale, Pa., a dozen one day and right after 3 dozen, and so on through a whole pile of correspondence and orders, all telling how easy it is to sell the Magical Sponge, and how anxious people are to get it when they see what it will do. Many agents after showing the work of the sponge, easily sell from 3 to one dozen sponges in an office, or a building, while it is no trouble to sell them on the street, in shops, factories and houses as fast as you can handle them. Remember that every sale means large profit and never less than one hundred per cent. clear, which just doubles your money, while you can with a little energy and push, make six dollars on every dollar invested. You will notice we give you a sample to start you if you send for a subscription to "COMFORT" to-day.

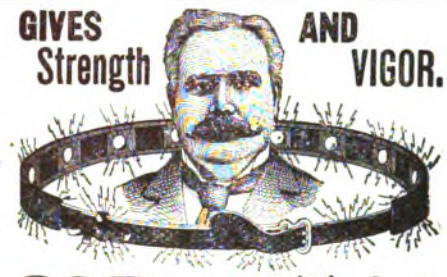
RESCUE FOR WEAK MEN

Prof. Jules Laborde's Wonderful French Preparation of Calthos that Restores Lost Manhood

5 Days' Trial Treatment ABSOLUTELY FREE by Sealed Mail

NO "C. O. D." OR "DEPOSIT" SCHEME

The great French remedy, Calthos, recently introduced in this country by the Von Mohl Co., of Cincinnati, Ohio, has attracted the attention of the entire medical profession because of the marvelous cures it has effected in cases of persons suffering from lost vitality. The Von Mohl Co., who are the largest importers of standard preparations in the United States, has adopted a liberal plan to reach the many thousands of men in this country who are sufferers from lost manhood and other forms of nervous debility. Over five thousand cures have been reported from the use of "Calthos" in a few months. The Von Mohl Co. offers to put "Calthos" in the hands of every sufferer free of any charge, the company paying the cost of packing, mailing, etc. A five days' trial treatment of "Calthos" will be sent free in a sealed package to all sufferers who write asking for it. All they require is that you take the remedy as directed.



When you read this notice, remember there is no trickery behind it. There are dishonest men in every walk of life, and there are many such who victimize weak men by blackmailing and C. O. D. schemes. Remember in particular that this offer is made by the Von Mohl Co., a company which is responsible and reputable in every sense of the word.

If you suffer from Lost Manhood (no matter how caused), Spermatorrhœa, Varicocele, Weakness of any nature in the Sexual Organs or Nerves, or if the parts are undeveloped or have shrunken or wasted away, "Calthos" will restore you. "Calthos" is a French discovery by Prof. Jules Laborde, famed in Paris as France's foremost specialist. "Calthos" is the only remedy recognized by the medical profession as a cure for weak men. It has the endorsement of the German and French governments, and is largely used in the standing armies of those countries.

"Calthos" is put before you on its merits alone. Try it and put it to the test. Try it free. Send us your name and address, and we will send you enough "Calthos" to last five days. It will be sent in a plain, sealed package by prepaid mail. In the quiet of your home you can try it and see what it does. It costs nothing to get this five days' treatment—not a penny. There is no security required—no C. O. D. scheme—no blackmailing propositions. All correspondence relating to the "Calthos" department of our business is strictly confidential.

We neither publish nor furnish testimonials. Address applications for trial treatment to THE VON MOHL CO., 102 B Cincinnati, Ohio. Largest Importers of Standard Preparations in the United States.

Men, Women and Things.

CONDUCTED BY JENNIE MELVENE DAVIS.

Whitelaw Reid is one of the best known members of the prominent peace commission who are to settle the difficult questions arising in this great war for principle. Like many men who have attained success, he claims the Buckeye State his birthplace. October 27, 1837, Xenia, Ohio, spell the alphabet of time and place for his birth. He is best known to Americans as the proprietor and editor-in-chief of the New York Tribune which position he has held since 1872. In his early youth he served the usual American apprenticeship at school teaching as superintendent of the graded schools in South Charleston, Ohio. When the Republican party was organized in 1856, he joined its ranks and "stumped" the State for Fremont the first nominee of the Republican party. At about this time he bought the Xenia News and in that paper he urged the nomination of Lincoln in 1860. At the outbreak of the Civil War he was City Editor of the Cincinnati Gazette but left his editorial duties to join the staff of General Morris in West Virginia. Later in the war he served on the staff of Gen. Rosecrans. During his service as a staff officer he furnished war news to his Cincinnati paper. For five years he was Librarian of the House of Representatives leaving that position in 1868 to become again a member of the editorial staff of the Cincinnati Gazette. Late in that same year he found Horace Greeley on the editorial staff of the Tribune and ever since that time he has been prominently identified with the great Republican newspaper. He has been offered the United States Mission at Berlin twice but each time declined the honor. In 1889, he became Minister to France and did much effective work for this country in securing a repeal of the French laws which prohibited the importation of meat from the United States. He resigned in 1892 returning to this country to receive the honor of a nomination to the vice-presidency. He was our special ambassador at the Queen's Jubilee in 1897. Mr. Reid's long experience in affairs, his knowledge of the situation and his personality make his appointment to this most important office a peculiarly fitting one.

Hall Caine is one of the prominent novelists of the world. It is three years ago since he was here in the interest of the international copyright law and these years have steadily added to his reputation. Hall Caine is the son of a blacksmith who had risen to the rank of a skilled ship mechanic. The first book that the boy remembers reading was one on the German Reformation with the lives of Luther and Melanchton. It was a ponderous book both in context and size but the boy carried it to the harvest field and pored over it with intense interest in the theological discussion. Once he actually lighted a candle so that he might finish the work. Candles were a forbidden luxury and he was severely reproved by his aunt with the words, "Candles lit! Candles! Wasting candles on men reading!" He seems to have been a serious boy with little interest in boyish games or sports but with an intense devotion to books. In fact the vein of tragic gloomy reality that pervades his books seems to have marked the boy. He attended school in Liverpool when his most marked characteristic was a fondness for reading Shakespeare. This he was often asked to do aloud and those readings caused him intense nervous agony. Books on history, philosophy, and theology were his favorite reading. He learned "by heart" the speeches of great parliamentary orators and these he would re-write from memory. At the age of fifteen he left school and was apprenticed to a land surveyor and architect. He showed no talent for this profession other than an ability to draw. A school geography published in England contains a map drawn by Hall Caine when he was but thirteen years of age. His first written work was a Life of Joseph written for a school competition. It was too long and so was not read by the committee. Before he wrote this he did as he always has since, read everything that could be found on the subject. He reads as he says "a whole library for each chapter." He soon drifted into magazine and newspaper work but his articles were deep and serious in tone. Rossetti urged him to become a dramatist. In view of this it is interesting to note that his late novel The Christian is dramatized and has been presented this fall in New York with great success. The Shadow of a Crime is one of his earliest novels and it was the dramatic possibilities in this book that led Rossetti to urge Hall Caine to become a dramatist. To this friend he also owes the suggestion that he should become the novelist of the Isle of Man. Manxland is world known now through the portrayals of Caine. He says himself of his method of writing that he writes the book in his head before he puts pen to paper. He visits every place that he describes, reads every book that relates to the subject. Around the central idea the incidents group rapidly. At five he wakens and goes over the chapter in his head. By seven he has it composed and then he spends an hour in revising it. Then he arises and writes it from memory as fast as his pen can move. He writes upon scraps of paper held on his knee. The rest of the day is spent walking, or lounging, but with his mind concentrated upon the book. He rarely writes more than fifteen hundred words a day. Among his best known books are The Scapegoat, A Son of Hagar, The Deemster, The Roddsman and The Christian. There is an utter lack of humor in his writing but a strongly dramatic turn and an inflexible determination to show moral cause and effect that renders them fascinating in a gloomy way.

The truth of the sentiment, "French history is always dramatic" is proven again and again by the incidents of French history. No incident since the mystery of the Man in the Iron Mask has arrested public attention more than the Dreyfus affair. The French Government seems about to be overturned through the matter and the whole civilized world is interested in the result.

Albert Dreyfus is an Alsatian Jew who was a captain in the 14th Regiment of Artillery in the French Army. He was detailed for services at the Information Bureau of the Minister of War. On October 15, 1894 he was arrested under the weighty charge of having sold secrets to a foreign power. A French detective claimed that he had found an incriminating letter at the German embassy in the handwriting of Dreyfus. Public sentiment in France had been aroused against the Jews through the columns of Libre Parole. Dreyfus had a brief military trial and was degraded from his rank and ordered to be imprisoned for life on Devil's Island which is a penal settlement off the coast of French Guiana. Here he lives in a hut, surrounded by an iron cage and receiving only such letters and news as passes through the hands of his jailors. He has asserted his innocence from the first. His wife has never ceased in her effort to obtain a new trial, and tragic and dramatic interest of the affair has continued to develop in spite of the refusal of the ministry to grant a new trial. The suicide of Col. Henry, with his admission that part of the evidence on which Dreyfus was condemned was forged, has led to a crisis in the government of France. It seems now that the trial must be re-opened. In the meantime Dreyfus is probably ignorant of the tide which has turned in his favor.

Ishbel, Lady Aberdeen, does not need her hereditary title or her high official rank to give her a place among the foremost women of the century. "She is a good woman" said Cardinal Manning of her and it is this goodness united with great executive ability that has made the name of Lady Aberdeen world known. She is Scotch and traces her name and ancestry back to the days when King Robert the Bruce gave a grant of land to his daughter Marjorie upon her marriage to a commoner. The family name Marjoribanks came from this fact and Ishbel Marjoribanks is a worthy descendant of the daughter of a king. She first saw Lord Aberdeen when she was but eleven years of age and in 1877 she became Lady Aberdeen. Among her most cherished possessions are a set of little silver coffee cups presented to her by General Gordon. She passed her honeymoon in Egypt and while going up the Nile met General Gordon. Lord Aberdeen is the head of the Gordon Clan and Gen. Gordon came to pay his respects to him as the head of his house. Lord and Lady Aberdeen entered at once upon their philanthropic schemes, for during their honeymoon they formally adopted five children. One of these, an Egyptian, was brought to England to be educated and is now a missionary in China. Lady Aberdeen began her work as an organizer by forming among the poor people on her estates in Aberdeenshire the "Onward and Upward Society." This society now has about 9000 members throughout the world. It has been called a combination of the Young Woman's Christian Association, Working Girls' Club and the Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Association. Lady Aberdeen claims descent from the O'Neils of Ireland and during the brief time that she inhabited the vice-regal palace at Dublin she became much interested in the Irish Industries Association. The Irish village at the World's Fair in Chicago was the outcome of Lady Aberdeen's effort to interest the public in Irish manufactures. The Irish lace in particular attracted much attention and forty-seven medals were awarded to the displays of the Irish village. The Woman's Liberal Federation with its 80,000 members has claimed Lady Aberdeen as its President. Lady Aberdeen believes firmly in woman's suffrage and is thoroughly interested in all the political problems of the day. The Liberal Federation was formed to sustain the interest of the Liberal Party but it has widened its sphere of active interest in all great questions of the day. Whatever questions may arise in regard to the industrial field for women find a sympathetic student in Lady Aberdeen. She is interested in all questions that bear upon the advancement of the race and is particular in all schemes relating to the development of opportunities for women. Lord and Lady Aberdeen were honored guests at Chautauqua during the past summer and many thousands of American women will regret Lady Aberdeen's departure from America.

Two of the great portrait painters of France have recently visited America—Boldini and Carolus Duran. The latter artist has become a great social lion and between the intervals of his portrait painting he has indulged his fondness for social attention. He can well afford to take some recreation for the prices charged for his work are enormous even in these days of substantial recognition of art. His charges are, for a full size bust $4000, for three-quarters length and for full length $8,000, for a child's portrait, a life size bust $3,000, three-quarter length $4,000, full length $5,000. For mother and child three-quarter length $10,000, full length $14,000. An American artist said of Duran "He is the most radical of French painters having created a French Revolution of his own in painting." Duran's motto is "Paint from life, imagination is a fool. There is nothing so beautiful as nature." Duran is sixty-one but in that time he has conquered the world of art. His real name is Charles Auguste Emile Durand. His father was a horse dealer of Lille, while his mother kept a Cafe that was patronized by the students. Their gifted son was born upon our nation's birthday in 1837. He began his art studies under Souchon director of the Art school of Lille. Duran worked his way on and from Paris went to Spain and Italy. Since then his course has been steadily upward. He is a genre and portrait painter and also a sculptor. In 1866, 1869 and 1870 he took first class medals; after receiving other medals he became a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor and in 1878 an officer of the Legion of Honor—one of the highest artistic distinctions in France. Among his best-known pictures are, Evening Prayer, The Victim of an Assassination, St. Francis of Assissi, A Child on the Banks of the Tagus, A Future Doge, A Burial and a Vision. His later work has been mainly in the line of portraits and many wealthy American women have gone to Paris in order that Duran might paint their portraits. His wife is the sister of a famous French actress Sophie Croizette. One of his first great successes was his portrait of his beautiful wife. He is a great teacher as well as a great artist and has numbered among his pupils men who had already attained distinction, but who aspired to learn the secret of the method that had raised Duran to his lonely altitude. Duran has been kept busy since his arrival in America. Posterity will know him best as the painter of beautiful women and children and of all the array of rich and delicate stuff that he loves to put in his portraits.

THE REVOLT AT SURETHING.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT BY HOWARD MARCUS STRONG.

Copyright, 1898, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher.

"GOD made the country, and man made the town"—self-evident and worn thread-bare by reason of vain repetitions. To have accredited the Almighty with the authorship of Surething would have been nothing short of sacrilege. Job Ward was guilty of perpetrating that particular blot on the face of nature—precisely speaking, the shifting sands of the Staked Plain.

Joe's inspiration had come in the shape of a baked clay canteen. This he had secured from an Indian Squaw, in exchange for a plug of "dog-leg" tobacco. He also acquired much information as to the exact location of the clay deposit that had furnished the material for the canteen.

For one whole week Job Ward gave his undivided attention to the study of the canteen and the little grains of yellow metal incorporated in its sides. Then he bade his friends an affectionate adieu, and launched himself into the trackless desert.

Job's acumen was proverbial, and in this venture he fully sustained his previous reputation. From that baked clay canteen sprung the mining town, Surething—and other lesser evils.

In the eyes of the law Job's claim was good; but in the opinion of the Indians he and his town simply encumbered the earth. Hence the continual presence of three officers and a handful of soldiers designated as company "B" of the 59th cavalry.

When Captain Clark, the commander of the post, was unexpectedly transferred to another station, he rejoiced exceedingly at his rare good fortune; and the company mourned his loss, while cursing a fate that forced them to vegetate in such a barren hole as Surething.

As the captain's orders were to proceed at once, he was obliged to give over his command to the senior lieutenant, until such a time as his successor should put in an appearance.

Lieutenant Buck had filled the exalted position of commandant for just eight days when the new officer arrived. With a few well-directed oaths the stranger announced himself as Captain Lucas, and exhibited his commission duly signed and sealed. One of his first remarks was a loudly avowed desire that they all might be consigned to the pit if he didn't give them a taste of what real soldiery was.

"He's the worst lookin' scab I ever see grafted onto the service," growled Sergeant Hall, as he eyed the new captain with evident disgust. "Blast my carcass if he don't seem more like a drunken private than a first officer."

And the opinion of Sergeant Hall seemed to be general among the company, and likewise over at the diggings. It was hard to understand how such an uncouth specimen had ever been able to work his way up to such a position. With his purple-veined nose, his unshaven face, and his badly-fitting uniform, he was certainly not a person to command much respect from his subordinates.

However, if Captain Lucas was lax in regard to his personal appearance and conduct, he evened up matters by working the men like dogs. The lieutenants remonstrated, but were cursed into silence. He would call out the company in the broiling sun and put them through every evolution in the tactics. If any dared exhibit signs of insubordination, he treated them to the toe of his boot or the flat of his sword. Following this would come ten days in the guard-house, on bread and water.

"I reckon it's about time we were sendin' him a drum-head," suggested one of the men, after a particularly trying day. "Strikes me things have gone on in this style 'bout long enough. What do you think, boys?"

It was evident that the boys thought so, too; for within a few days the drum-head was laboriously engrossed. It read, with many heavy flourishes:

"CAP. LOWCUSS: We are just about sick of you and think you had better seek a change of climate. Surething is always warm, but it can be made warmer. In fact it's too unhealthy a place for you to live in."

Around the margin of this startling document were inscribed the names of the entire company, with the exception of the lieutenants. Several skulls and daggers were also added, by way of embellishment.

Soon after "taps" the "drum-head" was slipped beneath the captain's door. All around the dark parade the men were crouching in the deep shadows, anxiously awaiting the result of their rash experiment.

As the captain was sitting up with his glass and bottle, they did not have long to wait. His door flew open, and his hulking figure was sharply silhouetted by the light of a lamp and the blaze from a few sticks of wood on the hearth. Then his hoarse voice bellowed out an order that reached every ear within the enclosure.

"I'm afraid you're in for it now, boys," said Lieutenant Buck, while the company was forming into line. "I'll prefer charges against him, though: he's drunk as a dog."

"He'll get worse not charges," growled a surly voice; "'less there's lead on top of 'em."

With steady step the little company marched across the parade, halting abruptly before the captain's door.

There was a moment of suspense. Suddenly the intoxicated captain emerged from within, bearing a blazing pine brand spitted upon the point of his sword.

"He'll spile the temper o' that sword, and make it worse than his own," some one muttered.

A half-audible laugh ran down the line, reaching the ear of the angry captain.

With insane fury he screamed forth an oath, and springing forward, thrust the burning brand into Lieutenant Buck's face.

From somewhere in the front ranks a rifle butt shot out with unerring accuracy, felling the captain like a log.

"It's nothing, boys, it's nothing," said Lieutenant Buck, groping around blindly. "I'll be all right in—" and he fell heavily by the side of his unconscious assailant.

The company broke ranks in disorder. Some of the men hastily carried the lieutenant to his room and summoned the surgeon. Others threw themselves upon the captain and dragged him upon the ground to the guard-house.

It was near morning when the surgeon crossed the parade to where the men were silently grouped before an iron-barred door.

"Boys," said he, with deep emotion, "poor Buck will never be able to see again. The cursed brute has blinded him."

Without a word the prison door was swung open, and two men entered. There was a short scuffle and some swearing. Then they reappeared with the captain, his hands pinioned behind him and a noose around his neck.

"I reckon you'd better not witness it, Doc." suggested one of the men; "we're takin' all the responsibility. And then it ain't goin' to be a pretty sight, neither."

As the surgeon moved away from the little band, they started for the rear gate of the corral. A horse was brought out from the stables, and the rope around the doomed man's neck tied to the animal's tail.

Half a mile away from the white-washed enclosure of the garrison, the cowering victim's feet were bound together, and the bridle slipped from the horse. A dozen bayonets tore the flank of the vicious brute, and with a terrified bound it was gone, a helpless, shapeless thing dragging at its heels.

The following day a man in rags, and mounted upon an old crowbate, rode into the garrison at Surething.

"Call the officer in command," he said to the guard at the gate.

The junior lieutenant appeared and eyed the stranger suspiciously.

"Captain Lucas, at your service," said the ragged individual, saluting.

The lieutenant stared nervously.

"I'm not surprised," said the captain, pleasantly; "you see I was held up about a month ago, and have just got over a bullet through the arm. A rancher kindly took me in and dressed my wound. The villain that waylaid me not alone relieved me of my horse and uniform, but of my papers as well."

Still the lieutenant was silent.

"I have sent a statement of my case to headquarters," continued the captain, "and I will undoubtedly have my credentials within a week. In the meantime, what have you to say?"

The lieutenant had a great deal to say, and he finally told the captain of the terrible tragedy that had just been enacted.

"He was the same man that robbed me, without doubt," Captain Lucas said, after listening to the strange story. "But I can't understand where he picked up such a knowledge of army discipline."

A few days later a detachment of cavalry arrived to relieve the garrison at Surething.

"It's a mighty queer thing," related one of the new men, as they all gathered around the mess table; "comin' along the trail yesterday, we drove the buzzards off a busted carcass; and who do you think it could be?. Bless me if it wasn't old Major-General Billy Dogg, late deserter from this here same company. 'Rest his bones', says we, 'for that's all there'll be o' him by sundown.'"

"W'at was his rank?" questioned Sergeant Hall, with apparent unconcern.

"Billy was so rank he outranked 'em all, comrade," replied the soldier, laughing loudly. "He was a drunken private in ball an' chain, till he sifted one day. How he came in such a shape as we found him, I ain't prepared to say. An' may God have mercy on his good-for-nothingness."

"Amen," said the sergeant.

Although the main facts of the case were generally understood in army circles, it is needless to say that the War Department never received official notification of the revolt at Surething.

The Mystery of the Caldwell Duel.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT BY C. H. DOUGLAS.

THAT weapon is a memento of the most interesting case that ever came under my observation," remarked my friend Carpenter, as he showed me one after the other the relics that adorned the walls of his library.

"What is it?" I asked. We had paused before a long bamboo rod hung vertically at one side of the fireplace. "It looks as though it might be a part of an old-fashioned fishing pole."

"It is a device," he replied, "used by several savage tribes in different parts of the two hemispheres, but of course only in tropical countries where the reeds grow. This particular style is found among the natives of the headwaters of the Amazon." He had taken it from the hook where it was suspended, and after inspecting it handed it over to me. I examined it minutely, in turn, and found it to all appearances what I had at first pronounced it, a simple length of bamboo perfectly straight and some five or six feet in length. I returned it to Carpenter and waited impatiently for an explanation. There were few places he had not visited, and little he had not seen; indeed in his younger days before he had settled down to a quiet home life with his family he had played the part of a modern knight errant, roaming the world over as the spirit moved him and winning friends at every hand by his cleverness and the display of his brilliant faculties.

"Do you give up?" he said, picking with finger and thumb first at one extremity and then at the other of the pole, and producing from each end successively a small wooden plug whose presence had masked a cylindrical hole bored into each end parallel to its length.

"Go on," I said, piqued at his deliberate manner. "I am impatient."

"Of course," he said, sitting on the table and toying with the mysterious weapon, "you cannot remember what conditions prevailed before the civil war, and the reading that you have done has served only to form some imperfect ideas. Those of us who have lived that long are surprised, when we think of it, at the contrast between the customs of to-day and those which held before the Rebellion. Especially is this true as regards the South.

"The strong hand of the Federal Government which dominated those states during the reconstruction period forever blotted out the common practice of duelling. I say common, for though even at that time it was carried on contrary to the laws, it was carried on nevertheless. A fancied wrong, a blow, an insult, a hot word, almost any little pretext was sufficient; then the seconds met and arranged the particulars, the meeting took place, usually with the added presence of a surgeon or two, and the cause of honor was vindicated. Sometimes the result was a stab or a minor gunshot wound; at others one or even both of the combatants suffered death. In the former case the consequences were a scar or two; in the latter, a funeral. And that was all, for no one could be found to enforce the law.

"In the year 1858, I had come to Charleston at the height of the social season, armed with letters of introduction that opened the doors of some very nice people. A month or so passed by and besides making a number of acquaintances I had accumulated a rather unwelcome notoriety through two or three little matters in which I had volunteered my services, and which the newspapers had magnified and distorted.

"On the particular evening I mention I was sitting clad in evening dress in my apartments, wishing heartily for bedtime, and this under rather peculiar circumstances. There was to have been a reception at the home of Seville Caldwell, a rich planter, but as that very afternoon Caldwell had been killed in a duel with his cousin and next door neighbor, the reception was of course put off.

"It was about half-past nine or perhaps a little later when a caller was announced. By the time I had thrown off my dress coat and donned a loose blouse, two elderly gentlemen were ushered in. I recognized them both as officers in the United States army whom I had met once or twice since coming to the city. One, Major Cilly, stepped aside and made room for his companion, Colonel Callahan, in command of one of the forts—I have forgotten its name, but it lies abreast of Sumpter on the south.

"'You a' no doubt fully conve'sant with the details of the unfo'tunate affai' between the cousins Caldwell,' began the colonel, after a formal bow from each of my callers.

"I placed seats for them, remarking that I knew little of the matter but considered it a very sad affair.

"'And mo' so,' rejoined the colonel, 'as it was wholly unexpected and might have been avoided. It is inexplicable.'

"'Little sho't of pe'plexing,'' put in the major.

"They had both declined the chairs, and stood awkwardly, appearing very much agitated. I thought it was simply the outcome of the duel that troubled them.

"'The cousins Caldwell, the majo' and myself we' boyhood companions,' went on the colonel, 'and while we have had diffe'ences at times ou' relations have been fo' the most pa't amicable.' Major Cilly nodded affirmatively. 'Yeste'day afte'noon Seville Caldwell and his cousin Anson Caldwell had a slight dispute ove' wine (the colonel coughed apologetically), and having said ce'tain ungentlemanly things in the presence of the othe's agreed to meet at once. I was deputized to act fo' Seville, and the majo' he' fo' Anson. We chose the place—a spot just down the bay—and believing that the me' discha'ge of fi'e-a'ms would suffice, as you know it usually does in mild cases, we decided to load the pistols only with powde'.'

"I had seen up to this time nothing but the ordinary details of a common duel, but now I began to catch the drift of the colonel's narrative, and I quickly surmised what had brought them there.

"Questioning them in turn I soon had the story complete; how they expected to bring the combatants together, wind up the affair, and return in time for the reception. As a matter of form a surgeon had been engaged to accompany the party, and, as a non-partisan, to him had been intrusted the care of the weapons, and the duty of giving the signal to fire. When the men were placed, (according to the colonel's account) he and the major, believing that everything was well, were buttoning their gloves preparatory to returning to the carriages. At the first signal the weapons were brought to position; the command to fire was given, and both weapons cracked. The two duellists stood facing each other. The colonel approached Seville Caldwell to suggest that he shake hands with his cousin and call the quarrel off. To his surprise he saw his principal slowly raise one hand and press it against his head; then he swayed, and crashed to the ground, and lay motionless. All four of the others ran to him and raised him up, but his eyes were glazing, and every muscle in his body seemed stretching and straining. The surgeon made a hasty examination and a bleeding wound was discovered in the white skin of the forehead just over the right temple.

"'Now how, in the name of Heaven, do you explain it?' concluded the colonel. 'The majo' and myself a' positive that the pistols we' not loaded with ball. We a' at ou' wits ends, and could think of nothing but coming to you. You know that little matte' of Mrs. General McClintock's pea'l necklace has given you no little notoriety—I should say fame.'

"I smiled; which might have been because of what the colonel had said, or what he had meant, or what I was thinking about him, but the case was interesting and I was anxious to know more about it. On inquiry I was told that the undertaker had been sent for and doubtless even now had charge of the body. We left the house together and started on foot to the Caldwell residence. Both of the old gentlemen were depressed and not inclined to talk, and I took advantage of the silence to review the facts. The two principals had fired at each other with pistols, loaded by the two seconds. These gentlemen claimed that no bullet had been used. The only other party to the affair was the surgeon who had given the signal to fire, and who had charge of the weapons.

"I asked how the choice of the two pistols had been determined. They said that the surgeon had handed one to each combatant without resorting to lot, or even allowing them a selection. Had the surgeon seemed surprised when Seville Caldwell fell? No, he had not. But then, as he did not know that the seconds had agreed to use blank charges, there was no reason why he should be surprised. I asked if the surgeon and the deceased planter were known to each other. Only a slight acquaintance, they believed. The surgeon was a young man and comparatively little known. Had he been paying his attentions to Miss Caldwell, the daughter of the house? Yes, they had heard something to that effect; mere gossip, probably. Was her father favorable? It was doubtful if he knew anything about it; he had probably never given the young man a thought.

"We arrived at the big, dark house and were admitted by a gray-haired old negro who trembled and snuffled in a way that would have brought tears to your eyes. The body had just been laid out, and removing the cloths from the face the undertaker pointed out the wound. It was small, almost insignificant, and seemed to have been made by a glancing rather than a penetrating blow. A brief examination convinced me that the bone had not suffered; beyond that I could make nothing out of it. I noticed particularly, however, that the lips and nostrils were turning a bluish tint, as though decomposition had already set in. Reverting to the surgeon again I asked whether it was reasonable to suppose that if Mr. Caldwell had known of his intention respecting his daughter he would have approved. The colonel said he thought not; besides there was another claimant for the young lady's hand, the nephew of Mr. Caldwell whose suit was favored by his uncle but not by the young lady herself.

"On descending again to the first floor we encountered the young man in question. He was rather handsome and stood well among the people of Charleston's military society. For my own part, although I had met him frequently I had never succeeded in conquering the feeling of dislike that I had experienced at our first meeting.

"Major Cilly suggested going next to the scene of the duel. Young Caldwell offered to accompany us, and stepped out to order the carriage. He appeared to me to be much under the influence of liquor. On the road I asked a number of questions concerning the surgeon, and Caldwell seeing the direction of the interrogation, supplied some valuable information about his antecedents, professional practice, character and habits of life.

"After a time we arrived at the site of the duel, a level strip of river bottom fringed with trees. The open expanse was brightly lighted by the moon. As we alighted from the carriage I tripped over some object that had apparently fallen by the roadside. Stooping and picking it up it proved to be a bamboo pole—this that I hold in my hand. Caldwell offered to take it from me, with rather more warmth, I thought, than the occasion demanded. I declined, and using it for a walking stick followed the older gentlemen through the trees skirting the battle ground.

"I inquired where Anson Caldwell had stood, where his cousin had stood, where the seconds had been posted, and particularly the point from which the surgeon had given the signal. All this was explained with the most painstaking detail. 'I am surprised that the bullet should have taken effect in the head,' I observed. 'It is customary among most duellists to fire at the breast.'

"'Miste' Anson Caldwell told me,' said Major Cilly, 'that he fi'ed at his cousin's pistol a'm.'

"'Is he a good shot?'

"'One of the best in the city!'

"I had been watching young Caldwell covertly. He seemed to be in search of something on the ground, and was wandering carelessly up and down and glancing from side to side. Just at that instant I caught sight of a peculiar object lying in the grass near the position which the unforunate Seville Caldwell had held. I stooped for it, and young Caldwell spied it at the same time. It was a reed about the size of a lead pencil, weighted at one end and sharpened to a point. His fingers closed on it and he said with considerable more agitation than he had shown over the bamboo pole, 'Let me see it!' at the same time jerking with main strength. I gripped it the tighter. His face flushed angrily, and with a muttered curse he jerked again. His fingers slipped and the sharp point scratched across the back of his hand, leaving a narrow red streak. For an instant he stood and stared at the wound; I was prompted to apologize for the injury. Then the color all left his face and into his eyes came a most terrible expression of unutterable despair. He started to run wildly, and fell; stumbled up again, and fell again; shrieked, rolled his head from side to side, grovelled with his face to earth, twisted and writhed. Then he broke into words and prayed to God, to the devil, besought heaven and hell for a day, an hour; screamed that he was not fit to die; raised himself on his hands and dragged his lower limbs, which were now all paralyzed, after him like the slimy worms you sometimes see in damp places.

"We ran to him as soon as surprise released us; but there was nothing we could do for him. Now he had sunk back to the ground. 'The will!' he cried, trying to get an envelope from an inside pocket. 'Uncle made it in favor of Ethel and me. In a few days he would have heard about me and changed it. I killed him! I killed him so he could not change it. It was the blow gun and the poisoned arrow I brought from Brazil.—There is no escape.—It was such an opportunity—the duel—they would think it was a bullet.'

"And then the blue tint gathered around his lips and nostrils and he flattened out and died. I threw the arrow into the depths of the river, and we gathered up the body of the murderer, executed by his own engine of death, and all rode back into the city to the house where the dead uncle lay.

"I wish," concluded Carpenter, "that I could illumine this gloomy story by adding that Ethel Caldwell and the young surgeon, on whom my false suspicion fell, were happily married; but I left Charleston a week or so later and of course that was too soon after death had so heavily visited the household, to follow with a wedding."

THE FAVORITES OF TIME.

How the Matron Preserves Her Maiden Beauty.

Has old Father Time his favorites? It would seem so. Two young girls, sisters or schoolmates, assume the responsibilities of wedlock at the same time. They are equally young, equally fair. They walk in even step with Time for a few years, and then they are so different in appearance that they might pass for mother and daughter instead of women of equal age.

As a matter of fact Time has no favorites; he is kind to those who are kind to themselves. The younger looking woman will tell you she does not know how it is that she keeps her youth and fairness, she uses no cosmetic, no powder, no paint. The woman who looks so much older will say, "I'm obliged to use paint and powder, I have to cover up my yellow skin and hide these wrinkles." If you probe a little deeper into the secrets of these women, you will find that the youthful one has learned that the best cosmetic is health, and that there can be no general health for the body which is hourly undermined by the local ill-health of the delicate female organs. Knowing this she has taken prompt means to cure the disagreeable drains, the bearing-down pains, and the inflammations and ulcerations, which to a greater or less extent affect most women who experience the tremendous change which by marriage and motherhood is wrought on the distinctly feminine organs.

The older appearing woman will tell you the common story of constant and useless doctoring for backache, for female weakness, for debilitating drains. Inflammation like a fire burns up her strength. Ulceration like a leech saps her vitality. Nature cannot make a bright eye and a pure complexion without rich, pure blood. This woman's blood flows sluggishly along the canals of the body, like some oozy, slimy current, whose motion barely keeps it from utter stagnation.

Beauty is every woman's birthright. A healthy woman is always beautiful. This secret of health and beauty for every woman lies in the recognition of the plain truth that where there are local diseases of the organs distinctively feminine, there can be no health and beauty while these debilitating, life-sapping ailments continue.

"But," comes the natural question "can these diseases be cured?" It is no wonder women ask the question in view of the failures of ordinary practitioners. Hundreds of thousands of such cases have in the past thirty years been referred to Dr. R. V. Pierce, chief consulting physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., and although the majority are chronic cases aggravated by injudicious and ignorant treatment, yet the great record stands that of thousands of such suffering women ninety-eight out of every hundred have been entirely cured.

"I feel it a duty to inform you that I had been a sufferer for many years from nervousness with all its symptoms and complications," writes Mrs. O. N. Fisher, 1861 Lexington Avenue, New York, N. Y. "I was constantly going to see a physician or purchasing medicine for this or that complaint as my troubles became unbearable. In the spring of 1897 my husband induced me to try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. After taking one bottle and following your advice I was so encouraged that I took five more bottles of 'Favorite Prescription' and then I did not take any more for several weeks as I felt so much better, but still I was not completely cured. I commenced taking it again and felt that I was improving faster than at first. I am not now cross and irritable, and I have a good color in my face; have also gained about ten pounds in weight and one thousand pounds of comfort, for I am a new woman once more and your advice and your 'Favorite Prescription' are the causes of it, coupled with your 'Pleasant Pellets' which are not to be dispensed with. I took eight bottles of the 'Prescription,' the last time, making fourteen in all, and will not take any more unless you so advise, for I do not see as I need it. I have often told my friends how I was cured, and have been no little surprised to learn how many of them have also used Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription with great benefit. I have induced several to try it and have heard that they were much pleased with the results."

The record of such cures is unimpeachable, as is the fact that they have been enjoyed by ninety-eight per cent. of the women who have tried Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Any sick or ailing woman can consult Dr. Pierce by letter without charge. By this method there is no subjecting of the patient to the embarrassing questions, offensive examinations, and obnoxious local treatments which frighten so many modest women away from the door of help. You can write freely, frankly, fully, keeping nothing in reserve because your letter will be read in private and all its confidences will be held sacred. You can write without fee as without fear.

There is no alcohol, whisky or other stimulant in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It is equally free from opium and all narcotic drugs, and preserves its virtues in any climate without the aid of syrup or sugar.

The cure of Mrs. Fisher was accomplished by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Her cure is but the type of hundreds of thousands. If you want a like cure you'll find it in "Favorite Prescription" only and not in a substitute. If you want a cure you don't want a substitute. You should make any substituting dealer see that as you see it.

A keen observer of human nature recently said: "I mistrust the druggist who endeavors to dissuade me from buying the medicine I had in mind on entering his store. My fear is that he may change my doctor's prescription to make it better suit his convenience and selfish interests." The moral is, patronize the dealer who respects your judgment and gives you exactly what you call for.

One of the best books of the day is Dr. Pierce's great work, "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser." 1008 pages and over 700 illustrations. CHRISTMAS IN EDEN.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT BY MARGARET BROWNSON.

Copyright, 1898, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher.

It was recess time on the fifth floor of that world famous journal, the New York Daily Globe, and in the room set apart for the Woman's Department the queen was holding audience. Not that the young editor—who had put away sentimentality with her five years in newspaperdom—so named the noon gathering of the floor's masculine forces in her especial province. But to-day the figure of speech was all but real. For twenty-four hours Miss Aldrich was holding a position that corresponded in the world journalistic to that of the Czar of all the Russias among nations. In short she, as editor-in-chief, had piloted to overwhelming success the great Woman's Charity Edition of the New York Globe—an edition that, as the Exchange Editor now put it, was "manned, from telegraph editor to office girl, by the Eternal Feminine culled from the flower of New York's Women Journalists."

"And, therefore, Bradley, under the ban of your disapproval, I suppose," continued that champion of Miss Aldrich's prowess, to the man at his side, "it's because he believes woman's place is the 'safe, sweet corner by the household fire,' that the Oracle remains dumb."

Miss Aldrich put out an admonishing hand with a negative, birdlike motion of her bright brown head. If the dark, middle-aged Westerner, whose farseeing editorials had won this expressive office nom de plume, withheld his meed of praise she certainly would not have it extracted by force, she told herself, with a certain tense hold upon her mouth.

The Oracle drew himself up as though with an effort. "I beg your pardon. Yes, certainly, I congratulate Miss Aldrich on having got out an edition of the Globe that's outselling the regular sheet two to one, and has already netted the biggest contribution of the year to the Fresh Air Fund." His phrases were as exact as those of a child reciting for marks. "But to tell the truth," he went on, with a sudden confidential openness, "my mind wasn't with the New York Globe just then. It was with journalism in Eden."

"Eden! Lucky fellow," observed the Star Reporter, with a meaning glance down at the city square, seething like a human caldron this humid August day. "Come, I scent a story; let's have it."

"You're welcome to the story—such as it is," said the Oracle, settling back again, "but the Eden I speak of—well, it's about as far from the original one as any place on the map. A coal mining town it was, in—no matter what state in the West; and the grime from the mines was everywhere so that the 'face of Nature' that people talk about, was one gigantic smutch. In winter it was worse, for the snow hardly fell before it was smirched as if from a sooty lamp. Then the houses were of the packing-box, run-up-in-the-night fashion, built on stilts most of them, as the river when it was high had a pleasant way of taking possession of cellars.

"Not an ideal place for a man to take his young wife to, but the woman I'm thinking of—well—she'd been used to solid country comfort, but I suppose she loved him enough so that she thought nothing of 'making his people her people and his gods her gods.'

"It's a way women have—in a new country," he mused with faraway eyes. "As for the man," the speaker continued, "he probably thought the sun, moon and stars put together shone just for giving similes of what she brought into his life. He was a bit of a poet—in his heart—though he never got beyond prose in writing. He was a newspaper man, you see."

"Ah-h!" came in a long drawn note of appreciation from the group. Only Miss Aldrich sat without a word, her eyes fixed on the glaring white partition, her hands lying listless in her lap.

"Yes," continued the speaker, "one of the old-fashioned sort. Worked his way up from the printer's case until he'd saved enough to set up for himself. Then he prospected around until he found the plant suited to his heart and pocket—the Eden Weekly Gazette, with a circulation of eight hundred copies at one dollar a year; quite an income—on paper.

"The office wasn't exactly metropolitan," went on Mr. Bradley, with a smile. "There were no elevators or speaking tubes, or departments or big presses. In fact the entire establishment those two took possession of consisted of a four room cottage. In three of these the young people ate and slept and cooked. The fourth was private office and editorial room in one. And here the man performed the duties of editor, reporter, and business manager combined, with only a boy to run the hand press.

"It seemed a good deal to him until he reflected that his wife not only baked and brewed and swept and dressmaked and turned tailor into the bargain, but even managed to 'get her second wind' in the evening, so that she could play on the melodeon that had been her father's wedding present, until the man almost forgot that eight hundred subscribers on paper were very different from three hundred who paid cash in advance and five hundred who paid in promises—or produce. In Eden, you understand, the editor, like the minister must, for value received, accept with a 'thank you' anything from pork to potatoes. As these transactions were regulated not by the need but by their subscribers' abundance, it was alternately feast time and famine, as the man said laughingly, with these two babes in the woods.

"But by and by there came a day when famine threatened in reality. One gray evening in early December the young husband came into the house with a look on his face the wife had never seen there before. It was the look of a man who had felt a blow in the dark.

"'A rival paper,' he said, briefly, 'plenty of capital, presses run by machinery, staff of four; the proprietors are to use it as a political weapon and don't care for expense. Mary you've married a failure. Fate is driving me against the wall.'

"And the wife?—well, never mind what she said. It was just one of those heaven-sent things that such women have for such times.

Anyway it put heart in the man; and before the evening was past he was armed to fight the invaders.

"'I must increase the size of the paper, Mary, and hustle around for more county news,' he said that night; 'and, what's more, I'm going to get out a Christmas number, double size, history of the town, reminiscences of old settlers, and all that. Oh, we'll win the day yet, love, never fear.'

"Now there's an end to the elasticity even of India-rubber strength and courage. Before this the man had been burning the candle at both ends. Now he attacked it in the middle. Day after day saw him tramping around town and county to interview old settlers. Night after night he sat in the grimy office, writing upon those precious articles for the Christmas number. And day after day, the wife saw the lines deepen on that dear face.

"There was no time for the melodeon now. Even the wife had turned her hand to typesetting. But the hardest task must have been the silent one. For not by word or action must she show the fear of that shadow darkening her husband's eyes.

"For to the man it seemed as though poverty and failure had taken misty form and stood over him. And presently there came a night when he heard their voices in his ears and cried out with a mighty cry.

"'Typhoid fever,' the doctor said, when summoned. And then followed a long dim interval in which the man knew neither day nor night, only tossing with thirst and pain and from time to time a loved face shining through a grey mist. If only he could throw off that intolerable weight and get to his work! That was the burden of his soul's cry. 'The paper, I must get it out, I must!' he would murmur; and then the mist would close over him again.

"It was Christmas Day when he awoke. The sun shining through the window of his bedroom fell on the wreath of evergreen against the pane, on a plate heaped with oranges and grapes standing on the table by his bedside ('a subscription,' he murmured faintly), and then—with a sick doubt he turned to the wall and shut his eyes. 'The fever,' he said wearily. 'It will disappear when I look again.' But when he turned back eyes staring incredulously, It had not disappeared, neither did It vanish into thin air when he put out his hand weakly for the reassurance of touch. When the wife crept in five minutes later she found her husband propped up in bed, the tears rolling down his cheeks and dropping upon the Christmas number of the Eden Weekly Gazette!

"Yes, there it was, historical articles, old settlers' reminiscences, extra county news, even a Christmas editorial, very crude as to composition but breathing such 'peace and good will to men' as to make one forget that the sentences were all wrongly put together and the grammar not above reproach. As for the printing that was very queer indeed, with one letter in every five upside down and commas and periods wildly interchanged. But still the printing was printing, and the paper a paper—and not a myth.

"How did she do it? Only the God who inspires women at such times knows. But that day the extra number captured the entire county. When the would-be proprietors of the rival journal came to spy out the land they found Eden so devoted to those two youngsters that the newcomers were all but stoned out of town. And I can tell you that when that whole story leaked out—for it did someway—the townsfolks just raced with each other to put up good silver dollars for the next year's subscription."

"And they lived happily ever after?" said the Caricaturist.

"The woman died a year later," said Mr. Bradley quietly. "You see she wasn't ever rewarded by—by seeing the germ she'd planted grow to be a tree. But—well, you may call her work a failure if you like. It never was heard of beyond the county limits; but to me the poor paper that gave back hope to a hopeless man was the grandest 'Woman's Edition' on record, and the charity that has made all womankind blessed to him was the truest charity."

Miss Aldrich rose flushing. "You are doubtless right," she said with a proud little catch in her voice, "and we newspaper women—our success is merely one of personal ambition. But you must excuse me, for I have an important engagement at one."

Ten minutes later, standing in the cool recesses of the big market and mechanically noting some quite unnecessary information about artichokes and tomatoes, she felt the catch swell almost to a sob. Had he known, had he guessed, she thought, of that glimmering sunsetting in her heart? And had he taken this way to instruct her as to his ideal woman? Indeed, was it not of the wife of his youth that he had spoken with that new look in his eyes? After all, except that he had worked his way from the printer's case, respected and admired from the lowest round of the ladder, how little she had heard of his history in that whirling world of journalism; she was turning to go when some one towered between her and a pile of squashes.

"Miss Aldrich"—it was Mr. Bradley, but not as she had known him. This man had eager eyes and a strangely moved face. "Miss Aldrich," he repeated, as they passed into the refuge of an empty stall. Surely you could not think that my story reflected—that I meant to—that I don't appreciate you. Don't you know that I heard of your self-sacrifice, of the sisters you supported so long, that I admire and believe in your abilities? It was because I thought them meant for something so much better than this grind that I spoke as I did—of my little sister, Mary. You reminded me of her somehow.

"But now you must listen to another story."

But the other story, told in the butter and egg corner of a big market is not for publication. Indeed, it is still "running" in a cottage among the hills of New Jersey; it was in that cottage that Mrs. Bradley wrote the tender sketches from real life that made so much success last year.

But only six people understood why the volume bears the dedication "To the Editor of the First Woman's Edition."

IN HIS GOLF STOCKINGS.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT BY HELEN M. WINSLOW.

I GO first," she said.

"You are always first with me." He leaned on his driver and she looked unconscious. What a magnificent drive she had! There wasn't another girl he knew who could swing a club like her.

Away went the ball, straight toward the last hole. "It's your turn now," she said looking straight into his eyes.

"Millie," he began, "you are always first in my thoughts as you are in heart; I love you."

The girl flushed and turned her eyes away. "We shall be late to lunch if you don't hurry," she said. "Don't spoil the game."

"Lunch be—well, no matter." He threw down his drive. "Millie, you've got to answer this question sooner or later; you've seen it; you knew I loved you; ever since we were children?"—but Millie Thornton was ten yards away hunting for her ball.

"If you say another word," she called back, saucily, "I'll drop the game right where we are; that would be a pity for we are so evenly matched."

Jack Brereton struck viciously at the ball perched exasperatingly on its tee; the sand scattered in all directions and the ball rolled leisurely to one side.

A ripple of laughter floated back on the sharp December air. "It counts," she called and her own lofter skillfully sent her ball flying out of the last hazard.

Another vigorous dive at the ball on the last tee, and Jack Brereton suppressed an unpolished exclamation. There was scarcely any need of it, however, for by this time his opponent was beyond hearing.

"It's of no use!" he muttered to himself. "She's beating me and fairly, too. I'm rattled; but never mind, she's got to answer my question, yet."

"What are you doing back there?" called Millie; "I've only another stroke to go out on. Give up?"

Jack nodded. He might give in this time, but this wasn't the main question. Indeed he intimated as much when she came running back, the game ended, her cheeks glowing and her eyes shining like stars; but she only laughed again and said:

"I'll run you a race for the chocolates?" and she was off like the wind.

Now what was a young man to do? He had tried three times during the past week, since they had all been up at Mrs. Lynch's for her Christmas house party, to talk to her on this subject. She neither rejected nor listened to him. What did it mean? Could there be anybody else? Jack grew savage at the bare idea. Why, he had been devoted to Millie Thornton ever since he wore knickerbockers. Another? He would like to meet him, that's all.

He began to fear his opportunity to behold a rival had come, after all, that evening. At dinner a new face appeared on the scene. What was worse the women seemed to think this tall handsome young Vanderslip, who had recently come into his inheritance of a million or so, was a great acquisition to the party. From the first Jack felt that this well set up fellow with his cool self possession and all his other possessions was a much over-rated young man. When he saw that he was taking Millie Thornton in to dinner, and that the girl seemed completely infatuated with him, he was certain of it.

The evening passed off, after a fashion. The usual flow of conundrums, the stories, the game and the music, all of which it seemed to Brereton were dominated by the young millionaire, failed to interest him. He began to meditate on the easiest way of slipping off to bed without attracting attention from his punctilious hostess. Then some one proposed that the stockings should be hung. Mrs. Lynch decreed that everybody should hang a stocking on the old-fashioned crane in the great fire-place in the hall. Jack Brereton curled his lips. What child's play!

Just then Millie came up to him, for the first time since dinner.

"Jack, I want you to hang up both your golf stockings. Will you?"

Would he? He was off upstairs, two steps at a time. When he came back, Millie smiled at him. "Hang them up on the very outer edge!" she commanded; "you've been so cross and glum this evening."

"Millie! You know the reason?" he began in an earnest undertone. But young Vanderslip had come up on the other side, and Miss Thornton seemed to have eyes and ears for no one else.

"What a fool I was," said Jack in his inner consciousness. "But she can have two pairs of golf stockings if she wants. I don't mind how big a one I am now that I have gone in for making a fool of myself."

He waited until all the other stockings were hung and put his last on the crane. He was not in the mood to notice how funny they all looked, the short, the thick, the thin, the sober, the gay. His was the only pair and they looked the picture of greed. Then he said goodnight to Mrs. Lynch and went to his room. Properly speaking, he should have tossed on his uneasy pillow all night; but Brereton was a healthy, hearty young man and he had played three games of golf in the clear December air that day; and moreover, Mrs. Lynch's pillows were exceptionally easy.

The next morning when he looked out of his window there was a white mantle covering the world. The clouds were breaking and the scene was so beautiful that he jumped out of bed, ashamed to be a laggard in the face of such beauty. He looked at his watch, it was seven o'clock. He thought of his stockings. He would dress and hurry down to the hall. Perhaps he could abstract them before anybody else got down; nobody need know just how big a fool he was.

But when he reached the big fire-place, the long, ugly golf stockings were missing. There were all the others, and stuffed to their utmost capacity, especially the smaller and most slender ones; but his were nowhere. He looked high and low; he searched from mantel-piece to woodbox, from closet to outside door, but his golf stockings had vanished, apparently, from the face of the earth.

"That lets me out;" thought Brereton. "I'll swear I never put them here."

But there was no need of his swearing. Nobody missed them. Jack was puzzled; he was not sure whether any one had noticed him the night before or not. Yes, he had caught a queer expression in Vanderslip's eye, as he turned away from the fire-place, and one of Tom Lynch's cousins had chaffed him about hanging two. What did it mean? He decided to say nothing, nowhere, unless he should be asked, and when, half an hour later the company assembled to take down their stockings and examine them, he wasn't asked. Apparently, nobody noticed that Santa Claus had missed him. As for Millicent Thornton, beyond the coolest of "Good mornings" she ignored his very existence.

Brereton was silent throughout the breakfast. Mrs. Lynch's breakfasts, however, were not matters that even a young man hopelessly in love could easily slight, and he managed to remain at the table as long as was necessary, and with a very good grace.

"Now then," said Mrs. Lynch, just as the meal was over, "we are all going for a sleigh ride. I have ordered the horses for nine o'clock, and we'll go up to the rink and have our lunch there: there is good skating up there, so put on your skating rig."

"I think, Mrs. Lynch," said Brereton, as they rose, "if you'll excuse me I won't go on the ride. I've some letters to write."

"But we shall not excuse you," answered the hostess. "We need all the available young men don't we Miss Thornton?" she added as that young woman swept past.

"O, no," icily replied the girl, "we have Mr. Vanderslip, you know."

This decided him; in half an hour he was at the front door awaiting the appearance of the young ladies. They came, a little late of course, and Millicent Thornton was last of all. He looked up at her as she came down the stairway.

Could he believe his eyes? Were not those his own, his very own golf stockings?

"You two will have to sit on the front seat with the driver," said Mrs. Lynch. "I hope you don't mind."

Mind? Jack Brereton was mean enough to take a deliberate peep as Millie clambered up on the high driver's seat. Then he climbed up beside her.

He turned the subject over in his mind for several moments after they had started; then, the bells drowning out the voices behind and the driver's attention being riveted on the prancing horses, he whispered:

"Millie, what have you been doing with my stockings?"

"Why, Jack, I—I—I've filled them for you. How do you like your Christmas present?"

But he did not dare tell her, not there.

A QUESTION OF AUTHORITY.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT BY NICHOLAS LAMAR.

Copyright, 1898, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher.

WARDEN Hinkle was not such a fool as he looked. This is not usually received as a compliment by a man, but the warden really needed some such recommendation, for a homelier man never presided over the destinies of four thousand prisoners in a state prison. However, the stupidity of his exterior belied the shrewdness underneath, and the new prison tricks continually cropping out from the four thousand inventive brains were usually analyzed and mastered by him as readily as the multiplicity of tricks already invented.

The warden was absent from his office that day and his deputy was on duty. The door opened and Dr. Howell entered.

"Morning, Mr. Deputy," he said.

Dr. Howell was very young and very confident. Whatever his lack of reputation or ability he was backed by an abundance of political pull, and he had experienced no difficulty in securing the position of assistant physician to the penitentiary over a host of rival candidates.

"Morning," returned the deputy.

"What's this I hear about some cipher notes being taken from the men?" asked the doctor.

The deputy reached into a pigeonhole and after excavating several cigars and a pouch of tobacco procured two fragments of paper. One was a piece of wrapping paper, the other apparently a leaf from a notebook. Unfolding these he smoothed them out on the table.

The first was an absolutely meaningless scrawl covering the sheet in four or five parallel lines. The second was a jumble of phrases and words with no intelligible connection, but suggesting the wandering of a mind incapable of following a thread of thought. Dr. Howell's eye lighted as he glanced over the following:

"Old Satan is hole in pump the Pontine marshes dry when White house is finished till all ladies' honor grows cold let me know marry me of the diadem if what they have me beside the still waters thou done on outside anointest my head with oil verily cup runneth over."

"A clear case of G. P.," he said. "The other seems to be aphasia; the characters are all well made but few of them have any meaning. Very interesting; I must see the men. They will afford some interesting data for the study of mental derangement. Quite a windfall—two cases of mental breakdown in one day. Have they been taken to the asylum?"

The deputy said that he believed not.

"What! Why, they ought to be put under treatment at once," and the doctor started from the room.

"Say!" called the deputy, but the door slammed shut.

Out in the corridor the doctor met one of the captains of the guard. "Jim," he said, "take Blinky Pete and Red O'Hara and put them in ward A at once."

"But Doc I don't think—," began the captain.

"I believe I rank you," said the doctor briefly. "They ought to go into ward B if they are to go to the asylum at all."

"Take them to A."

The guard departed grumbling.

Somewhat later in the day Dr. Howell entered the prison office again. The warden had returned. He glanced up and there was a twinkle in his eye as he recognized his visitor.

"That's a curious case, those two fellows," said the doctor, dropping into a chair and reverting to the lunatics, "both slipping a cog at the same time. Two of the smartest crooks in the country."

"Slipping a what?"

"A cog. Exhibiting symptoms of mental alienation, to adopt a more technical style of speech."

"I had not heard of anything of the kind."

"Didn't you see those two typical epistles that were gathered in to-day? The deputy had them this morning."

"These?" asked the warden, producing the papers in question, and spreading them out as his lieutenant had done before.

"This one," said the doctor, pointing out the wrapping paper specimen, "betrays every characteristic of General Paralysis. If the prison library were as well supplied with technical literature as it should be, I could demonstrate each one of these points by a reference to such authorities as Bucknill and Tuke. For instance: see the shifting thought, scarcely following one thread for any time; see the biblical quotations; notice especially the omission of words evidently intended to be present; observe the reversal of the order of the words; it is extremely interesting and affords a beautiful illustration of the fully developed 'first stage.' 'Old Satan is hole in;' he meant, 'is in hole.' Then a new idea takes possession of him and he talks about pumping the Pontine marshes dry; that is a symptom of delusions of grandure, a sure test for this kind of insanity. His reference to the White house seems to indicate that he thinks it still in course of construction. Then he grows incoherent and talks wildly about ladies' honor, which he confuses with love growing cold, of being married and of a diadem, another delusion of grandure. Finally there is the scriptural quotation which, you will find on referring to any of the authorities, always occurs in anything written by a General Paralytic. You see the word my has been left out from the phrase, 'verily my cup runneth over.'"

"What a head you have, doctor," said the warden, admiringly.

"I got it all by reading my books thoroughly. When in doubt consult the authorities," returned the doctor jauntily. "This other one," he went on, picking up the other missive, "is an admirable example of Aphasia. Aphasia is discussed thoroughly by Bucknill and Tuke, who give numerous plates and illustrations; Maudsley has written entertainingly of the malady, and Mercier more recently has put forth a new theory to cover it."

"What is Aphasia?" inquired Warden Hinkle, growing interested.

"It is caused by a lesion in that part of the brain which controls the process of writing. The victim entirely loses the power to form intelligible written characters."

"But these are not unintelligible characters," put in the warden. "The letters are reversed; the lines read from right to left."

"Oh, yes," said the doctor, "I remember a discussion of such a case in my reading somewhere. I believe that the author concluded the patient had been originally lefthanded, and when the aphasic condition came to exist the lateral relations of the two cerebral hemispheres were reversed and the left hand—the one that he had always used—would henceforth write backwards while the right hand painfully wrote forwards——"

"Would the left-handed writing have any meaning if the characters could be deciphered?" interrupted the warden.

"As to that I can't say," replied the doctor. "I have never seen that discussed in my reading; but I believe not."

"Nevertheless, by looking at the reflection of this particular specimen in a mirror, and thereby reversing it, we read it without difficulty."

"Even then," returned the doctor, confidently, "it is very likely nothing more than a meaningless phrase or two, or at best a sentence that he has remembered and copied."

Warden Hinkle leaned back against the wall and regarded the doctor with half closed eyes. "So much for your authorities," he said, sitting forward and snapping his fingers. "Now listen to a few facts. Those two curiosities are cipher communications between two of the shrewdest rogues unhung. Take the paper you call General Paralysis—this one. Underscore the words in groups of three, separated by groups of six, beginning with the word 'hole'. What do you get?"

Old Satan is hole in pump the Pontine marshes dry when White House is finished till all ladies' honor grows cold let me know marry me of the diadem if what they have me beside the still waters thou done on outside anointest my head with oil verily cup runneth over.

"That is from Blinkey Pete and was found on Red O'Hara. 'Hole in pump house is finished. Let me know what they have done on outside.' The key to the cipher lay in the last part where he has used too long a quotation from the twenty-third psalm. If it hadn't been for that mistake on his part, I might not have been able to translate it. You see, Blinky has been doing a little excavating at odd moments when no one was near, while O'Hara has been carrying on the negotiations with outsiders who are tunneling in. Your aphasic epistle is his answer. Hold it up before the mirror—so. What do you see?"

"The work on the outside is progressing rapidly, they will break through Tuesday night at evening roll call.'"

"What does it mean?" cried Dr. Howell, dazed by the revelation.

"I had them locked up in separate cells as soon as I understood you had ordered them into the asylum."

"And I had them put in ward A. They can escape from that ward without any trouble. It is already past roll call! Quick!" The doctor rushed out, followed by the warden wearing a grin. In a less homely man the grin would have been called an amused smile.

"If they have got away," panted the doctor, still in the lead and running hurriedly in the direction of the pump house, "it is all my fault. But those were certainly the clearest symptoms of General Paralysis and Aphasia I ever heard about. Why, the authorities——"

"I don't think they have escaped farther than the cellar," said the warden, bringing up the rear. "I had about a barrel of fresh cement poured into their hole this afternoon."

Dr. Howell threw open the door of the pump house. The place was deserted. Over in one corner an open trap door in the floor showed the way to the cellar. Both dropped to their knees and peered down into the black void. The warden reached a lantern hanging nearby and lowered it through the opening. No sound came up from below, but four shining eyes burned in the depths of the darkness.

This the doctor says he can't understand, for, to the best knowledge of the profession, there is lacking in the human eye that peculiar substance which confers upon the animal eye its remarkable reflecting powers. Perhaps he privately believes that it was the consuming fire of insanity.

A MODERN SNOW EATER.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

LAST winter was noted in the northern states for its extreme cold and the great amount of its snowfall. The city where I was then making my home was two or three times buried under fifteen or eighteen inches of snow, and men, horses, carts and scrapers were employed for several days at a time, at an expense of several hundred dollars, in clearing the streets of this mass of snow.

Now all this is to be changed. A nineteenth-century genius has invented a machine for disposing of the surplus snow in cities which bids fair to do away entirely with any other method of removing it. This machine consists of an elongated wagon which is fitted on the front end with a big scoop, whose purpose is to take up the snow in front of it as the machine is drawn through the streets. A vast quantity of snow is lifted by it at each dip which is, by an automatic movement of the shovel, thrown up and backward into the cart behind it.

This cart, or long wagon, has a metal floor, and beneath this floor are a number of iron pots filled with burning charcoal. These keep the floor constantly so highly heated that the snow melts as soon as it lands upon it. This metal floor has a gentle slope toward the back of the wagon, to which is attached a tank capable of holding several hundred gallons of water. It may be easily seen that the snow, as soon as it is converted into water by contact with the hot floor, runs down the incline, and falls into the tank at the rear of the wagon. When the tank becomes full the machine is backed up to the nearest sewer, the stopcock in the tank is turned and the water is allowed to run away down the sewer pipe. Then the machine resumes its work. Two or three of these machines would easily fill the place of several hundred men and horses in clearing the city of snow, and the work would be better done and at far less expense than by the old method. The inventor claims that it will, in one hour, clear away as much snow as would cover a street a foot in depth and the extent of a city block.

RHEUMATISM, SCIATICA and CATARRH

CURED BY

"5 DROPS" Three Years Ago.

DOCTORS PRONOUNCED HIM INCURABLE.

He is Still Well and Writes on Oct. 10, 1898: "I Feel it a Duty That I Owe to God and Suffering Humanity to Announce to You and All the World What "5 Drops" Has Done for Me."

[Trade Mark.]

SIBERIA, PERRY CO., IND., Jan. 29, 1896.

SWANSON RHEUMATIC CURE COMPANY:—I would like to thank you for your great remedy, "5 DROPS," and tell you what it has done for me. I had Rheumatism in every joint and in the heart, and I had Catarrh of the Head for 30 years. I was so poorly that I lost the use of my legs and arms, and could not move without pain. I was so crippled that I had done but little work for seven long years, and our family physician, a good doctor, told me that my Rheumatism and Catarrh were incurable, and I believed him. But now, after using "5 Drops" only two months, I can truly say I have not felt so well for seven years. This medicine does more than is claimed for it. At this time my Catarrh is much better and I have scarcely any Rheumatism at all, and the heart weakness and pain are gone. My hearing is now good and my eyesight is much better. I have gained more than 10 pounds of flesh and can do a full day's work. It is the best medicine I ever saw to give a mother who has a young child, for it has the same effect on the child as on the mother. It wards off Croup and cures the Hives of the child and causes sweet and refreshing sleep to both young and old. WM. M. KELLEMS.

SIX TESTIFY TO ITS TRUTH.

In a letter of Oct. 10, 1898, from Mr. Kellems, he says: "I feel it a duty that I owe to God and suffering humanity to announce to you and all the world that I am yet in the ring with untold thousands of others, to testify to the great merits of your valuable remedy called "5 DROPS." I believe I was the first sufferer in this part of the earth to learn of the existence of "5 DROPS," some three years ago. I was then badly afflicted with Rheumatism, Catarrh, etc., which my letter of Jan. 29, 1896, fully speaks of. All I can say is "5 DROPS" cured me. To make a long story short, "5 DROPS" needs no recommendation in this part of the country, as everybody knows the "5 DROPS" remedies around here. It has cured more cases of Rheumatism, Sciatica, Neuralgia, and many other pains than any other medicine that has ever been sold or heard of. For the last three years I have noticed the effect "5 DROPS" has on the sick, through my own observations as well as my brother, who is a practicing physician and uses the "5 Drops" in his practice. All ye that wish for further information, write and you are sure to get a reply without any delay. I will (as I have done in this letter) cheerfully recommend it to any one that I may come in contact with. I myself can never forget what this remedy has done for me and many others. Yours very truly, WM. M. KELLEMS, Siberia, Ind.

Witnesses to the above: Jas. Brady, J. R. Cox, E. R. Huff, S. Taylor, Dr. S. W. Kellems, Jno. Hays, all of Siberia, Ind.

The wonderful success that has attended the introduction of "5 DROPS" is unprecedented in the history of the world. Think of it! It has CURED more than One Million and a Quarter sufferers within the last three years. This must appeal to you. One million and a quarter people cannot all be mistaken. If suffering we trust you may have sufficient confidence to send for three large bottles of "5 DROPS" for $2.50, which will surely cure you. If not, then send for a $1.00 bottle, which contains enough medicine to more than prove its wonderful curative properties. Prepaid by mail or express. This wonderful curative gives almost instant relief and is a PERMANENT CURE for Rheumatism, Sciatica, Neuralgia, Dyspepsia, Backache, Asthma, Hay Fever, Catarrh, Sleeplessness, Nervousness, Nervous and Neuralgic Headaches, Heart Weakness, Toothache, Earache, Croup, La Grippe, Malaria, Creeping Numbness, Bronchitis, and kindred diseases.

"5 DROPS" is the name and dose. LARGE BOTTLE (300 doses) $1.00, prepaid by mail or express: THREE BOTTLES, $2.50. Sold only by us and our agents. Agents Appointed in New Territory. Write to-day.

HERE seems to be no end to the wonderful engineering connected with railroading. The latest thing is to build a railroad up the Jungfrau, one of the highest peaks of the Swiss Alps, nearly fourteen thousand feet high. But we have been astonished by the engineering feats carried on in the Alps ever since Napoleon built his wonderful road over them; so we are prepared for almost anything. Ground has been broken for this new railroad, and what at first seemed an impossibility, will, doubtless, be a reality soon.

The word porcelain was first applied to china ware by some Portuguese sailors who were struck by the translucence of the ware. They likened it to a cowry shell, and as this, in turn, was thought to resemble a sucking pig, they gave it the name of Porcelain.

OUR RELATIONS WITH SPAIN.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

CHAIRMAN DAY.

CHAIRMAN Day, who was our able Secretary of State during the active days of the Spanish-American War, was made the Chairman of the American Peace Commission to meet the Spanish Commission, for the final arrangements of peace between the two countries, and he is showing the same conservative good judgment and legal ability which distinguished him while in the Cabinet. When we stop to consider that previous to his selection by President McKinley, he was scarcely known of outside the state of Ohio, we realize what a lesson his career is to young Americans and how American manhood is always ready to meet every emergency promptly and quickly. It is doubtful if any other country could produce untried men, who with such comparatively little training, can show such acute statecraft and diplomacy on sudden call.

It will be remembered by the readers of COMFORT that the Peace Commission meets under the terms of the peace protocol which was signed at Washington by Secretary Day on the part of the United States, and by M. Cambon, the Ambassador of France, on behalf of the Kingdom of Spain. By this protocol the islands of Cuba and Porto Rico were to be evacuated at once by the Spanish army and navy forces and quiet possession given to the United States. So far as concerns Porto Rico this was immediately done; so that on October 18th the American flag was raised on all the municipal and State buildings on the island, while all the soldiers and sailors of Spain on that island were embarked on transports for Spain. All reports show that the inhabitants of Porto Rico received our troops with the wildest acclamations of joy. Even the most conservative see that American rule promises the highest material prosperity to the island.

Nothing that has happened in this war has proved so great an object lesson to the Spaniards as the military Governorship of Santiago de Cuba by General Wood, who was appointed by the President to this most important position. Rarely has such executive ability been shown as that of General Wood. When he took possession of Santiago trade was paralyzed, the streets deep with accumulated filth and the very atmosphere reeking with fever and decay. For years the inhabitants had been the prey of mercenary Spanish officers, who had mercilessly and relentlessly robbed and embezzled the moneys which they had collected as taxes and tribute from these people. The ill-advised expenditures combined with dishonesty among the officials made a constantly growing debt and constantly increased deficit in the Treasury.

The advent of the wise military rule of Gen. Wood has entirely revolutionized this state of affairs. Under his energetic rule the streets and houses have been cleansed and purified, so that Santiago is healthier and cleaner than it has been for a couple of centuries; the schools have been opened on American plans; business awakened and revived; important municipal improvements and construction entered into, and withal Gen. Wood after paying all bills from the current Customs receipts is able to announce that he has a comfortable balance of money on hand without having, as yet, resorted to local taxation for funds. We can hardly imagine what a revelation of good government this must be to the Cuban population which has been so many years oppressed by the Spanish system of thieving taxation, so justly called "sucking the orange."

The evacuation of Cuba, however, seems less satisfactory at the present time. It is well known that Gen. Blanco, who is to sail for Spain on the 20th of this month, has never approved of the Spanish government's relinquishing the "Pearl of the Antilles;" and, that rather than to acquiesce in such proceedings he refused the request of the government to serve on the evacuation commission. He, with many other Spanish officers, has a sincere belief that the Spanish soldier is superior to the American; and, that wherever there has been a battle the Spaniards have more than held their own, and that an army of acclimated soldiers superior to the American army, would have rendered the successful holding of the island assured. That such a feeling is rife in Havana cannot be doubted, and founded on this has been an evident reluctance and delay in providing the proper means to leave the island.

So evident did this feeling on the part of the Spanish Commissioners in Cuba become, that much uneasiness was caused both in Havana and Washington, and finally most peremptory dispatches, insisting that any further delay or indecision would not be tolerated by the American government, were sent by the authorities at Washington. These dispatches, coupled with the apparent intention of the Navy department to comply with Admiral Sampson's desire that American warships might be sent into Havana harbor, evidently have brought about action by the Spanish Commissioners.

At this point the Washington government gave notice that whether or not the island had been evacuated on December 1st, we should take possession and begin our authority on that date. On the other hand it was announced authoritatively from Madrid that the evacuation would not commence nor would Spain relinquish her authority until the definite peace treaty had been signed and ratified. This was such an evident repudiation of the terms of the protocol that it was observed that the usual Spanish policy of deceit and delay had had much to do with the signing of the protocol.

The meetings of the Peace Commission in Paris have been irritating to the last degree. Apparently the Spaniards have believed that President McKinley was unpopular at home; and that his opponents would defeat him in the November elections. They argued that should this happen Spain would receive much more favorable terms than could be obtained now. As a consequence much valuable time was spent by the attempt of the Spaniards to have America assume the "Cuban debt." This debt is held almost entirely by French and Spanish creditors and was caused by the great expenses in putting down Cuban insurrections. The holders of the bonds were guaranteed payment from the Cuban revenues. Any assumption of this debt or a part of it was absolutely refused by the Americans. After many delays the question of the Philippine islands, which, by the terms of the protocol, was to be settled by this Commission, was taken up. The Americans claimed the entire archipelago, but offered an indefinite but fair sum to repay whatever expenses Spain had assumed in actual betterments in the islands, but at the same time refusing to assume any portion of the debts caused by putting down rebellion. This proposition took the Spanish by surprise and a wild howl of indignation went up from that nation. By the direct orders of Madrid the Spanish commissioners refused this offer and entered a strong protest against American aggression and unfairness. This whole step is undoubtedly to cause European sympathy.

The war clouds which so darkly loom in the political horizon of every European nation, however, seem a sure token that no nation will care to enter into any movement looking toward an interference with America. The despatch of the great battleships Oregon and Iowa to reinforce the fleet under Admiral Dewey at Manila, shows that President McKinley has no idea of relinquishing the islands nor being driven from them by a foe.

During the past month there have been a number of events at home and abroad which are more or less directly connected with the war, and in a measure a part of it; events of surprising interest to our countrymen.

Just before the close of the Omaha exposition the President made a journey to it and spoke to the multitudes of people in every rank of life that thronged to greet him at the stations on the route. From Omaha he went to Chicago, where he attended the celebration of the return of Peace; and later a smaller demonstration in Philadelphia. The intense enthusiasm of the ovation which he received at all points marked the wonderful hold that he has obtained on the American people. His conservative course throughout the whole trouble and the singular judgment and tact he has shown in dealing with every question have been appreciated by the people, and by these popular demonstrations they have endeavored to show something of this loyalty.

As a mark of Mr. McKinley's popularity with the people and how widely it is recognized, it is only necessary to say that neither the opposition press nor party have said a word against him in an excited partisan campaign. Not a single attack or criticism has been made on his course, the only attack being indirect ones aimed at other branches of the government. Considering the freedom of attack in American politics, this is a remarkable record. One of the features of the Presidential tour was the sudden popular outbreak of sentiment in favor of American retention of the Philippines.

The result of the November elections through the Union give the Republicans a large majority which cannot be overturned for at least eight years; while the House of Representatives remains Republican with a reduced majority, mid-administration elections usually set strongly for the opposition so that this result is interpreted as a strong endorsement by the people of the present governmental policy.

Directly allied to the Spanish war has been the remarkable contest for the governorship of the state of New York between Judge Van Wyck nominated by the Democrats and Col. Theodore Roosevelt, who commanded that picturesque band of Rough Riders about which so much has been said. The campaign was carried on with Col. Roosevelt's usual aggressive qualities. Col. Roosevelt is but forty years of age and has been before the public since 1884, when he revolted against the Republican nomination of Mr. Blaine. Since that time he has held many public offices in which he has shown great ability linked with aggressive, independent and often erratic qualities. He is a man of deep convictions and has both strong friends and strong enemies, as is always the lot of aggressive reformers. Many look upon him as the probable nominee for the Presidency after Mr. McKinley's second term, which now is generally conceded everywhere. Col. Roosevelt is a man of unmistakably bright prospects.

The campaign in New York state was one of the most fiercely fought for years and remained in doubt until the vote was counted. It became a fierce fight toward the end between Col. Roosevelt and "Boss" Croker and the Tammany organization. Many think the injudicious words of Croker had great effect in pushing the independents for Roosevelt.

In the recent general elections were many war heroes, who were nominated by one party or the other from their supposed ability to draw votes with a "war record." As a general thing, however, it has been found that there has been little glamour attached. By the sending of Secretary Day to Paris, Col. John Hay has become Secretary of State. Col. Hay has been in public life many years and was selected as ambassador to Great Britain by the present administration where he was serving when promoted to his present position. His great success in the diplomatic field in other positions gives assurance of a successful and satisfactory record as American Premier.

Notwithstanding newspaper comment and abusive criticism from "yellow journals," the commission investigating the war has continued its labors and seems, from an unbiased point of view, to be making a fair and impartial examination. Gen. Dodge, the chairman, has apparently done everything to get at the evidence and will make an interesting report. Readers of COMFORT should not be misled. "Yellow" papers made exaggerated and sensational reports, which cannot be proven. After rousing the whole nation, the same papers are now discounting the natural outcome of the evidence which has been given by saying that the commission is to "Whitewash" every one. The sensational and irresponsible papers that have published startling and exaggerated reports that have worried millions of women whose friends and relatives were with the army, have been a curse and a menace, which we could well have spared in this struggle.

DEAR NIECES AND NEPHEWS:

Our own sweet singer, Longfellow, says:

"I heard the bells on Christmas Day
Their old, familiar carols play;
And wild and sweet
The words repeat
Of peace on earth, good-will to men.

Then pealed the bells more loud and deep;
God is not dead; nor doth he sleep!
The Wrong shall fail,
The Right prevail,
With peace on earth, good-will to men."

"The Wrong shall fail, the Right prevail:" yes, but to bring about this happy state of things we must, each one of us, do our part by personally keeping "peace on earth, good-will to men." Let us all, with this Christmas, redouble our efforts so to do.

"Doing God's will as if it were my own,
Yet trusting not in mine, but in his strength alone."

Our first letter this month is from far-away Tacoma, Washington, and gives us a vivid picture of the daily life of the Alaskan Indian.

"September to a dweller in northern Washington means that the hop season has begun, and as one looks across the waters of Puget Sound he may see the Alaskan Indians in their staunch canoes making their way to our shores to help with the hop picking. Some of them come even from Glacier Bay, a thousand miles to the north.

"All along the pan handle or southwestern part of Alaska, the shore is fringed with islands and peninsulas. Here dwell several tribes of Indians who are fishermen and whose whole life, save the short time of the hop picking, is spent upon the sea. The mountains rise like a huge wall behind them and dip their bases into the ocean, leaving no wide coastal plain to invite agriculture. Thus the Indian is forced to get his whole living from the sea. In the winter he builds his permanent village near the halibut banks but each family owns its own salmon stream which is as valued a heritage as the preserves of Merrie England, and as closely guarded against poachers.

"Not only does the Indian change his residence for the halibut and salmon fishing but a third time does he set up housekeeping, this time for the oulachan fishing. The oulachan is the most valuable fish to the native. It is one of the delicacies of the coast. About six inches long and an inch in diameter, nearly round, it is not unlike a candle in shape, and as it contains so much oil that it will burn when lighted it is called the candle fish. The oil is used as sauce in winter. During the summer the Alaskan gets in his supply of salmon. The rivers fairly teem with the fish, sometimes as many as ten thousand being taken at one cast of the seine. On their own streams the Indians usually spear the salmon or catch them in nets. Herring are so plentiful they are raked out with wooden rakes. All the surplus fish is carried to the canners along the coast where many of the Indians are employed by the white men in cleaning and packing the fish.

"But the halibut fishing is the most interesting of the natives' occupations. Their line is the giant kelp, a kind of sea-weed, which often grows to a length of three hundred feet. When soaked, bleached and stretched it becomes a strong, pliable cord. The hook, a foot long, is cut from the heart of spruce or cedar roots. With these crude implements the Alaskan Indian laughs at the white man's equipment.

"The Indian's canoe is his pride and greatest care. For it he chooses the best spruce or yellow cedar. He shapes the outside with wedges and sledge hammers, then through the long dark winter he patiently cuts out the inside. The hollow is then partly filled with water in which are placed stones heated red hot. This causes steam to rise making the wood more pliable so that stretchers can be forced in until the canoe takes the desired shape. The outside is then rubbed with a shark's skin to smooth it. The canoe is propelled most skillfully by a paddle or is sailed by means of a sail of woven cedar bark.

"Owing to the constant use of the arms and upper part of the body the Alaskan Indian is well developed in those parts of the body while the lower limbs are small and weak, making them poor travelers on land though they have lately been used as pack-carriers by the gold seekers and adventurers in Alaska. They are a bold, hardy, sea-faring people. No journey is too long to be attempted in the staunch little crafts, and as they come gliding over the water of the sound, they seem like the remnant of a foregone century and one cannot but hope that in their contact with civilization here in our Washington they may still retain their primitive simplicity." C. D. JONES, Tacoma, Wash.

Our next letter is a very interesting account of the quaint settlement of New Austria, Kentucky.

"About five miles southwest of Junction City lies a German settlement, by the name of New Austria. It is reached by a rough road whose intricate windings, among the thickly wooded hills would lose any one but a person well acquainted with the place. The few houses are so far apart and so nearly surrounded by large trees and a thick growth of underbrush that a stranger would never realize that the place was settled.

"When the trees put forth their leaves the steep hillsides become very dark and cool; delicate ferns spring up, often growing over a foot high; the squirrels live, unmolested; and the palatable oapaw (the banana of Kentucky) and wild grape grow in abundance. These wild fruits are hunted by the German children, who seem to have no fear of the rattlesnakes, which are quite numerous.

"Each German has cleared a small piece of ground, and, where many an American would starve, he contrives to lay by a snug sum. Their vineyards are their pride and each year a great quantity of grape wine is made. These hospitable people seldom fail to offer the guest the sparkling glass. They have a very peculiar manner of eating; a large bowl, containing one kind of food, is placed in the center of a table and from this the entire family eats with spoons. If they have a visitor, he is placed at one end of the table and provided with all the things ordinarily seen on the American table, while the family, with their one bowl, occupies the other half of the table. Some of the families, however, have adopted the American manner of eating.

"Their church is cared for by a highly-educated old German who speaks several languages fluently. He plays the organ which is kept upstairs; and he also has the priest's robes, which were brought over from the Old Country, and are very costly and beautiful.

"The schoolhouse is situated at the head of a hollow and the trees grow nearly to the door. The majority of the families speak the German language at home, so that when the little tots first attend the five months' school one of the older pupils must act as interpreter between them and the instructor.

"The accompanying cut shows a typical home in this unique little village. The house is built directly against the hill behind it, which thus forms its rear wall. The rock foundation is nearly as high as the house itself and forms the wine cellar. This is pierced with holes or slits for ventilation. A small porch adorns the house.

"In the foreground is a large stump, which, when a tree, was hollow, and in which its owner lived before he built this house. The hill behind the house is so very steep that it has been laid off in terraces for convenience in cultivation."

BETTIE COX, Junction City, Kentucky.

Our next letter introduces a new cousin—a Swiss boy of sixteen. He was born in Switzerland, he tells me, but has been for several years in this country. He says:

"Switzerland, like all European countries, besides the splendid mountain scenery is noted for its villages. It is well known that Switzerland in the inhabited regions holds an immense population. The farmers, instead of living in the country on their respective farms, gather into villages which are surrounded by their farms. Each farm contains from three to twenty acres, which are staked off, as fences take too much room. Nearly all houses apart from the villages are manor houses or halls occupied by some well-to-do landholder, while on the farms adjoining are the broad, low roofed houses tenanted by the poor class of people dependent upon the owner of the land for a living, happy to receive from fifteen to fifty cents a day.

"The town of Neider Scherli is six miles southeast of Berne on the large stage road leading from Berne to Schwarzenburg. This road, like nearly all Swiss roads, is graveled. Not unfrequently when traveling along the road will one find stone and gravel quarries with a keeper to repair the road. But for foreigners the traveling is a little rough, as on the smaller roads the stones are not very finely crushed. Neider Scherli is a typical Swiss village with few houses surrounded by gardens and orchards and with a very few streets. The houses are all large, and the projecting roof forms the veranda. A little beyond and below the village flows the Sherli Bach, a small creek which at the road widens into a mill pond flanked by a saw mill on the north and tannery on the south, while beyond the road to the west is the mill with her thundering water wheel. The creek or ravine is crossed by a massive stone bridge consisting of three arches.

"To the north of the creek and east of the village rises the towering Halten Hill, which gives a splendid view of the lower Sense valley and the city of Berne. A few rods below, on the slope, lies Ober Scherli, nearly eight hundred feet above Neider Scherli. Ober Scherli is a small village of farmers. On all houses the stables are attached to the dwelling. No barns exist separately in the rural parts of Switzerland. The dwelling rooms and stables are always under the same roof."

JOHN G. HANNA, Berne, Ind.

Our St. Lawrence cousin, with the following vivid description of northern ice-cutting, takes me back to "the scenes of my childhood," so "dear to the heart."

"Will those readers of COMFORT who never see snow or ice-cutting imagine themselves with me on the banks of our noble St. Lawrence river, and watch the men and teams employed in gathering in the 'ice-harvest.'

"The first thing necessary is to get a permit to cut; then the space applied for must be fenced around to avoid accidents; snow ploughs remove all snow, and then a machine something like a harrow is run over the ice to mark it off in blocks, and then begins the real work of cutting it out, putting it on to sleighs, and hauling away to the ice-houses. The cutting is all done by hand. Men stand on the ice, and cut up and down just as we used to see planks cut. It does not seem to be heavy work, but is severe in cold weather, and none dare attempt it who are not warmly clad. The cutters always work up stream, and as each block breaks away it floats down to where the teams are waiting for their loads. Here men are stationed who arrest the floating blocks, dragging them by means of boat hooks on to wooden slides so placed that the block can be easily shifted on to the sleigh that stands in place ready for its load. So expert are the cutters and handlers, and so exact is the system pursued that the work goes on with the regularity of clockwork.

"Thousands of men and horses are employed in this work, which begins as soon as the ice is of sufficient thickness. The 'first crop', as it is called, is considered the best, although the quality depends entirely on the weather. Clear, cold weather with but little snow gives ice so clear that you can easily see through a three foot block. This ice lasts well, does not melt quickly, and is the delight of the housekeeper. Irregular weather with snow, gives whiter, thicker ice, that turns back to water far too readily for economy."

M. S. B., Montreal, Canada.

Our last prize letter for this month takes us down into the sunny land of Florida, and shows us a bit of Fernandina life.

"Fernandina, Florida, is divided, by a strip of marsh and wood, into 'New Town' and 'Old Town'. The former residents were Spaniards. Now New Town is quite thickly populated, while Old Town consists of about fifty houses that are mostly occupied by blacks, who so enjoy a dance without music or a chance to wear a cast-off dress that a white person might easily see the hidden meaning of the phrase, 'Contentment is a precious boon.'

"The business is all done at New Town, which is reached by a foot bridge about five feet wide, over the marsh, and by a carriage road through the sands and woods.

"The roads around New Town are covered with oyster shells that make excellent driveways when well ground. Those of Old Town do not need to be shelled, as all the streets are covered with a short grass kept green the whole year by the dampness from the Amelia river, which flows by, and kept short by the horses and cows which are allowed to run at will with the goats, hens, geese, and a few pigs. If it were not for these animals it would be a beautiful spot.

"We arrived at Fernandina in October. Everything out of doors was beautiful, as there had been no frosts. We thought winter would surely begin by December, but not much cold weather troubled us until one morning in January, when we awoke to find the pump on a south piazza refusing to work, and ice in the barrel of rain water at the corner of the house. A cold wind blew for several days, and then we had no more winter until the first ten days of March, when it was cold, windy, and rainy. If the houses were built as they are in Rhode Island, no one would suffer from cold; but the people here only think of summer when building; repairs are seldom made, many houses are without paint, and many things look as if Old Town would soon be a thing of the past. New Town is a growing place."

NINA VIOLA FISKE, Olneyville, R. I.

The following hints for a "Heart Party" I give the cousins this month, instead of waiting until February, in order that they may, if they wish, profit by them in their preparations for Saint Valentine's Day.

FOR the benefit of Aunt Minerva's readers I send these suggestions for a 'Heart Party' for St. Valentine's Day. In nearly all respects it is a description of one which I attended last year.

"A Heart Party could be easily carried out as follows: The invitations should be the regulation small card enclosed in envelope to match, and should have the word 'Hearts' in the lower left hand corner. Nearly every one is familiar with the game of Hearts played with cards, and this certainly would be a most suitable game for a Heart Party.

"Score cards could be made of white water-color paper in the form of a heart, and have a small water-color sketch or drawing—either a view, or flower—on one side, and a quotation on the other. Many quotations can be found which will be appropriate, for instance: 'In the game of Life, hearts are trumps,' or 'Two hearts that beat as one,' etc. Tie a pink ribbon in each score card and use tiny heart shaped seals for counters. These make delightful and fitting souvenirs of the occasion. The first prize can be a dainty heart shaped dish, silver heart stick pin, or any of the numerous heart shaped toilet articles can be used. Two large red paper hearts pierced with a gold arrow can be a 'Booby' prize. On each of the tables dishes of candies can be placed, and if the rather old-fashioned Motto candies are in them with their ridiculous mottoes, much merriment can be caused.

"The hostess might dress to represent the Queen of Hearts. One young lady at a Valentine Party recently wore a black lace dress on which were sewed innumerable red hearts made of paper. On the skirt she sewed them in rows, and on the waist there was a line of them down the right side, and one larger red heart pierced with a gold arrow (made of gilt paper) was on the left side near the arm, while a gold heart was fastened in the knot of each bow of her neck ribbon and belt ribbon, which were a bright scarlet. On the sleeves red hearts were sewed to the lace. In her hair was a red heart and gold arrow similar to the one on the waist. She carried a red silk handkerchief and red fan.

"If a lunch is served from the dining-table a center piece of forget-me-nots in the form of a heart would be charming. Pink satin ribbons should be drawn from each corner of the table to the chandelier over the center of the table. A red or pink rose with its long stem and green leaves could be at each plate while the name cards should be in the form of a heart. Sandwiches can be cut in the shape of hearts and fancy cakes made heart shaped. The ices should be pink and heart shaped.

ALICE E. GREENLEAF, Bath, Maine.

Now I have a few letters which, for various reasons, I cannot use. I have enjoyed them myself, and hope their authors will send me others which I shall be able to publish. The first one is from a cousin in Texas who has often written for us. The subject, unfortunately, was a visit to one of the soldiers' camps which were so plentiful and so interesting a few months ago, but are now "a thing of the past." I did not receive the letter in time to use it in any of the previous numbers of the paper. Then I have a dear little story written by a ten-year-old girl from Providence, R. I. It was exceedingly well done, but as we do not tell stories on this page I cannot use it.

Gertie Mills sends me a description of a lively bicycle ride, but, you see, Gertie, we all ride wheels and we all have had just such lovely good times, so I must ask you to try me again with another letter. Another Brooklyn cousin has sent me some Easter verses which were intended for last Easter, but reached me far too late. Besides, I suppose I shall have to confess it, Aunt Minerva's page is not intended for poetry; so, Leonie, dear, I shall have to thank you for the verses and keep them for myself.

And now I must stop for this month, for my space is full; so wishing you all a merry Christmas I will say good-by. AUNT MINERVA.

A Wonderful Jointed Doll FREE!

EVERY one knows it costs from 25c. to a dollar to buy a cloth doll body at the stores, without even a head, to say nothing of the expense of a nice indestructible doll. Every child delights to have from one to twenty different kinds of dolls in their family. Bright inventors, artists, and mechanics have been at work for years trying to perfect low-price, jointed indestructible dolls that can be made to sit down, bend over, stand on their heads, move arms and legs, and be placed in all sorts of cute positions, either when dressed or undressed. The doll shown in cut, just patented, is a most wonderful and successful result of long, weary trials. They are beautifully finished, and being jointed, can be placed in any natural position. Will last for years. Are more life like than anything ever gotten out before. Best of all, they are sold cheap, as you can fill with bran, sawdust, or cotton, and easily sew them up. As they are not on sale at the stores we will mail one, all charges paid, if you send 12c. now for a 3 months' subscription to "COMFORT," the PRIZE STORY MAGAZINE, with the largest circulation of any monthly in the world; or send 15c., and we also include a cute little Pug Dog pup. Over a million of the articles will be sold the next few months, and we give you the chance to get samples early and make money taking orders.

Two 15c. lots for 25c., 5 for 50c. Order a dozen Dolls and 4 Pugs for one dollar. Just the thing for church fairs and the like.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

THE north wind doth blow" in dead earnest and drives us all into providing ourselves with some sort of warm garment to protect us from its chill blast. Those who can afford the luxury of fur-lined wraps are to be envied for nothing else answers the purpose. Certainly there is no form of winter cloak to compare with a fur-lined cape of either cloth or silk, for elderly women who feel the cold, since they admit of bundling underneath to one's heart's content. Fur-lined driving coats, reaching to the feet, built in Russian style, half-fitting, and provided with a huge storm collar of fur, are this winter considered a necessary adjunct to the wardrobe of every fashionable woman. Very nobby are the short coats, reaching just over the hips, built of light tan or gray melton, showing a deep facing of fur at the front edge, giving the appearance of being lined with fur. Deep revers of fur, a wide collar and generous cuffs complete these comfortable and modish garments intended for the wear of young women. In spite of the furore over the advent of the long coat, the short jacket still holds strongly in favor, and even shorter than ever, at that. Sleeves show no marked change, the only variation being the darts set in at the shoulder instead of pleats or gathers, meaning simply, the pleats inverted and cut out.

Some of the new sealskins show a tendency to a slight flare at the wrist indicating a revival of the flowing sleeve, handly a suitable fashion for a fur coat.

Dress sleeves continue long over the hand, and all sorts of soft trimmings are applied as a finish. On the newest gowns there is no fullness at all at the shoulder, the necessary breadth being attained by the application of soft folds, etc.

Turning once more to the subject of coats, a sketch is given here of one of the newest short jackets. The front, in shield shape, is immensely becoming to the figure, while the soft, folded silk belt adds a jaunty air, though this may be left off at will. A boa of silver fox, the entire animal, with its little furry legs and all, is considered the acme of elegance, costing a pretty penny too, though the style may be copied in a cheaper fur. A smart little hat of pinkish violet velvet, draped over a wire frame, and fitting the head softly, has for its decoration gray and black speckled breasts with, in the center, a glittering steel buckle holding them together. Almost without exception all hats flare off the face. Of course I refer to dress hats. Those worn over the face are soft felts, Alpines, etc. All sorts of breasts of birds are called into service to trim our winter millinery since flat trimmings are pre-eminently the vogue. I have in mind a round hat made of deep purple velvet arranged in severe folds as to the brim, and having a soft crown encircled with breasts of speckled chickens; at one side a big bunch of deep purple violets reared themselves smartly.

Skirts are still clinging with even a more decided flare at the skirt than formerly. This effect is more easily obtained by the addition of a circular flounce, than by attempting to cut it all in one. A good model is shown here, which would not be too difficult to handle satisfactorily. The upper portion fits in sheath fashion, closing at the left side with velvet-covered buttons as fasteners. The flounce is applied in curved fashion, headed by a strap, band of stitching, rows of velvet ribbon, or any of the smart, flat braids so much in vogue. It is a drop skirt, with a silk underskirt, which fact adds greatly to its grace.

As an extreme to last summer's modes, the flounce, instead of curving upward at the back, being consequently higher than in front, slopes downward, the deep part being in front, adding greatly to the graceful outlines.

The guimpe still holds its sway as a part of the up-to-date bodice, though seen in a variety of new forms, the favorite being the square opening, or the oblong. A novel bodice is set forth here, calling into play several new features of modistic art, among them the tops of the small sleeves being made to match the guimpe in material—lace, in this case being used. The body of the gown is a soft shade of smoke gray poplin velours, the skirt severely plain except for the rows of velvet-covered buttons closing it at the top of the back. The round bodice is fitted smoothly, drawn in to the figure by means of gathers at both front and back, and finished at the waist by a soft belt of gray silk drawn into a silver buckle. The breast of the bodice has two clusters of tucks, set an even distance apart, the upper portion of the sleeves being decorated in a similar manner. A hollowed-out guimpe of Honiton lace fits snugly across the shoulders, the square space being filled in by tucks of rose pink silk, with stock to match, having a pretty finish under the ears consisting of points of the lace. A stylish accessory to a simple tailor gown, if a dressy effect is required, is a cravat in exaggerated size, of any bright shade of velvet, the stock having a flaring collar of fur attached. A muff to match usually accompanies the little piece of smartness.

Shirt waists for winter wear appear once more in velvet, both plain and plaid, in all colors, the more brilliant being preferred. Pretty and useful ones of cloth are in cadet blue and flaming scarlet.

Quite the most modish thing in the way of belts is the scarf of soft Roman silk crushed about the waist, clasped with exquisitely carved and jeweled buckles.

The dog collar grows daily more and more in favor; a favorite style has the broad band made to fit the neck perfectly, of black velvet, upon which are sewn, at regular intervals, Parisian ornaments set with turquoise. Another pretty collar of black has strings of pearls fitted to it, with a rhinestone clasp in the center. There is no more becoming, nor no smarter finish to a gown than these collars.

The newest in veils are shades of green and a rather bright blue; the weave is a revival of the old "sewing-silk" veil our grandmothers used to wear.

Chinchilla is a favorite fur this winter, and I am going to tell you a little secret of the furrier's art, by means of which you may keep your chinchilla collar or muff as fresh looking as the day you bought it. When the fur becomes solid and yellow as it does as soon as wet, just get some nice white sand, put it in a clean dish of large size, heat it hot, run your soiled fur through it several times and you will have a seemingly new garment.

A Leaky Faucet.

IT would be very interesting also surprising to many people if they could figure out how much water was lost by the leaking of a faucet from which the water escapes in drops. A chemist, who measured exactly the amount of waste, found that about 50 drops fell in a minute; In 90 minutes there would fall 4,500 drops of water, which is equivalent to a quart, so that there would be a loss of four gallons of water every 24 hours. In a year almost 1,500 gallons of water would be wasted uselessly from such a faucet.

It is quite well known that leaky faucets are quite common, and it therefore, from the above estimation, becomes apparent of the great amount of water wasted yearly.

From a Snail to Electricity.

THAT is quite a jump, and between the two extremes are some interesting figures.

A snail moves one-half inch per second; a man walking, four feet; a snow-shoer, ten feet; the current of a rapid river, thirteen feet; a fast runner, twenty-three feet; a fly, twenty-four feet; a fast steamer, twenty-seven feet; a bicycler, thirty-one feet; a stiff breeze, thirty-two feet; a good skater, thirty-eight feet; a race horse, forty-one feet; a mountain torrent, forty-seven feet; an express train, fifty-four feet; ocean waves, seventy feet; swallows, two-hundred twenty feet; sound in the air, one thousand ninety-five feet; the surface of the globe at sea-level, on the equator, fifteen hundred feet; a cannon ball, sixteen hundred twenty-five feet; the moon, thirty-two hundred feet.

CATARRH OF THE STOMACH.

A Pleasant, Simple, but Safe and Effectual Cure for it.

Catarrh of the stomach has long been considered the next thing to incurable. The usual symptoms are a full or bloating sensation after eating, accompanied sometimes with sour or watery risings, a formation of gases, causing pressure on the heart and lungs, and difficult breathing; headaches, fickle appetite, nervousness and a general played out, languid feeling.

There is often a foul taste in the mouth, coated tongue and if the interior of the stomach could be seen it would show a slimy inflamed condition.

The cure for this common and obstinate trouble is found in a treatment which causes the food to be readily, thoroughly digested before it has time to ferment and irritate the delicate mucous surfaces of the stomach. To secure a prompt and healthy digestion is the one necessary thing to do and when normal digestion is secured the catarrhal condition will have disappeared.

According to Dr. Harlandson the safest and best treatment is to use after each meal a tablet composed of Diastase, Aseptic Pepsin, a little Nux, Golden Seal and fruit acids. These tablets can now be found at all drug stores under the name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets and not being a patent medicine can be used with perfect safety and assurance that healthy appetite and thorough digestion will follow their regular use after meals.

Mr. N. J. Booher of 2710 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., writes: "Catarrh is a local condition, resulting from a neglected cold in the head, whereby the lining membrane of the nose becomes inflamed and the poisonous discharge therefrom passing backward into the throat, reaches the stomach, thus producing catarrh of the stomach. Medical authorities prescribed for me for three years for catarrh of stomach without cure; but today I am the happiest of men after using only one box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. I cannot find appropriate words to express my good feeling. I have found flesh, appetite and sound rest from their use."

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the safest preparation as well as the simplest and most convenient remedy for any form of indigestion, catarrh of stomach, biliousness, sour stomach, heartburn and bloating after meals.

Send for little book mailed free on stomach troubles, by addressing F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich. The tablets can be found at all drug stores.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

THE season is so near at hand for the exchange of Christmas gifts, that doubtless all our readers are already prepared for it, but on the chance of its finding some one unprepared, we give herewith a description of some easily and quickly made articles which may be just what some one has been waiting for.

The medicine glass cover seems to be a new thing—at least it is so to us—and a very useful one it is and so simple. The material used in its construction is a small piece of white linen, a circle of cardboard, embroidery silk and a brass pointer. The cardboard circle is cut the size of the top of an ordinary tumbler; the linen is marked with figures like a clock dial and the words "TAKE AT," and with small scallops around the edge; the figures and words and scallops are then embroidered in any color desired, and the linen trimmed out around the scallops; the linen is then laid onto the cardboard, which is just the size of the linen inside of the scallops; a hole is made exactly in the centre of linen and cardboard, the little brass pointer laid on and a brass split paper-fastener put through all, fastening on the back side. The whole thing is then just the width of the scallops larger than the top of a tumbler, and when laid on a tumbler, not only excludes the air from the medicine, but relieves one's mind of the exact time at which the medicine is to be taken again, as the pointer is placed so as to plainly indicate this. If it is found that the pointers are difficult to buy, make one of the cardboard and paint it the color of the silk used for the embroidery—or ink it over—anything to make it perfectly plain at a glance; the fasteners come by the box and may be obtained anywhere. These covers retail for seventy-five cents each, and yet the material for a dozen would scarcely amount to that and the work is very little—yet what a useful and desirable present it makes.

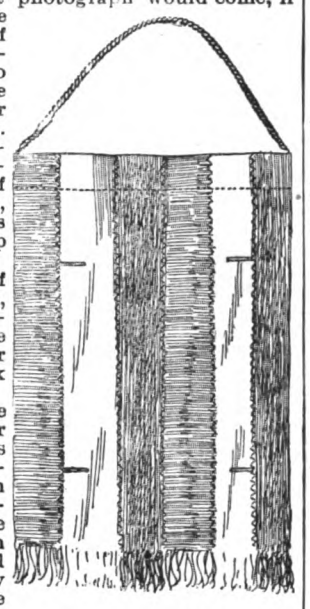
Where to hang the watch at night is a question we all ask at various times, until we find the right place. For a simple and convenient watch rest we give the following description and illustration:

It is made of linen, embroidered with a scroll-like design—this particular one being of yellow linen embroidered with white silk. Two pieces of stiff cardboard are cut exactly alike and of the shape shown, being about five inches long and four inches high at the highest point. After the linen is embroidered and a large hook sewn on near the top for the watch to hang on, cover one of the pieces of cardboard with it, and paste the other piece onto the back to make it look neat and cover all raw edges. To the back side then paste a narrow piece of the stiff cardboard of the right length to make the easel tip back at the right angle—the strip being the prop. Such an easel may also be made of silk or of any material that is at hand, but if made of figured silk or plaid, it should not be embroidered.



Most men find that a pincushion that rests on the top of the chiffoniere is in the way—as all they need is something to hold their scarf pins; it is, therefore, much better to have some kind of a hanging cushion that is always there and yet never obtrusive. For this purpose take a circle of cardboard, say five inches diameter; near the edge sew a ruffle of inch wide gathered satin ribbon; inside of that sew another gathered ruffle of the same width but in a contrasting color; this will leave an uncovered circle of three inches in the center; upon this glue a cushion made of the same color as the outside ribbon; have it quite thick, so that pins will not go through to the cardboard back. Then put a loop of narrow ribbon or silk cord at the top and it is all ready to hang at the side of the mirror. The one here illustrated is of our national colors—being red for the outside ruffle, white for the next, and the cushion is made of a deep blue covered with gold stars.

The banner picture frame is simple and very pretty when the right combination of colors is selected. It is made of six strips of inch wide satin ribbon, fringed for an inch at the bottom of each strip and at the top hemmed, and into the hem is run a whalebone; the proportion is about six inches wide by nine inches long. The photograph is held in its place by means of small hooks with the hump, which hold it securely, and these hooks are placed where the edges of a cabinet photograph would come, if laid in the middle of the frame. Of course such a picture would have to be laid on and the places marked for the four hooks. The strips of ribbon are held together by rows of featherstitching, and a silk cord is sewed at the top for hanging.

"E. J. C." of Emporia, Kansas, sends us the following valuable suggestions, for which we all thank her:

Those who have heavy Brussels or Moquette carpets often find it convenient to clean them without taking them from the floor and this can be very easily and satisfactorily done. Tear some old newspapers into small pieces, soak them in water, then roll them between the hands until they form soft little balls. Scatter them thickly over the carpet, then give it a thorough sweeping with a broom. The paper will collect the dust and keep it from flying about. Prepare a cleansing mixture by dissolving two bars of white soap in half a gallon of hot water and adding four ounces of powdered borax. Add enough of this mixture to a pan of warm water to make a strong suds and scrub the carpet with it, using a brush and taking only a small place at a time, just as you would scrub a floor. When the place you are washing is clean, wipe it with a soft rag wrung out of clear water, and proceed in this way until you have gone over the entire carpet; or if only a small portion is soiled, this may be washed and the remainder left as it is. The borax is a great help in cleaning the carpet and does not injure the colors. When the work is done, open the windows and doors and let the air have free access so it will dry quickly. Rugs may be fastened to a board or table by tacking them down at the corners, and cleaned in the same way.

RICH ART TABLE COVER FREE.
Armenian Needle Work Designs So Closely Followed as to Defy Detection.

Read How You May Get This Splendid Japanese Gift For Your Own Home. The most gifted race in the world with the needle are the Orientals. For centuries the rich and varied designs worked by their hands have been the admiration and delight of lovers of art. A few years ago an American was fortunate enough to invent machinery that would reproduce these rich designs of embossed embroidery and needlework, even to the delicate films of gold thread work. Still more curious the Japanese obtained plans and made similar machinery, so that they have the addition of "cheap labor" to Yankee machinery. In this way the most delicate Armenian and Turkish needlework is imitated so closely that none but the expert on close examination, reveals the minor points of imitation. In this way the treasures of the Orient are imitated with such a degree of fidelity and richness that work which sells for fabulous prices is reproduced at little cost. Every tint and shade and the peculiar "lay" and twist of the silks and threads shine and shimmer in perfect reproduction. These goods are of the very best material and come in a rich profusion of rich Oriental designs and colors such as pink, blue, etc., with rich gold effects, all of the latest and highest class art. They are so rich and ornamental that every lady is wild to possess them and they ornament and enrich the whole room giving it an air of luxury and refinement hard to describe.

An Art Table Cover Free. We wish to introduce our splendid family monthly into thousands of new homes and to accomplish this intend to actually give away these rich and ornamental Table Covers to our friends. We shall send a handsome cover, about two feet and a half square, of the richest and most pleasing designs, and being in appearance like the hand-made covers that Armenian experts sell for from $12 to $25 each, to every subscriber who sends twenty-five cents for a special trial yearly subscription. This is the greatest offer ever made, for, besides receiving this Beautiful Art Gift, which sells for nearly $1 at stores, without cost you obtain a whole year's subscription to the best and most fascinating monthly published. If you are already a subscriber you can have the paper sent to some friend and the art goods to yourself.

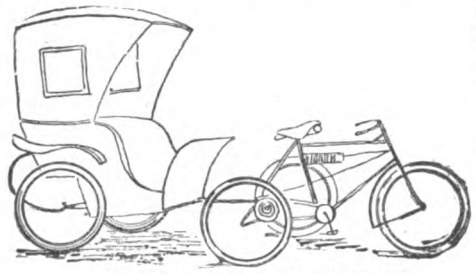
CONDUCTED BY EVERETT G. WHEELMAN.

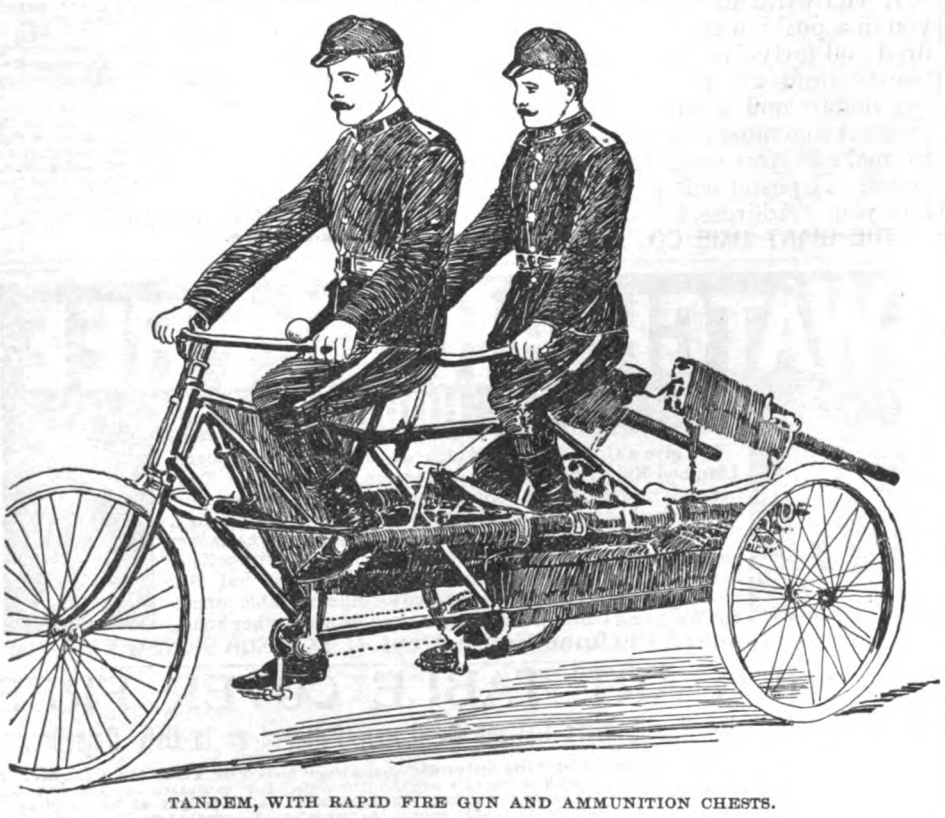
THE recent war has stimulated the interest in bicycles and tricycles as applied to army use. In England, especially, is this interest manifest and the radical men in the Queen's army who are desirous of introducing this new feature into the army are convinced of its importance as an offensive innovation.

Col. Stacey of the famous Scots Guard is the man who first suggested the use of the bicycle in the English army, and, after twelve years persistent hammering away at his pet idea, he has at last succeeded in getting the authorities to look with favor upon the plan to establish a well drilled cycling corps in the regular army. The volunteers, as the organization that in America would be called the national guard is known there, have long had their cycling corps. The war office tried to discourage the idea when it was first mooted, but their opposition failed to prevent the formation, on April 1st, 1889, of the first military cycling corps, the 26th Middlesex volunteers. To-day it is the largest, smartest and most efficient corps in the country and it is mainly due to the exertions that the war office has been induced ultimately to adopt the cycle in connection with the regular service. Although not attached to any particular battalion, this corps always accompanies the South London brigade upon its marches. At the present moment it can mobilize a force of one hundred and twenty men. It is a curious circumstance that when this corps was founded, it applied in the natural course of things to the war office for an official drill; but even this formality was denied the cyclists, and they were thus compelled to formulate their own drill. Col. Savilo, when he severed his connection with the regular forces, held the commandership of this corps for two years.



When Lord Wolseley stepped into the position of commander-in-chief of the British army, vacated by the Duke of Cambridge, it was anticipated that some concession to the cyclists would be made as Lord Wolseley had declared "that they would be invaluable, especially upon the fine roads in India." But the anticipation was not realized, and it was only recently that the army authorities relented, and now propose to draw a certain number of men from the regulars, and to thoroughly inculcate them in cycling drill at Aldershot. The manœuvers have shown that in action the military cyclist requires plenty of room to move around smartly. This is another reason why the campaign in Cuba could not have been taken as a criterion of the success or failure of the bicycle in war. When extended in a lateral line, one yard must be left between each man to enable him to ground his machine without clashing with his neighbor. When marching in files, or single file, that is one behind the other in one longitudinal line—a distance of one foot at least—or as it is called in the military vernacular, a "cycle distance"—must be maintained between each bicycle. As may be naturally supposed, to maintain anything like order and uniformity the speed of marching has to be gauged by the pace of the slowest rider, but the average marching speed is about ten miles an hour. This fluctuates, however, according to the conditions of the road and weather. It is almost impossible to maintain an absolutely compact order, as accidents to the machines, such as a puncture, compel a man to drop out. As a rule, while en route, the cyclists "march at ease," and although they may not leave their positions they have a little more latitude extended to them than to the ordinary soldiers, being permitted to talk and smoke.

As an advance guard it has been demonstrated that the military cyclist is invaluable. He presents a very small mark as compared with a cavalryman, and when he is pursued nothing short of a breakdown of his wheel can stop him. His tactics are bewildering, for he can advance and retire so swiftly that an enemy never knows where he has been or where to look for him next. Another advantage among the many that the cyclist soldier has over the cavalryman is this: supposing cavalrymen wish to dismount in order to use their carbines, one man out of every four must hold the bridles of the horses for his three comrades so that the attacking force is thereby reduced by 25 per cent. Even when driven to bay a posse of cyclists is by no means a despicable foe. In this eventuality they take up their position behind the grounded cycles, from whence they can maintain a terrible fire. One hundred cyclists in such a position could fire about forty thousand rounds so that they could without doubt, account for a fairly good number of their opponents before their ammunition was expended.



The cyclist soldier's paramount business is skirmishing, reconnoitring, carrying dispatches and obtaining information, in which departments he is eminently successful, being able to hold out longer than can the horse of a cavalryman. It is pre-eminence in these duties of war which has earned for the cycle corps the apposite cognomen of "the eyes and ears of the army." After nightfall, owing to the rapidity and silence with which he moves the cyclist is especially efficacious, being able to creep along noiselessly in the shadow, and at the psychological moment whiz by the sentry. When armed with the quick-firing machine guns, with which they are about to be equipped, these cyclist soldiers will form a most formidable corps in the British volunteer army.

The automobile vehicle, as the various notices of its adoption for one purpose and another clearly demonstrate, is very slowly but none the less surely working its way into public favor on both sides of the Atlantic. American buyers are confessedly more conservative in the adoption of the horseless wagons than English interests, consequently the editorial discussion of the present merit of motor delivery vans by one of the foremost English trade journals is interesting. This paper admits that motor cars are not perfect, but it also points out that neither is the horse a perfect machine for traction purposes. The great question is entirely one of cost, and there is no doubt that after fair trial a good motor-van, especially when only used intermittently, will be found cheaper than a horse. Many firms, the account continues, are using motor-vans more for advertisement than economy, but in large towns the novelty of the thing has now worn off and its advertising value is proportionately diminished. The cost of a good serviceable petroleum-driven van to carry loads of ten or fifteen hundred weight is roughly given as twelve hundred dollars; for tradesmen's purposes a petroleum-driven motor van is recommended as a first preference, and a steam motor, one fired by petroleum as second choice. Among the points which it is important to ascertain beforehand, especially for those who live in hilly districts, is what gradients the vehicle will ascend. Simplicity of construction is one of the most important features after this.

A particularly novel type of automobile advertised in an English journal as light and gracefully constructed is shown in the illustration, which represents a combination coupe and motor tricycle. The motor-cycle is detachable from the carriage and can be ridden by itself, but when attached as shown it serves the purpose of a horse. The groom or footman is supposed to sit in the motor-tricycle saddle, and to start the combination by two or three turns of the pedals after which the petroleum-driven motor attached to the rear of the tricycle develops sufficient power to propel the cab without any further assistance. The oil reservoir will hold a sufficient quantity of oil to carry the cab between fifty and sixty miles. The cab is stated to hold two persons comfortably.

WONDERFUL ASTROLOGY.
Here are some questions that interest most people. It is claimed they can be answered by astrological knowledge.
At what age am I liable to die? What diseases, afflictions or accidents am I liable to?
Will I marry? Will I marry more than once. At about what age? Will I have children?
What kind of a person should I marry? Will my love affairs be successful? What person truly loves me?
Is my lover or husband false or true? Should I be divorced? Should I have children? Should I travel?
Should I take a long or short journey? In what direction should I go? When should I go?
In what part of the earth will I be most fortunate? What are my lucky and unlucky days?
Should I remove? If so, how far? Should I take a partner in my business?
What business or calling am I best adapted for? Will I win or lose in lawsuits? In gambling?
Will I have more friends than enemies and who are they? Should I purchase real estate or personal property?
At what age or in what years will I be most lucky? Are my friends trustworthy? Who can I trust?
Shall I enjoy the luxuries of wealth? Am I liable to recover lost property? Where is money buried?
Should I do business for myself or for others?
If you want valuable astrological information with a pen picture of your future wife, husband or sweetheart, send a lock of your hair, give date of birth, and full name and address. Enclose 12 cents in stamps. You will be astonished at the true revelations that I will make. Address, PROF. A. D. ARGO, Box 1207, BOSTON, MASS.

A Labor-Saving device entirely new and universal in demand. Will last a lifetime and costs but Twenty-five cents. Just one in the market and over 500 Gross sold last month. Every family in the land wants one or more. All you do to sell them is simply show the lady of the house or the office man how it works on his window and you will depart with one less every time, but in its place a quarter.
The Magical Sponge differs from the ordinary sponge in nature, while the common sponge is of vegetable origin and found in the ocean, the Magical Sponge is a mineral production and found in the United States, dug from the ground, carefully prepared and manufactured into sponges for the Housekeeper, Merchant, Liveryman, Metal Workers, and all persons who desire to keep their homes, offices, and business places in a clean and healthy condition.
No Soap or water is needed or even used with the Magical Sponge for Cleaning Windows or any outside Metal. In the winter time it has no equal, it does not freeze, and no water being used (other than what is in the sponge) all trouble and hard work is avoided. For Cleaning Baseboards, Window Sills, Wainscoating and painted surfaces, it acts like a charm; takes all the finger marks, spots, grease and dirt away, leaving a Clean, Polished Surface.
Good men wanted all over the country to handle these goods, big inducements offered steady workers, and exclusive sale. To Agents, Salesmen, and house to house canvassers, who send us 25 cents for 6 months' subscription, we will send one sample post paid, and make them a business proposition. Write at once. Secure your territory.

One person out of every four has a weak or diseased heart, and still very few people are aware of it. The trouble is that most doctors don't understand heart troubles. They very often treat patients for disorders of the Stomach, Lungs, Kidneys and Nerves, when the trouble is in the heart itself.

You can tell whether your heart is affected better than a physician. The signs and symptoms are sure and certain. If you have any one of the following symptoms, you are in grave danger, and may be the next victim to drop dead.

Symptoms of* HEART DISEASE

Fluttering, Palpitation, or Skipping Beats (always due to weak or diseased heart); Shortness of Breath from going up stairs, walking, etc.; Tenderness, Numbness or Pain in left side, arm or under shoulder blade; Fainting Spells, Dizziness, Hungry or Weak Spells; Spots Before the Eyes; Sudden Starting in Sleep; Dreaming, Nightmare; Choking Sensation in Throat; Oppressed Feeling in Chest; Cold Hands and Feet; Painful to Lie on Left Side; Dropsy; Swelling of the Feet or Ankles (one of the surest signs); Neuralgia Around the Heart; Sudden deaths rarely result from other causes.

MEDICINE SENT FREE. I have a positive cure in my Heart Tablets for this most dreaded of all diseases. I am daily curing hundreds of men and women. To show my confidence in my Heart Tablets, I will send, postpaid, a box for trial absolutely free to any sufferers who will send their name and address. This liberal offer should be accepted at once, because heart disease is always fatal, and death comes like a flash of lightning. Enclose stamp for postage. Address, DR. WE GIVE THIS WATCH FOR A CLUB OF 4.

Thirty Minutes is a short time, but many have earned one of these watches in less time than that. It is one of the very best watches for time ever offered to our readers at no matter what the price asked for it. We know, of course, there are watches that cost more money, because they are in gold or silver cases, but they will not keep any better time, simply because they cannot. This watch keeps not perfect time, we never saw the watch that did, but it keeps as near perfect time as watches usually do. We have such faith in this watch as a timekeeper that we send with every one a guarantee just as binding as that given with any watch, no matter what make. We are willing to give you this watch if you will do us a slight service, which you can easily do in an hour. We wish to increase our subscription list, and we want the assistance of every reader of this paper to that end. We do not want you to do it for nothing, we will reward you for it. You can easily secure this valuable watch if you get four subscribers to this paper, at our special subscription price of 25 cents a year each. Do this, sending us $1.00, with the names of four subscribers to this paper, and we will send our paper to each subscriber for one year, and we will send you the watch to reward you for your efforts in our behalf. Start out now and see what you can do. Remember we guarantee every watch. If you get five subscribers and send us $1.25 for the same we will also send you a nice chain. CONDUCTED BY DIGITUS.

I AM sorry that I cannot keep up with all the hands that are sent in so as to give each one the first reading after they are received, but it is impossible and I have to take them in order as they come. Space is limited, and I shall have to ask those who are still waiting to see their impressions appear in COMFORT, to be patient another month.

The first hand which I shall read this month is the hand of "America." I must say in the first place that these impressions were not properly treated and that nothing was used to prevent the smoke from rubbing off the paper. The bits of cork which were stuck around here and there did not prevent the impressions from rubbing somewhat, so that I shall not pretend that this reading will be infallible in all particulars. The main lines, however, are distinct enough so that I can follow them without much trouble. The life line is a good one, although considerably bound in with the head line during the early years which indicates that there was not much independence of thought. There is a break in the center which is joined together with a square. This square means protection against some serious mishap, probably an illness, at this point in the life. As the marks do not appear in the right hand probably this trouble will never appear. All lines running upward in any place in the hand are always good signs. The future of this person will evidently be pleasanter than the earlier part of the life. It looks, so far as I can judge from these impressions, clear and good without any serious troubles. She will travel somewhat toward the latter part of her life. She will probably outlive her husband, but will either live with him until she is fifty-five, or so, or she will marry again the second time. The lines are blurred in this instance so that I cannot tell whether it is the same line or not. There is not much indication of money in this hand although no lines of extreme poverty appear. She will be sensible and affectionate, and have many friends. I do not see any serious trouble in her married life; in fact I should say it was a happy one. She is inclined to be somewhat melancholy in her disposition, and broods over imaginary trouble too much. This is a tendency which she ought to overcome, and which will add to her unhappiness, unless overcome. She has a hand for business, but it is impossible to tell from anybody's hand whether they will positively go into business, or not. All we can say is that in case she goes into a business life she has the right kind of hand to succeed. Although, as I said before she will never be very rich, she will be in comfortable circumstances. She is lofty in her motives and aspirations, but should cultivate a spirit of content. She is extremely fond of poetry and of sentimental fiction, and of anything that is morbid in literature. She should not indulge in these things, as she is too morbid and sensitive in her nature. She should cultivate cheerfulness and hope, and fight against a tendency toward discouragement. If grief comes to her she will be very seriously affected by it, and inclined to give up too easily. This she must also try to overcome. She will be inclined to lung troubles, or bronchial, and should guard against that as much as possible. On the whole I should say hers was a rather fortunate career, with no more trouble than belongs to ordinary individuals.

"AMERICA."

The little hands which she sends evidently belong to a child. There is some sort of illness, or fatality at the age of about twenty from which the subject will probably be preserved and will live to a reasonably good age. The mother of this child should be careful that it does not overwork at school as there is a slight tendency to brain troubles. Her health will be delicate through childhood, and she will need care until she is twenty-five. After that her health will be good most of her life. I should judge that she was a very promising child, and had some talent which will be developed later.

"FAILURE."

"Failure" failed to use fixatif on his impressions so that they too are quite badly rubbed, although it is possible to read something from them. No matter how well the impressions may look when you are sending them out, unless the smoke and the lines are firmly fixed by spraying them with fixatif, or some preparation of gum arabic, and allowing them to dry perfectly, they will not be in good condition when they reach me, as there is constant rubbing in the mails. "Failure" seems to have chosen a name for himself that is not exactly appropriate for he has some very good lines. He has the hand of a successful business man; one with good judgment, perseverance, and in the main good health. He may be depended upon by his friend, or by his enemies. He will make some money and during the latter part of his life will be well off. He will, however, have to make it for himself, as what comes to him is not through luck, but through his own efforts and perseverance. He is a man of great tact and strong will power, and is not easily influenced by others. He will have a severe illness at about the age of fifty, and great care will have to be used to pull him through. If he gets through with that all right he will live to be seventy or over. He will marry early in life and have a very congenial partner, and lead a happy life up to the age of fifty or afterward. His life will not be without crosses and dangers, however, and he will have many things to contend against. There will be opposition from friends and from foes, but his sterling qualities will lead him to fight against them, and he will succeed. His Mount of Mars is well developed, and I should think the line of Mars, which adds to his fighting qualities, was also well developed. By fighting I do not mean a rough and tumble fight, but that sort of courage which will stand him in good stead in fighting the obstacles which may come up before him in life. On the whole his is a successful hand unless I am greatly mistaken in the impression which is before me

"EUGENIA."

"Eugenia" sends some of the best impressions which I have seen for some time. I only wish I could have them reproduced exactly as they come to me so that you might all see what I mean when I say they are good impressions. "Eugenia's" hand shows many ups and downs, but is, on the whole, a very fortunate one. She is a person of highly nervous temperament; very refined, fond of music, art and literature. Fond of good company, admiration, travel, and all the good things of life. She is, however, a person of a great deal of good sense and good judgment and does not allow her liking for good things to lead her into trouble. Naturally she is inclined to a rather morbid turn of mind, but she has overcome this in a large measure, and will do so as she gets older. She has had much opposition to meet from friends during the early part of her life, but the latter part will be free from this sort of thing, and will have many things to be thankful for. There are many upward rising lines from her life line which shows that the influences are good and that her life will improve as it grows older. I don't think she will have children; not many at least. Two marriages are indicated, although the first may be only an engagement. The second marriage, if it is the second, will take place at about the age of thirty-five or forty, and will be exceptionally happy. The health was not good through childhood, and will be delicate all through life; that is, the constitution is not very strong. There is a star in the center of both hands, which is a good sign, indicating brilliancy and good fortune. She will have many friends, and be much respected in places where she lives. She has a strong will, is a person of tact, and is a leader in the society in which she moves. She is naturally formed for a leader and will take a prominent part wherever she lives in all matters in which she is interested. She will have plenty of this world's goods and they will increase as she grows older. She has an exceptionally strong and clear marriage line, especially the last one. She will travel a good deal, mostly in her own country, and will die in her native land. She has had a great deal of admiration from the opposite sex, and is probably a very attractive woman. On the whole, although her hand indicates a very sensitive, nervous temperament, with some ill health, and some trouble caused through the affections, it is a very fortunate hand and indicates a fine character and a great degree of success.

"LUNA."

The other palm which she sends is marked "Luna" and is probably her own left hand. This indicates a much more morbid tendency than the first one, and a person who is much given to sentimental thoughts and reading; one who could write poetry if she chose, and who would be rather inclined to revel in gloomy thoughts and morbid sensations. Her health, according to this would naturally not be good, and would break up in old age with rather unfortunate symptoms. She would not live to be more than fifty or sixty. Her marriage would be of short duration, and she would have a long illness from the age of thirty. An early attachment which appears at the very beginning grows away and separates, showing that this friend recedes from her life and does not enter it again. Her marriage at about twenty-five or thereabouts, is a happy one, and there is a line joining the fate line on Saturn which would indicate happiness and good fortune in old age. The heart line indicates many flirtations, but a good deal of good sense and strong affection, and marriage at last with a man of the Saturnian type. She would be very brilliant, and shine in society and could succeed in literature should she make the attempt. She has many troubles, however, caused by the affections, up to the age of thirty, after which life would be calmer as long as it lasted. If this is the left hand of Eugenia, I should say that she has greatly improved upon it and that her prospects, according to the right hand, which is the one we believe in, are very much improved.

A $5.00 SHAVING SET FOR ONLY $1.49.

TEN MILLION MEN WILL SAVE $250,000,000.

The average man saves about twenty-five dollars a year by shaving himself and by having a good outfit, you can take comfort enough and save dollars enough to carry you over many rough places in life. We have tried to get up a practical shaving outfit for many years, but the expense of fitting out a suitable case of bang-up A No. one tools has been so great that not until a visit to Norway and Sweden revealed the fact that Swedish Razors were now the best in the world and the makers were anxious to prove it to the American people could we do so. Thus we bargained for a large lot of the best quality at very low figures. By getting the goods from different countries and buying in large lots, we have made up a case of great value at very small cost. These outfits come packed in cases eight inches long, six inches wide and five inches high. The combination consists of 1 Royal Steel Swedish Razor, single value $3.00; 1 Genuine, Horsehide, Double, Reversible, Canvass-back, Nickle-hung, Ebonized Handle Razor Strop, value $1.00; 1 Real China Shaving Mug; 1 Cake Star Shaving Soap; 1 Best Bristle, large handle Lather Brush; 1 Cake Perfumed Lump Magnesia; 1 Stick rich perfumed Cosmetic—making a grand $5.00 combination, all packed in a compact case ready for shipment. We estimated that nearly every man in the country out of necessity shaves himself at some time or other during each month and one long wait in a barber shop sometimes costs more than this whole outfit is valued at. Every man should have an outfit in the house for emergency's use at all events and we have thus got it together at a low cost so as to be able to offer the best articles at the lowest cost. Every woman should see to it that either her Father, her Husband, her Brother or her Sweetheart has one of these outfits. They make the best presents one can give to a gentleman, and you can get one free as follows: Send a club of six yearly subscribers to Illustrated Family Herald, at 25c each and we will send an outfit all charges paid, or send $1.49 in cash and we deliver it free—extending your subscription one year.

Poor old Columbus! Even his bones can not rest in peace in the busy bustling land that he discovered. After lying for years in the cathedral of Havana they are to be taken back to Spain. Spain's last permanent possession in the vast continent which he gave her, is to be the bones of the man whose living body she loaded with chains and whose heart she broke with ingratitude.

Christmas is most emphatically the children's holiday. When the Lord of the Earth became a little child he gave a dignity and a sanctity to that state, and every passing Christmas but emphasizes the value to the world of child life. At best the Christmas for "grown ups" is a festival with a slight tinge of sadness, but to the child with his faith in Santa Claus and general trustfulness it is a time of riotous, unadulterated joy. A Christmas away from the influence of children is a Christmas in name only.

The old Persian poet Omar Khayam continues to tempt translation to give new versions of his most ancient of modern ideas. Miss Elizabeth Curtis, a New England girl, has won much praise among literary people for her new rendering of the thought. Edward Fitzgerald first made the Western world familiar with the line of thought of the Persian; then came the translation of Richard Le Galliene and now this later translation. Many of the quatrains are sung in the song cycle "In a Persian Garden."

"Peace on earth; good will to men," comes home to the mind of the average American with great force at this particular time. One needs a touch of war to know what peace means. The great unrest in Europe deepens the significance which the message of peace bears to us. With France, Germany and England jostling each other in the Dark Continent, with the Russian Bear and the British Lion reaching at each other across the Flowery Kingdom, the American felicitates himself that in his taste of what a famous general calls "hell" he has maintained principle at the minimum sacrifice of life.

How common sense, convenience and comfort all go down before the all conquering touch of fashion. Golf, bicycling and Rainy Day Club have opened a vista of freedom before the civilized victims of long skirts. It was predicted by optimists that the long thralldom of the skirt had passed forever and its emancipated victims skipped in athletic glee over the fences of convention. But alas! Dame Fashion extended her wand and the skirts clung in uncomfortable tightness around the body and trailed in defiant protest behind the meek victims. When my lady is not athletic she must wear an uncomfortably long skirt.

Christmas 1898, offers a few inducements to cheer the way of the man who wishes to give "Her" a Christmas gift and yet is at a total loss as to what form the offering shall take. Bracelets and ear-rings after being under the ban of fashion for many years are again popular. Old chamois bags are gotten out and the jewelry that has been hopelessly out of style for years is now the "latest" thing. It would seem that the war had brought with it a revival of the fashions of 1860, for the ear-rings are of the long, drooping variety. We may be so near the annexation of lands where the nose rings are still popular adornments for women, that this semi-savage decoration of our women may be but an effort to convince these dwellers in "waste lands apart" that they are not entirely an alien race. Whatever this decoration may indicate of our civilization, it certainly smooths the path of the troubled seeker after Christmas gifts.

One of the most interesting questions raised by the annexation of Porto Rico was the one of the right of suffrage. A native of Porto Rico claimed the right to vote in the November elections in New York. He claimed that he was now a citizen of the United States, possessed of the legal qualifications for the right of suffrage demanded in New York. It was a question that was entirely new and its settlement involved many nice points in constitutional law. We have had much interesting information in regard to this little island which is the first fruits of our conquest. Its civilization seems very strange and very foreign to our ideas, but Yankee push and enterprise will soon eliminate all the obsolete fashions that seem so primitive and so peculiar to the average citizen. It is said that nearly every one in Porto Rico keeps a horse and carriage. In a few months we can imagine the "electrics" whizzing through the one-time quiet little Spanish colony. The natives hailed the raising of the Stars and Stripes with cheers. It was a most dramatic passing of the old, but the most dramatic contrasts will be presented when American commercialism takes the place of the old methods.

Sorosis, after spurning the ground for years and indulging in airy flights of fancy, philosophy and facts, has at last touched bottom. When an enterprising shoe dealer succeeded in gaining official warrant to have a shoe named after the Club and proceeded to advertise the "Sorosis Shoe" the wrath of the members knew no bounds. It was a very practical, commonsense sort of shoe too. But Sorosis has a soul above its shoe strings and emphatically resented lending its elevating influence to "soles" spelled in that way. The Sorosis bonnet has long been a "joy forever" to the irreverent reporters, who refused to see in it "a thing of beauty." One prominent member even tied her handkerchief over her much maligned bonnet when she came out from a meeting to give some stray crumbs of information to a reporter.

One would expect the Sorosis shoe to combine an extremely fashionable shape with a breadth of sole and a superfine quality of uppers not to be met with in a shoe that was only stylish or one that was only practical. In future ages the naturalist who can build an animal up from the bones of the foot may gaze at the final remains of a Sorosis shoe and from this give to future ages the combination of qualities that produce a member of Sorosis.

The current publications and the book stores are submerged in a flood of "golf literature." The bicycling story is emphatically a back number. The golf vocabulary is too technical to hold the attention of the unfashionable outsider who is not a "golf fiend." Even the Scotch dialect story is plain reading beside the "fluffy," "tee," put, bunker, "nine up and seven to play," "woozle," and kindred terms that enliven the pages of golf literature. The snow fall must of necessity curb the enthusiasm of golf players, but such little details as fall rains and mists were treated with the sublime indifference to discomfort that distinguishes a true devotee to the historic game. The outsider is led to wonder if it is fun or fashion that gives the game its great vogue among people of leisure. There is a utility side to the bicycling craze that ensures its existence even though the stamp of fashionable approval has been withdrawn. When it became possible for the 4,000,000 as well as for the "400" to own a wheel the fashionable vogue of the sport vanished. The workingman or workingwoman does not cease to regard the wheel as a pleasure as well as a convenience. "Golfing" with its expensive paraphernalia of club houses, servants and expensive grounds can never become a "popular" sport in the sense of being an amusement of the many. It must be classed with yachting, horse-racing, and kindred amusements whose foundations lie in a plethoric pocket book. As a result "golf literature" appeals to but a limited circle of readers.

We hear much of Christmas joys in town—of miles of glittering shop windows, of the gaiety of the streets and the places of amusement. It is all the creation of the paragraphers. Christmas—the real—the only—the genuine Christmas never comes to the dweller in towns. Christmas is a home festival. The Christmas spirit is not found where the extremes of wealth and poverty walk side by side. Confronted with the actual physical want and suffering of the masses the "good will to men" seems a phrase. In the great cities there is little of the real spirit of Christmas that seems to need the miles of snow-covered landscape and the great fires of a country home. One needs but to eat a Christmas dinner in an average table-de-hote restaurant to appreciate what the Christmas spirit means. There is dinner—good in its way—there are the crowds of people whose home is a "furnished room;" there are the Christmas greens in the window and the mistletoe over the door, the roast goose and plum pudding and the "Merry Christmas to all" at the head of the menu, but someway Christmas is not to be caught in that way. It is only a poor makeshift for the genuine article. Christmas is within like most of the real joys of this life and it lies within. We are less truly ourselves away from our contact with Nature. We can not make a king with the robes of royalty and we can not make a Christmas with the trappings of the season.

The real genuine book lover has a wide field of interest in his chosen passion. One can be a book lover upon the most infinitesimal of incomes and taste all the pleasures of the real book worm. On the other hand the collector of rare editions, of brochures and of black letter must needs be a millionaire to ride his favorite hobby. Book binding is becoming quite a fad with women of leisure as its artistic possibilities are almost limitless. At the same time it offers a field of employment to women in search of a congenial and refined occupation. Book binding requires much patience and no slight outlay of time and money for its acquisition. From six months' to a year's time is required to master the details and an outlay of not less than $500. Many women of wealth and leisure spend much time in binding their pet books and so giving an individual touch to their libraries. The method of "interlineation" is a favorite idea with book lovers. Unbound copies of some pet book are procured and the collector then devotes himself to gathering pictures to illustrate the book. These come from all sources, and etchings, wood engravings and copper plates are found side by side with the modern machine pictures. One biblipole has 4000 pictures to illustrate a Life of Washington. A Life of Lincoln boasts 2000 illustrations collected from different sources. When this book is bound in a cover designed and made by the collector it makes an "edition-de-luxe" far beyond the most ambitious efforts of the publisher. A room in the Boston Public Library is set aside for books bearing upon Spanish history. Many of the most valuable books in this collection are the work of the "Castilian Club" in Boston. Nineteen books have been compiled from the researches of the Club. These are either type written or in library round hand, and scattered among the leaves are the etchings, engravings and photographs relating to the subject. These have been collected by the Club members.

"COON" SONGS.

HOW MUSIC IS MADE POPULAR.

Interesting Facts About Modern Music.

"De Coaxin'est Man" published above is one of those very popular "coon" songs which delight the hearts of everybody and become wildly popular everywhere. It has always been known that the negro had as much music as any of the human race, and to his natural love of music we are indebted for many of the most popular pieces we sing. After the Civil War there were hundreds of beautiful songs culled from the slave days, which were full of melody but of a generally mournful cadence. As we got away from the strife of war the negro music became brighter and more catchy; and, recently, the new period of "coon" music in its catchy, breezy style has been made popular, largely by the efforts of that popular actress, May Irwin, who first grasped the possibilities of this class of music. Since her immense triumph the fad has spread and there are constantly growing lists of similar pieces, while their popularity remains unbounded.

Speaking of war days reminds COMFORT of the rapid advances that have taken place in the world since our Civil War. Almost everything has shot ahead in the wonderful race of progress more than in the preceding two centuries. When such songs as "My Old Kentucky Home," "The Mocking Bird," "Sweet Maggie May," etc., were first published, the regular price of sheet music was from 50 cents to $1.00. Only a quarter of a century later the modern methods of COMFORT allow its readers to have the very best white sheet music, with full size words and score for a trifle more than the cost of postage.

"Ah!" says the unbeliever, "even such progress as that cannot have taken place in so short a time; there's some catch or cheat about it." Oh, no. It is exactly as we state and hundreds and thousands of unsolicited written testimonials have been received by the publishers. Miss Hilda Loeb, Morgan City, La., writes us: "Wonders will never cease. I have many a piece that has been advertised but have never been so well pleased as I was with your music, and if any of my friends want music, I will certainly let you know." "Words are not adequate to express to you how much I like it. How can you afford to sell such large quantity and good quality for such a small amount. It is just as good as that for which I have paid 40, 50 and 60 cents. I shall buy music from no other dealer," writes S. E. Gibson, Henderson, Texas. "Think it equal in appearance and quality to more costly music. Kindly accept thanks for promptness," says W. J. Griese, 204 W. Maryland St., Evansville, Ind.

If the reader will look on another page of COMFORT he will find this great and modern music offer which has never before been equalled. In addition to this we have several new attractions which we are able to send this month as follows: No. 180. Far Away. A very popular song, the words by Miss M. Lindsay, and the music by Miss J. W. Bliss. No. 181. Variations for Piano on Auld Lang Syne, by G. W. Durkee, he who wrote the variations on Old Oaken Bucket, advertised as No. 171, being the most popular piece, without any exception, on the entire list, and of which 128,000 copies have already been sold. No. 182. Father Is Drinking Again. A temperance song, words and music by B. G. Bickmore. No. 183. Golden Rain, Nocturne, for Piano, by C. W. Cloy.

If you have not tried this plan of obtaining music do so now and call your music-loving friends' attention to this money-saving opportunity to get sheet music, and you can have any of the above numbers included in any list of ten pieces you may make up from the offer on opposite page.

Legends of the Crucifixion.

HERE are different opinions held as to the tree from which was made the cross upon which Jesus was crucified. Some authorities say the cedar, others, the olive, and others still say the cross was made of various different woods—the arms of one kind, the body of another, and the head piece of a third; but this last theory is hardly credible, as it is not to be supposed that so much pains would be taken with the instrument of death for a malefactor. Popular superstition says that it was the elder; and in Scotland people will not burn the wood of this tree, even if other wood is scarce and this plentiful. Some carry their superstitions so far as to take refuge under an elder during a thunder storm, averring that lightning will not strike an elder because it was once used to hold the body of the Saviour. In the north of England the elder is planted in the form of a cross upon a newly made grave, and if it blooms there it is held to be a sure sign that the soul of the dead person is happy.

Another legend says that the cross was made from the wood of the aspen, and that the leaves have trembled ever since on account of their guilt. Still another legend says that all the trees but the aspen shivered at the time of the crucifixion, and the aspen, because it did not do so then, has been doomed to quiver ever since.

The dwarf birch, in Scotland, is believed to have been stunted in growth because from it were made the rods with which Christ was scourged.

The Judas tree, or Red-bud, is a small tree having rose-colored blossoms. This tree flowers in the spring before leaving, and then it is pink with blossom, like the peach tree. It gets its name from the legend that it was the tree from which Judas hanged himself, and it is said to have at once flowered in the effort to hide itself from very shame at its disgrace, and the blossoms turned crimson from the same sense of shame.

The passion flower, a family of climbing plants, get their name from the fancied resemblance of the various parts of the flower to the different things used at the time of our Lord's passion and death. The nails, the crown of thorns, the five wounds, and even the hammer and the cross itself being found in some part of the blossom.

In trimming for Christmas the English use holly, bay, rosemary and laurel, but never mistletoe; partly because it was used by the old Druids, and, in some sections of the country, because it is believed to have been used for the true cross. Ivy is excluded because it was, in old times, sacred to Bacchus; Cypress, also, is sacred to funeral, and so must not be used at so joyful a time as Christmas.

New York has an orchestra of left handed fiddlers.

FOR WINTER USE.

Kitty—"Oh, I say, Fan, have you saved any fellows over from the summer campaign?"

Fannie—"Not a one. I guess I'll have to fall back on Charlie. I have been engaged to him for three years."

USEFUL TO ADVERTISERS.

Charles H. Fuller's Advertising Directory of Leading Newspapers and Magazines, 1898, is a complete and perfect ready-reference book for advertisers. The information it contains is so arranged that the size of the book is brought down to the proportions of the manual, and there seem to be no omissions of essential material on that account. The classification of the publications is made on the basis of their character, and the sub-classification is by states and territories. A glance at the table of contents shows the searcher instantly what he wants, and he turns to it easily. It does not purport to be a complete newspaper directory, but points to the leading periodicals of every description—daily newspapers, Sunday newspapers, weekly and semi-weekly newspapers, magazines, monthly and semi-monthly publications, religious papers, Sunday school papers, agricultural, juvenile, medical, sporting papers, all of them the leading ones in their spheres. The circulation and advertising rates of these are given with accuracy. There are many special heads, such as foreign language lists, 50 representative daily and 50 representative weekly papers, banner list of monthlies and semi-monthlies, etc. It is published by Charles H. Fuller's Advertising Agency, Chicago, Buffalo and New York.

A "tinker's dam" has nothing to do with swearing. It is merely the dam, or stoppage, made of flour and water, with which the tinker stops the gap he is mending until the tin or pewter he is using has cooled.

CONDUCTED BY AUNT SARAH.

THERE is something on the market in the shape of condensed vegetables which will simplify the housewife's difficulties and save much thought on her part during the winter months when fresh vegetables are not to be obtained except at high prices, and one must depend upon the regular winter vegetables, which lose all attractiveness after a constant diet on them. Spinach comes in a small package of about five inches square, and which is said to contain one-half peck; this is of course condensed by a process which is said to be perfectly healthful and still retains all the flavor of the fresh spinach, and yet is condensed into this small compass, and will keep indefinitely; the cost of these packages is but ten cents each, and all that has to be done is to let the contents boil in the proper amount of water the length of time indicated in the directions which come with each package, and the result is fresh spinach in all seasons, and at a very low price. Other vegetables are treated in the same way—also soups, with a much better result, so it is said, than from the canned soups familiar to us all, as no liquid is contained in the package—water being added to the dry vegetables as the soup is to be used.

We have had inquiries regarding table decorations for everyday use—and we show herewith a silver jardiniere which is useful, ornamental, strong and durable, and has another virtue, it is inexpensive. It is seven inches across the top, stands on three short legs, has a separate inside dish of metal with rings for lifting out, and yet costs but $1.89. Of course plants of the kind for table decoration are short-lived, being of the fern species, and as they are in the center of the table all the time they of course get less light and sun than plants standing nearer the window, and so do not develop as fast; but it is very easy to replace a plant as it begins to grow yellow, and thus a variety is obtained; the small ferns cost very little. A cocoa palm is the best plant for a center plant, and then the small ferns or mosses may be set in under the palm branches, which grow very straight and thus leave the stem exposed. Care should be used in the watering of these plants; they need less water than is generally supposed, and every day or two the inside pan should be emptied of any water that may have run through. A very simple meal looks quite sumptuous when there is a fresh green centerpiece on the table, yet how few housewives realize this fact; they decorate the table with cut flowers for company, but never think of the everyday greenery which is such a rest to tired eyes when kept in healthy condition.

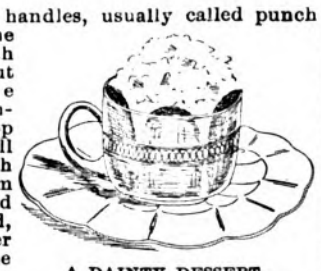
One of our readers has asked us for a new recipe for cooking halibut: we know of no positively new way for cooking this delectable fish, but we have a recipe for cheese sauce to be served with baked halibut which is delicious to those who care for cheese.

BAKED HALIBUT.

Wash and wipe two pounds of halibut and put in a pan. Pour around it one-half cup milk and bake thirty-five minutes, basting often with the milk. When done, remove skin and pour over.

CHEESE SAUCE.



Melt one tablespoon butter, add one and one-half teaspoons cornstarch and pour on slowly three-fourths cup milk. Add one-half pound mild cheese cut fine and season with salt and pepper; when cheese melts add one egg beaten slightly.

For those who do not care for cheese, the following may be liked:

CREAM WINE SAUCE.

Melt four tablespoons butter; add four tablespoons flour and stir until slightly brown; then add two cups cream and three tablespoons sherry wine and salt and pepper to taste.

A dainty dessert after a heavy dinner is one made of lady fingers and whipped cream. Take glass cups with handles, usually called punch glasses—and line each cup with lady fingers cut in halves, the round end coming near the top of the cup. Fill the center with whipped cream piled high, and when served, pass a decanter of sherry wine to each guest, to be poured over the whole. It is not the thing at all to pour over the wine before serving, as the cake soaks up the wine and the cream loses its freshness; then, too, each guest takes just what he likes, some little and some much—and of course some would prefer simply the cake and cream without the addition of the wine. These little glass cups are very convenient to have on hand, as ices, jellies, fruit pudding and various kinds of dessert may be served in them as well as punch, lemonade, etc.

A DAINTY DESSERT.

COFFEE CUSTARDS.

Scald two cups of milk with two tablespoons ground coffee. Remove coffee and add the milk to three egg yolks slightly beaten, one-fourth cup sugar, one-eighth teaspoon salt and one-fourth teaspoon vanilla. Strain into custard cups, and bake in a pan of hot water until firm. Chill, remove from cups and cover with a meringue made of the whites of two eggs beaten until stiff, five tablespoons powdered sugar and one-fourth teaspoon vanilla.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

OF all the inventions of the tailor (who is of artists the most inventive), I hold the pocket to be one of the most indispensable. Birds have their claw, ruminating beasts their first or ante-stomach, the monkey has his cheek, the opossum her pouch, and so necessary is some convenience of this kind for the human animal, that the savage, who cares not for clothing, makes for himself a pocket if he can. The Hindoo carries his snuff-box in his turban; some of the inhabitants of the Congo make a secret fob in their woolly toupet, of which, as Labat says, the worst use they make is to carry poison in it. The Matotas, a long-haired race, who border upon the Caffres, form their locks into a sort of hollow cylinder, in which they bear along their little implements. The New Zealander is less ingenious; he makes a large opening in his ear, and carries his knife in it. The Ogres, those mighty heroes of the romances of bygone days, who were of course described as worse than savages, and whose ignorance and brutality were in proportion to their bulk, were said, upon the authority of tradition, when they had picked upon a stray traveler or two more than they required for supper, to lodge them in a hollow tooth as a place of security till breakfast-time; whence it may be inferred that they were not liable to toothache, and that they made no use of toothpicks. Ogres, savages, beasts, and birds, then, all require something to serve the purpose of a pocket. Thus much for the necessity of the thing. Touching its antiquity, much might be said; for it would not be difficult to show, with that little assistance from the auxiliaries must, and have, and been, that pockets were coeval with clothing. Moreover, Nature herself shows us the utility, the importance, nay, the indispensability of pockets.

There is but one organ which is common to all animals whatsoever. Some are without noses, some have no heads, others no tails; some neither the one nor the other; (Mine there are who have no brains; some no hearts, others very bad ones; but all have a stomach—and what is a stomach but a live inside pocket?

Pockets are the long result of time and civilization. The Greeks knew nothing about them. The Latin word pera, borrowed directly from the Greek, is as near "pocket" as the classical race could attain to, and the Romans had not even the pera till they copied it from Greece.

The pera, which is often mentioned by Homer, was no proper pocket, but a leathern scrip or bag hung from the shoulder. In such a scrip did Olympus store his broken meat when he was disguised as a beggar. David put five smooth stones in a scrip when he went to meet Goliath. A purse is nothing more than a small bag in which money is contained in the pocket, and in Turkey represents a sum of five hundred piasters. The Indian medicine-bags, called sindjigossan in the Ojibbeway language, were made of the skins of various animals, such as the wildcat, bear, otter and snake; and all retained more or less the shape of these wild animals, as head and tail, and sometimes legs and feet were left on. The Indians imagine that a spirit or breath is inhaled from the bags, possessing the power to blow down and kill a person, as well as to restore him to life and strength again. The scrips of the disciples every one remembers in the New Testament. The Greek, like our Teutonic ancestors, had to carry a wallet, or make what use he might of the fold of the chiton which fell over the girdle. Herodotus speaks of the fold, or Kolpos, in this sense; and Theocritus, when the Alexandrian public would not buy his poems, complained that they held their hands tightly under their Kolpos, where, no doubt, they rattled their drachmas in a vulgar and irritating manner. To such resorts was pocketless man compelled, and he was obliged to make separate sheaths or cases for articles of common use. He did without pocket handkerchiefs. He carried a bag at his side with his money in it, like Isaac, the Jew, whose bag it will be remembered was snatched away by Prince John. So long was man pocketless that in an ancient glossary of English costume, the word "pocket" does not occur at all, though we find "poke" and "pouch." "With that he pulled a dial from his poke," says Shakespeare; and this poke was probably a wallet worn at the side, or from the shoulder.

The sporan, or pouch, is a distinguishing feature of the Highland costume; but its first adoption, in its present, peculiar and ornamental form, is equally involved in mystery. A wallet, or dorlack, carried on the right side, was worn as early as the fourteenth century, as we have evidence in the effigy of a Knight in the cathedral church of Iona or Ilcolmkill; and some such appendage to the girdle is of very early occurrence in the costume of most nations. The tasseled sporan is, however, more like the pouch of the North American Indians than the European gypsire or aulmoniere of the middle ages, and its position in front is an additional peculiarity. Five hundred years ago a great variety of costumes was worn contemporaneously in different parts of England.

The cotehardie, which was probably imported from Flanders, was a tight garment, buttoned in front down to the hips, with its tippets or long strips of cloth depending from the elbows, and was worn by noblemen and ladies. Both, too, had girdles and pouches, with daggers stuck through them. These pouches, or gypsires, were made of fine leather, embroidered with silk.

The pockets in front of the lady's cotehardie were rather for show than use.

A pocket looking-glass was the common companion of the fashionables of both sexes during the reign of Elizabeth. The ladies carried it either in their pockets or hanging at their sides, and sometimes it was inserted in the fan of ostrich or other feathers—one of the most elegant appendages to the costume of the time.

In the eighth number Gray's Inn Journal for 1752 is an advertisement of the sale by auction "of the whole stock of a coquette leaving off trade, consisting of several valuable curiosities," etc., amongst which are mentioned "an elegant snuff-box, with a looking-glass within it, being a very good pocket-companion for a beauty." There were over thirty what are called in England, in Parliamentary language, pocket-boroughs, in which the influence of an individual or family is at least equal to, or often overpowers, that of the so-called constituency. Perhaps the best known pocket-borough in England is Newark, which will have a place in history as being the borough which first sent Mr. Gladstone to Parliament, at the instance of his and its patron, the Duke of Newcastle.

Every State in the American Union has a law against carrying concealed weapons, and yet, strange to say, every pair of trousers manufactured from Maine to California, and from the Lakes to the Mexican Gulf, has a pistol pocket. The word "pocket" is used in rural economy, and means a large sort of bag, in which hops are packed in order to be sold, being formed of a particular kind or quality of sacking. A pocket of wool is half a sack. The pocket usually contains twenty-five hundredweight of wool. In England, Pocket Sheriffs in law are nominated by the sole authority of the Crown.

Submarine Telephones.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

THE telephone for submarine use is a recent invention of Captain Louis Sorcho, of Baltimore. During the exploration about the wreck of the battleship Maine, in Havana harbor, at least six of these telephones were brought into use there, and were of the utmost service to the divers. Work on a sunken ship is extremely dangerous at any time, and under any conditions, but by the use of these telephones the diver can call for help in an emergency, and hence many lives, which would otherwise have been lost, were saved by the prompt assistance thus furnished.

The phone consists of a headgear for both diver and attendant, or tender, as he is called. This is made of elastic rubber, and fits over the top of the head and under the chin. Over the left ear is the transmitter, while the right ear is protected by a small wooden pad which shuts out all sounds from it and prevents the pain that would result were the air allowed to press upon the ear. The submarine cable, which is waterproof, passes through the front of the helmet by means of a stuffing box, and sound is so easily transmitted that the tender can readily hear anything above a whisper said by the diver.

The tender is not obliged to use his hands about the telephone and therefore has them free for handling the ropes connected with the diver under his care.

By the use of these telephones the diver can give immediate notice to his tender of any accident, fall or any other peril that may befall him, he can order anything he may need to be sent down to him, or he may have connection made with another diver, working at some distance from him, and can thus communicate readily with him on the work in hand.

The advantage to the diver and to the world of this submarine telephone cannot be overestimated. One has only to read accounts of the frightful accidents happening to divers while pursuing their dangerous occupation—accidents which might have been averted or, at least, remedied could the diver have had the use of one of these instruments—to realize the inestimable value of this invention.

"THE LIGHT THAT WON'T GO OUT."

Every family in America is ready to buy "The light that sells on sight"—the wonderful new invention called ARC-LIGHT WICK.

It burns a whole year without trimming. It kills a candle, discounts kerosene, beats gas, and almost equals electricity or sunlight.

It saves 20 per cent. of oil. It's clear, white and brilliant. It's the light that won't go out. It's the light in the window for thee.

The Light That Sells On Sight.

The ARC-LIGHT is something new. All need it, all buy it, all bless it. To show it means to sell it, and it yields from 100 per cent. to 300 per cent. profit to agents.

The same kind of carbon that gives the electric light its brilliancy is woven into the Arc-Light by a patent process. We hold affidavit showing that an Arc-Light burned 1040 hours, giving the last hour the same perfect, brilliant, light it gave the first.

A single lamp manufacturer in New England, who bought over 35,000 writes: "The Arc-Light beats all others. It sells our lamps, and turns night into day. Every home, store, hotel, saloon, hall, church, or car company will buy the Arc-Light Wick on sight. We have made arrangements with the manufacturers to introduce this wonderful discovery, and we offer for 60 days the following wholesale terms to agents:

Medium or A wick, 5-8 inch wide—the size for house lamps, sample 5 cents; per dozen, 25 cents; per gross, $2.50. Small or E wicks, for hand lamps, lanterns, etc., 3-8 inch wide, sample, 5 cents; per dozen, 25 cents; per gross, $2.50. Large or B wicks, for table, hall, store, or bracket lamps, 1 inch wide, sample, 5 cents; per dozen, 25 cents; per gross, $3.50. Dwick, 1 1-2 inches wide, for incubators, hall, bracket, or store lamps, sample, 8 cents; 33 cents dozen; $3.50 gross. Argand wicks for parlor lamps, sample, 5 cents; per dozen, 8 cents, per dozen, $3.50. On all orders for $10.00 gross, $3.50 accompanied by the cash, 15 per cent. off. Send sample dozen, giving width desired, and see how they go. We can supply you with any style ARC-LIGHT WICK in any quantities, from a single wick to a thousand dozen.

COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Woman as the Home Builder.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

FOR years it has been an unsolved mystery to me why the planning and designing of houses has been left so entirely to the sterner sex. That they should build them is a proper thing, since their superior strength is needed for the heavy work required; and that they should be the architects of all business buildings is also to be expected, since it is principally they who are to occupy them and make use of their conveniences or inconveniences. But for the home, where the wife—the mother—is to reign supreme, a woman should, without question, be the sole architect. Man seldom understands the needs of womankind, and, if he is aware of them, he is quite as apt to call them fancies or woman's notions and ignore them, as to attempt to cater to them.

Merion Hall, at Bryn Mawr College is a striking example of this. When Dr. Rhodes, the first President of the College, was building this hall he refused to allow any closets to be made in the sleeping rooms of the students. He was urged to reconsider his decision, and was told that the young ladies must have a place to keep their clothing.

"Nonsense!" was his reply. "Girls don't come here to dress. They come to study. One gown to wear and another for a change in case of an accident to the first is all they need, and I'll have a hook put up to hold the second gown."

So it has come about that every sleeping room at Merion is cumbered with a wardrobe which not only fills up the small apartment but was an additional expense to the college.

But "times change," and people are beginning to realize that those who are to have the direction and management of a house are the proper ones, in nearly all cases, to plan them; and to give some description of a house designed and superintended in its building by a lady friend of mine is the object of this sketch. To be absolutely correct in my description I should say that this lady and her husband planned the house together; for every smallest detail of the home that was to be theirs was talked over and arranged between them on the long winter evenings preceding its erection; but the actual drawing of the plans and the superintending of their carrying out were the work of the wife.

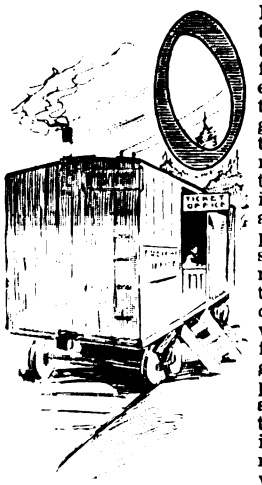
The house is a three-story brick, the nucleus of a coming block, and is set upon the highest land in the city, where sun and air are to be had in perfection. It faces the north, and wide verandas, on every floor, extend the whole length of the house on the southern side. The two lower ones are, of course, roofed over by the floor of the one above, while the upper one has a roof of its own. Strong iron railings protect these verandas in front, while windows, reaching from floor to ceiling, give access to them from the various rooms. Here the little children of the family play summer and winter; here the beds are brought out on the hot nights of a Washington summer, and the family sleep in the open air, unmindful of the heat within the house.

In the front basement, which is on a level with the street, is an arched entrance for wheels, terminating in a room devoted especially to their use. Here is to be found every convenience for cleaning and otherwise caring for them.

The floors of this woman's house are of hard wood, waxed and polished to a nicety, and wiped every day with a dry flannel cloth. Even the closet floors receive equal care; a low shelf, raised only a few inches from the floor, holds the boots and shoes of the family, and nothing is allowed to cumber the closet floor, to need moving about when it is wiped.

In the nursery, which is on the southern side of the house, is a set of low shelves where the playthings of the children are kept, and they are taught to pick up their toys and replace them on these shelves when they are through using them. A most delightful part of the day's occupation to these children is to help mamma to clear up this room and brush up the floor just before the time that papa is expected home to dinner. The closet in this room is devoted largely to sewing materials, as this mother makes of the nursery her sewing room, and so keeps herself with her little ones as much as possible. The closet is about eight feet deep by four feet in width, and the whole of one of the long sides is occupied by shelves, drawers and pigeonholes. The pigeonholes, two tiers of them, are used for patterns, pieces, and little garments which the children have outgrown, and which are to be given away. Below these are two wide, long shelves, devoted to work of various kinds, garments to be mended, and garments in daily use by the children. Still lower are deep drawers, devoted to materials for garments and to the little partly-made dresses. Above all are boxes holding the necessary "findings"—hooks and eyes, whalebones, spare needles and spools of cotton, and the thousand and one articles which are a necessity to the seamstress, but which so cumber up a workbasket when kept "lying around."

Dust shoots leading to the basement have openings in every room in the house, so there is no excuse for dirt, torn papers or waste baskets. A shoot for soiled clothes also extends from the third floor to the basement, with openings on each floor. The house is heated by hot water, and the gas is lighted by electricity, so no matches are allowed about the house within reach of childish fingers. Nearly every room has its open fireplace, and that in the front hall, which is the one most frequently used, has a dump in its floor through which the ashes are dropped into a great receptacle for them in the cellar at the base of the chimney. This dump removes the necessity of handling the ashes and of carrying them through the house, and thus saves much dust and dirt in the rooms. The reservoir for ashes in the cellar is so large that it requires to be emptied only once a year.



The front hall, with its open fireplace, its couches piled with pillows, its brilliant light and its comfortable chairs is a favorite sitting place in the evenings after the little ones are in bed. An arched passageway separates it from the front door, and shields its occupants from all draughts from the door.

In the kitchen the same careful thought and planning have been exercised. A tightly fitting swing door without a latch connects it with the dining-room. A gas range is used for cooking, thus doing away with the dust, labor and ashes of a coal burner. A table for use in preparing vegetables, rolling pastry or kneading bread stands in one corner. This table has a top of strong, heavy glass, such as is used for pavements over basements, and is almost absolutely unbreakable. Its chief advantage lies, however, in the fact that it is so easily kept clean. Of course it is perfectly impervious to grease or stains, and there are no cracks in its surface to furnish a hotbed for "germs." In the pantry, adjoining the kitchen, is another glass shelf for use in cutting bread and cake, but as this is made of plate glass it is not so strong as the one in the kitchen. In the pantry, also, are two lifts or elevators, on which any desired article from a glass of water to a basket of wood can be sent anywhere up and down the house. The smaller one of the two is principally used for the transmission of food to and from the refrigerator in the basement.

These are only a few of the many devices for the health, comfort and saving of steps in this admirably planned house; and all this was not only largely designed by a woman but was also in a great measure carried out by her. Her husband was away on business during most of the time that the house was being built, and upon the wife devolved most of the responsibility of overseeing and directing the workmen.

Narrow Gauge Railroads of the Oil Fields.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

ONE of the necessities, as well as one of the most picturesque features of the northern oil fields, during the time of their greatest activity, were the narrow gauge railroads. They interested the country in every direction, and were built in preference to the standard gauge railroad on account of the mountainous condition of the country which they were forced to traverse, the grade being in some places two hundred and sixty-five feet to the mile. No filling in was done; all the ravines and gullies were bridged by hemlock trestle work, and the space between the ties was ballasted by dirt dug out of the ditches.

The traffic and trade over these roads in Pennsylvania and neighboring oil districts during the boom of the oil wells was simply enormous. For instance, the Alleghany Central's freight receipts during the first thirty days after the completion of the road amounted to twelve thousand dollars, and that was before a station was built. A box car was utilized for both ticket and freight office, and the telegraphic instrument was screwed to a dry-goods box in one corner of the car. The passenger traffic equaled the freight. Nine passenger trains and five freight trains were run over the road every day. At this time Richburg was a town of eight thousand inhabitants, and boasted of a morning and an evening paper, two banks, a hundred stores, hotels, a dozen doctors, as many lawyers, nearly a hundred public bars, dance houses, and everything else necessary for a first-class boom city in the oil country. One of the lawyers there earned three thousand dollars in fees during the first three months of his residence in Richburg.

As soon as the oil boom began to wane the narrow gauge roads also diminished in profits. Both freights and passengers fell away rapidly, and now, of all the moving railroad life of that time hardly a trace remains. Richburg has scarcely four hundred inhabitants, and the Alleghany Central, the last bit remaining of the narrow gauge railroads in this region, is merged in the New York Central, and that branch of it running into Richburg has entirely disappeared. Richburg is now connected with the outside world only by stage line.

Of the other railroads used by the oil companies, some have been sold, torn up, and their material transported to other railroads, and some have been transformed into ordinary standard gauge railroads.

Many of these roads were run through the midst of farms, and the land on which they were built was purchased of the owners at fancy prices. When the roads were demolished the land was reclaimed and cultivated by its original possessor, and all traces of its public use have been thereby obliterated.

One of the queerest railroads ever built in the oil regions, or, indeed, anywhere else, was the Peg Leg railroad. This was a single railroad, about five miles in length, and ran from Bradford to Derrick City. Oak spiles were driven into the ground ten feet apart, on the top of these a heavy timber was bolted, and on this the rail was spiked and fish-plated. Guard rails were placed on each side of the spile, about three feet from the top. The cars rested on two wheels, one at each end of the car, and hung from the rail by these, one on each side of the rail, like saddle-bags.

The engine was as odd as the cars or the road, being placed on the road somewhat after the same fashion as the cars, and looking, as the Irishman said, "loike a pair of boots on a clothesline, shure!"

This road was completed in January, 1878. The roadbed was almost entirely straight, having very few curves, but the road and equipments cost forty-six thousand dollars—one car alone costing three thousand dollars. From the first there was much trouble with the engines, and many were the breakdowns. At last, only a year from the time the road was put in operation, while making trial of a new kind of engine, the boiler blew up, killing and mutilating many of the men on board. This finished its career, for, being of so abnormal a build, the road was feared and disliked by the train hands, and after this serious accident none could be found willing to work upon it. It was therefore never repaired, and was soon after disposed of at a sheriff's sale for a small sum. The rails were stripped off, and the famous Peg Leg railroad became a thing of the past.

An Immense Wine Bottle.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

AN immense tank, holding five hundred thousand gallons has recently been built on the banks of the Russian river near Asti, California. It is, like the ancient and renowned Heidelburg tun, intended for the storage of the grape juice when first expressed from the grape, but it far exceeds in size that venerable vat, which held only fifty thousand gallons. London has tanks holding one hundred thousand gallons of wine each, San Francisco boasts one holding one hundred and fifty gallons, and Merced can pour into hers two hundred thousand gallons, but they are all far behind the capacity of Asti's enormous subterranean lake, or bottle, as it might properly be called, for it is completely glazed within.

The rocky valley of the Russian river has been utilized for the walls of this tank, for an excavation has been made in the solid rock of the proper size for the reservoir. Next a wall of concrete, two feet in thickness, was put over the floor and sides, the cover being also lined with concrete. A lining of pure cement was put over this, and the whole glazed until it was as smooth and impermeable as glass. The cover was fitted on, and three feet of earth heaped above it in which grass seed was sown, and the whole thing shows nothing to the outside world but a huge mound of earth. A manhole, three feet in diameter, admits a workman to the interior when necessary for cleansing or other purposes.

The grape juice is pumped into the tank through two four-inch pipes, and the wine, when properly fermented, is run off through six-inch pipes which communicate with the twenty-five gallon wooden tanks in which the wine is aged before being barreled and shipped. This immense wine cask is one hundred and four feet long, thirty-four feet wide and twenty-four feet high. It is buried in the ground in order to maintain a cool, even temperature for its contents during the period of fermentation; and it is thought, too, that the mingling of so large a number of gallons of the grape juice will give a better flavor to the wine. The value of the wine contained in it when full is reckoned at one hundred thousand dollars.

Electricity vs. Horses.

THERE are arguments for and against the use of horses for street cars. The poor horse had a hard time drawing heavily loaded cars up hill or on slippery roads, and it is not nearly so distressing to watch the cars glide along by electricity as it was to see the overworked horse tugging at a big load.

But electricity as a motive power has made havoc with the sale of horses and the raising of hay and grain for the market. It is said that electric railways have displaced about two hundred seventy-five thousand horses already. That number of horses would require about one hundred twenty-five thousand bushels of corn or oats a day. The decrease in the demand for these grains seriously affects the farmer, as it amounts to forty-five million bushels a year. Furthermore, this means a great loss to railroad traffic, as that amount of grain would require about sixty-two thousand five hundred cars a year for shipment.

It is said that sulphur worn in the shoes is a sure preventive against yellow fever. It is also said that persons who work in match factories are never attacked by grippe. Sulphur worn in the shoes is also said to be a cure for rheumatism.

There is a cat that goes hunting at Hoisington, Kan. It makes its home in the roundhouse, where a railroad man placed it to get warm one day when he found it half frozen in the street. The man made a practice of shooting birds for it, and now the cat will follow for a mile or more any man who carries a gun, and at the sound of a shot will run for the bird.

Housewives in Norway and Sweden have started a scheme to encourage servants to remain in their places. Mistresses pay into a general fund whatever they can afford for every servant that has remained with them for 12 months. The money is registered in the servant's name, so that when age overtakes her, and she can no longer work, she has a comfortable annuity to fall back on.

QUICK-EDGE

For Razors and all Tools that Require a Razor Edge

Quick-Edge will sharpen the dullest Razor in two minutes and give it a fine smooth cutting edge. If Quick-Edge is used your razor will always be sharp and never need honing. It makes old razors good as new, and is warranted not to injure the finest razor in the least. Don't pay 25 cents to have your razor honed when a cake of Quick-Edge will keep it in perfect order for years.

Quick-Edge will put a fine smooth cutting razor edge on any tool in one-tenth the time it takes to sharpen it in any other way. Razors and all edge tools will hold their edge three times as long, and cut better. Why? Because Quick-Edge is a scientific preparation and makes a smooth strong edge that will cut well, and wear well. Every man who shaves needs Quick-Edge, every family, every shop, and every factory has some edge tools that needs Quick-Edge. Anyone can use it successfully, and full directions come with every cake. The price is 15 cents a cake. Agents can sell it to almost every man, and at nearly every house. If you sell 100 cakes a day, your profit is $8.75. Many agents are doing as well. If you need work order a dozen or a gross and try the business; if you do not need work, order a cake, and know the luxury of having a razor, a knife or other edge tool always in order, sharp and ready for use.

Price: One cake, 15 cents, postpaid; one dozen cakes, $1.00 postpaid; one gross cakes, $6.00 by express. Address, GOLDEN MOMENTS, Augusta, Maine.

Uncle Sam's Soldiers at Home.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

ROUSELY at 5.15 each morning the clear, resonant tones of the bugle may be heard, ringing out first call and a few minutes later, as old Sol rises from his bed among the hills, the deep boom of the morning gun announces to all for miles around that another day's duty has begun. After "Gun Fire" comes "Reveille" which is played by the buglers in unison and then "Assembly" which means that every man must be in line in front of his company quarters to answer the first morning roll call. Fifteen minutes are consumed in the above. Roll call over, the men retire to their quarters and perform their morning ablutions. Every window in the squad-room is thrown open; every bed and blanket is folded in uniformity; each man sweeps under his own individual bed, the room orderly sweeps down the center of the room and in a few minutes, the squad-room is as bright and shining as the beautiful clear morning itself, and Uncle Sam's Fighters are ready to commence an attack on the morning meal.

At six o'clock comes the welcome "Mess Call," the companies "fall in," are marched by the senior noncommissioned officer present to the Mess Hall, march to their own respective tables without confusion, the command "Be seated" is given, and without further parley, charge with appetites, a brigade strong upon the viands prepared for them. Oatmeal, corn beef hash, stewed tomatoes, bread and butter and good strong coffee, compose the breakfast menu, and is a fair sample of the usual morning meal.

Breakfast over, the men return to their quarters. At 6.30 first call for drill is sounded, and assembly at 7 o'clock sharp. The first drill is always calisthenic or "setting up" exercises and the men go through them with a vigor that speaks well for their love of physical training and athletics. Sometimes this drill is varied by a run round the post, or athletic exercises in the spacious gymnasium. These variations are hugely appreciated by the men. After 30 minutes of vigorous work "Recall" is sounded and the men return to their quarters perspiring and ready for rest.

In a few minutes, one will observe some of the men rise from their bunks, as they call them, delve into a large brown canvas bag, called a barracks bag, hung behind their cot, and procuring therefrom buttor-sticks, burnishing chain, brushes and other articles used in the soldier's cleaning kit, go to work burnishing, shining and cleaning their accoutrements, clothes and equipments, until they absolutely sparkle with the high polish produced.

These men are those whose names are on the detail for guard that day, and they have polished and burnished so that they may be able to pass the critical eye of the inspecting officer at guard mount. Every man in the Post takes an interest in the mounting of the guard, for each company vies with the other in the turning out the cleanest and most creditable detail.

First call for "Guardmount" is sounded at 8.45, a moment or two later the details may be seen issuing from their quarters, shining from head to foot, in their immaculate cleanliness, and careful not to brush against anything that would leave the most minute speck of dirt upon them.

Every eye in the Post is upon them, and that they realize it, may be seen by the proud manner in which each detail marches down the Main Parade, where they can be ready to "Fall in" when "Assembly" sounds.

Sharp at 9 o'clock the trumpeter sounds the "Assembly," the band strikes up a lively march and the details are marched to the parade ground, where the Serg't Major forms the guard and turns it over to the Post Adjutant who inspects them, the band playing an air or two while the inspection takes place.

After the guard has been inspected, the Adjutant picks out the cleanest man, for the Commanding Officer's orderly, which is the most desirable position on the guard, and is therefore greatly sought after, and marches the Guard in Review and then to the Guard House, where the old Guard, who have been on duty the preceding twenty-four hours is relieved by the members of the new Guard.

Immediately after Guardmount the fine Regimental Band proceeds to the band stand and for over an hour strains of sweet music delight the ear.

At 10.30 the men again assemble for drill, this time by battalion or regiment, and an interested visitor can watch them practicing every movement in the tactics, to the evident disadvantage of an imaginary enemy, the corresponding satisfaction of the officers, and the great bewilderment of the uninitiated visitor.

Regimental or Battalion drills generally take place on some large open field just outside the Post. When the recall from drill sends its welcome notes across the fields, it is indeed welcome, for panting and perspiring under the "Heavy Marching Order" load in which these drills are sometimes performed, every man, officer and private is glad of the opportunity to rest.

Stripped to the waist the men snatch a hasty rest until dinner call is sounded and then proceed, as they did for breakfast, to the mess hall where they partake of the following meal: Tomato soup, roast beef, potatoes, stewed turnips, boiled beans, bread pudding, bread and coffee.

After dinner, those men not on duty either retire to their quarters for a siesta, or go for a long ramble through the picturesque country surrounding the Fort. Those men who have not served one enlistment (three years), and have not graduated from the public school previous to enlistment are compelled to attend the Post school from one to four P. M., where an excellent corps of teachers is maintained, and where any soldier with more than ordinary ambition, can secure all the advantages of a first-class educational institution.

The day is nearly over, but the soldier's work is not yet entirely completed. Promptly at 5.45 P. M. First Call again sounds, the men re-commence their polishing, and don their dresscoats, "Straight Jackets," as they term the abominably tight things, for "Dress Parade," which is the ceremony par excellence of the day.

At Regimental Dress Parade the officer commanding the Post takes charge, the companies are formed into battalions and from that into regimental front, the band takes position on the right of the line, the commanding officer receives the battalion and company officers, puts the regiment through the manual of arms and brings them to "Parade Rest." At this moment the evening gun is fired, the Buglers of the Regiment sound "Retreat," and the regimental colors are hauled down while the band plays the "Star Spangled Banner."

The companies are then marched past in review after which they are dismissed and with the exception of the members of the Guard and some others on special duty, the soldier's work for the day is done.

Dances in the mess hall, or parties in the homes of some of the married men, the spacious reading rooms in the Post Library, all kinds of athletic games, band concerts, and many other diversions aid in passing away the long hours of the evening until "Taps," which sounds at 11 P. M., at which time all soldiers not away on pass must be in the barracks.

Altogether, the soldier's life is by no means either idle or monotonous. Interested in all questions of the day, a reader of the papers, an ardent lover of sports, he finds plenty with his regular duties to occupy his time, and his duties are no sinecure, for besides doing guard for twenty-four hours once every ten or twelve days, he must take his turn at room orderly, during which time he is responsible for the cleanliness and order of his squad-room; as kitchen police or cook's assistant; waiter in the mess hall and in general or other fatigues. The latter means he must work for one whole day each week or so in aid to keep the post which he lives in—to use a witty officer's expression, "A place of beauty and glory forever."

Sunflowers.

THE sunflower has never been looked upon as a very desirable flower to cultivate, but its uses are coming to be known more generally, and it may not be many years before it will be largely cultivated by farmers or by those who have a little land. There is no plant that grows so vigorously and rapidly, and has such an enormous yield of seed as well as of leaves and stock, all of which can be used. The plant is hardy as well and will yield fifty bushels of seed to the acre. This will give fifty gallons of oil worth one dollar a gallon. The seeds are especially good as food for fowls, and when mixed with grain, farm animals like them. The stalks make good fuel. The Orientals mix dried sunflower leaves with their tobacco, and from the flowers make a yellow dye. The flowers also contain a good deal of honey and wax, and so would be a valuable aid to bee-raising.

Modern Cave Dwellers.

THERE is an island, or rock in Behring straits, 30 miles off the shores of Alaska at Port Clarence, inhabited by about two hundred cave dwellers. The village presents a most curious appearance, their caves being built over and under and to the right and left, closely nestled against a cliff. These curious people live on seal and walrus meat, and whale blubber.

SENT FREE TO MEN

Free Trial packages of a most remarkable remedy for sexual weakness are being distributed by the State Medical Institute. They cured so many men who had battled for years against the mental and physical suffering of lost manhood that the Institute has decided to distribute free trial packages to all who write. It is a home treatment and all men who suffer with any form of sexual weakness resulting from youthful folly, premature loss of strength and memory, weak back or varicocele, can now cure themselves at home.

The remedy has a peculiarly grateful effect of warmth and seems to act direct to the desired location, giving strength and development just where it is needed. It cures all the ills and troubles that comes from years of misuse of the natural functions and has been an absolute success in all cases. A request to the State Medical Institute, 558 First National Bank Building, Ft. Wayne, Ind., stating that you desire one of their free trial packages, will be complied with. The Institute is desirous of reaching that great class of men who are unable to leave home to be treated, and the free trial package will enable men to see how easy it is to be cured when the proper remedies are employed. The Institute makes no restrictions. Any man who writes will be sent a free sample carefully sealed in a plain package so that its recipient need have no fear of embarrassment or publicity. Readers are requested to write without delay.

MACARONI.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

MACARONI is an Italian invention, and, although imitated in other countries, notably in France and England, has never yet been produced so successfully anywhere else. It is made from wheaten flour, and the wheat raised in Southern Europe is said to possess a greater amount of gluten than that of other countries, and is therefore better adapted to the manufacture of macaroni.

The wheat, after being washed in mountain streams is ground between mill-stones and then sifted five separate times; the last sifting giving the finest and most delicate flour that can be made, and which is called semola. This last sifting, or semola, is used for the manufacture of the macaroni of commerce. This flour is placed in a trough lined with iron and enough boiling water is mixed with it for kneading purposes.

The kneading is done by machinery, two men being required to propel the millstone which does the work, while a third man stands by to replace the dough under the millstone as it is driven out by the weight upon it. Sometimes the kneading is done by means of a wooden pole attached to a post fixed in the ground and worked up and down as a lever, under one end of which the paste is placed. Still another and less agreeable method is employed for the cheaper grades of macaroni intended for home consumption; the dough being kneaded by the bare feet of men and boys. This method, however, is never employed in the manufactories where the article is prepared for export.

After being sufficiently kneaded the dough is placed in an iron cylinder having holes in the bottom through which the paste is forced by pressure, a workman cutting off the pieces of the desired length as they come through the holes. To make the pieces hollow a wire extends down through the round hole in the bottom of the cylinder. Cylinders with different sized holes in their bottom are used for making the different grades of the article—the largest size being known as macaroni, the next as vermicelli (little worms), and the smallest as fedelini.

The dough is slightly baked while passing through the cylinders, and is afterwards placed on canes or horizontal poles to dry thoroughly. It requires about twenty minutes to knead the dough, and from two to four hours to dry it, according to the state of the atmosphere. It is carefully watched during this process, to prevent its drying too rapidly, as, if the outer surface became dry before the inside, the macaroni would be brittle. It is then placed in a damp cellar for twenty-four hours "to rest."

After being taken from the cellar it is exposed to the sun for a day, and then wrapped in paper and packed in boxes.

WONDERFUL WALKING DOLLS.

A Marvelous Mechanical Curiosity has lately been invented in the doll line. Although made of metal there are no springs to be wound or other encumbering contrivances to get out of order. A simple scientific appliance. They walk naturally and alone as if by some hidden force. Not only are children delighted, but even the happy boyhood and girlhood days are brought back to the older ones who shake their sides and simply roar to see the Great Race of Races as these dolls representing the various male and female characters of different nations are started across the room or table. The life-like manner in which they seem to run past each other in the mad haste to win, or marching single file, tripping each other up or executing other comical feats. The contrast of the different colored jackets or suits, while the Soldier, Chinaman, Negro or little Dollie herself speeds along, adds much to the novelty and enjoyment of the whole family of lookers on. We have secured the right to introduce this wonderful family to the millions all over the Union. To do so quickly and relying on future large sales for our profit, we will send one FREE, all charges paid, to any one sending 25 cents for a 6 months' subscription or renewal to our beautiful magazine. Any kind of dolls always please the children but Genuine Walking Dolls are a joy forever. Address Publishers of COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

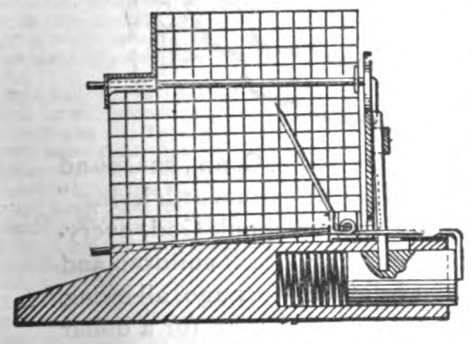
A UNIQUE INVENTION.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.



THAT there is nothing new under the sun," is an adage old, though, so far as it concerns the Patent Office, its truth must be questioned, nay—further than that, it must be seriously doubted, in fact, denied. If there is any one place on the face of this terrestrial sphere where there is always something new turning up, it is at the United States Patent Office at Washington. Though, too, it oftentimes happens that things turn up there which, in the minds of the poor, enthusiastically deluded inventors, are just the things that the world has been setting back and waiting for, yea, eagerly and impatiently longing for—whereas an inspection of the prior state of the art will disclose the fact that "there are others" in prolific profusion. By the "state of the art," the uninitiated is to understand is meant the work that has been done by inventors along the line of any particular branch of any of the industrial arts, so that when an inventor applies to the Patent Office for a patent, and, as most all of them do at first, wants the earth (well fenced and terraced), and claims every thing in sight, he is given numerous citations of the earlier patents as references, and is made to mend that part of his application known technically as the "claims," to cover in clear and specific language that part of the device which he believes himself or the office shows him to be inventor of.

It is not a common occurrence for an inventor to secure a patent for a new device without numerous official citations and rejections, and the inventor who is able to rush his case through at the first trial, without having the patent to Smith called to his notice, or Brown's invention cited for his edification and guidance, is a fortunate individual indeed.

Such an inventor turned up recently with an invention of such a novel and radical nature, that, when the readers of "COMFORT" learn its character they will cease to wonder at this inventor's success in expediting the final and favorable disposition of his case.

This remarkable invention is termed an "Animal Trap," though, it is not, strictly speaking, a trap, although it well takes the place of that artistic and necessary piece of household furniture, a rat trap. The idea in view, in the manufacture of this trap—the "humane trap," it is called—is not to capture or kill the animal, but merely to attach to it in a secure and 'not-to-be-shook' manner, an elastic band bearing articles of a terrifying nature, such as bells, phosphorescent tufts, etc., and then allowing the animal to go free, to run around among its comrades and by its outlandish and unseemly conduct to scare the other animals away from the neighborhood. Thus the familiar nursery story—of how the old rat, to which a bell had been attached, was allowed to return to his accustomed haunts for the purpose of driving away the other rats, is made to serve as the basis for this latest novelty.

As will be seen from the illustrations, the trap is constructed by taking a block of wood which forms the base, and mounting thereupon a cage-like structure of wire, the cage being left open at both ends. In the rear of the base a recess is formed in which is carried a spring-pressed slide, from which extends upwardly an arm carrying, in a vertical position, a flat metal plate—these several parts being adapted to be moved forward against the tension of the spring and held in a set position by a suitable catch and trigger mechanism.

Horizontally mounted on the movable plate the four pins or rods which project in a forward direction, one from each corner of the plate, to the four corners of the open front of the cage, and the pins are adapted to project outward a short distance from the front of the cage when the trap is set—but are withdrawn when the tripping-trigger is sprung and the plate and pins moved inwardly, thus forming a hollow square at the front of the trap, through which the animal must pass in order to reach the bait within. A bait trigger is pivoted within the trap above the recess in the base, and an arm extends rearwardly from this trigger and carries a catch for holding the slide in a set or forward position against the power of the compressed spring.

As above stated, the pins project out beyond the front of the trap-cage—one from each corner—and over the ends of these four pins is stretched an elastic band to form a hollow square, within which the animal's body rests when it attempts to take the bait from the trigger. The bands which are snapped around the body of the beast, are provided with bells for sounding an alarm, or phosphorescent plumes for the purpose of creating consternation and dread among the occupants of the dark runways through which the frightened, and frightening, animal passes.

When a rat enters the open front of the trap, its body is entirely surrounded by the outstretched elastic band, and when the bait trigger is molested, the spring slide—carrying the plate and projecting pins—is released, and, under the impulse of the spring, the plate is suddenly given a rearward movement and the pins are instantly withdrawn from the hollow square formed by the elastic, and the band is snapped securely around the body of the now thoroughly frightened animal, who at once makes a dash for the nearest hole and then continues on a mad round of its accustomed runways, growing more terrified and gaining speed at every bound, and, by reason of the tinkling bells and the fantastic appearance of the waving plumes—which glow in the inky darkness of the favorite runways and tunnels of the swiftly traveling rodent—the other rats become so alarmed that they immediately show signs of vacating the premises and searching for pastures new and quarters more congenial; with the result that they are soon out of the neighborhood, and the house that once knew them well after several such treatments, knows them no more.

BLUE LAKE FARM.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

WAY out in the southern part of Idaho on the Snake river, twenty miles south of the town of Shoshone, lies one of the wonders of nature which has been transformed by the skill, ingenuity and industry of man into a smiling, fruitful valley. The place was called, by the first white men who visited it, the "Devil's Corral," and was then a wide deep hole in the ground, seven hundred feet deep, and containing eight hundred acres of bottom land, its immense walls of volcanic rock rent and torn by some convulsion of Nature. For ages it had lain undisturbed by man save when some wild Indian wandered there in search of game. Its steep walls of rock rendered it almost inaccessible even to them, and it was regarded with superstitious reverence by the simple children of the forest.

At length it occurred to a half breed Indian that gold might be found in its fastnesses of rock, and, accompanied by his Indian wife and two children, he clambered into its depths and made a home there. His mining operations never proved very successful, but his presence there attracted Burt Perrine, an adventurous young man from Indiana, who was roaming about in search of fortune. He made his difficult way into the valley, examined it thoroughly and decided that it would, with some effort, make an excellent fruit farm or ranch. Owing to its high, protecting walls neither northern nor other chilling winds ever found their way in. Snow was unknown, although it might lie ten feet in depth on the land above and around it. Two beautiful lakes, clear as crystal, covering about an acre of space, forty or fifty feet deep and filled with trout, promised water and the means of irrigating the soil, also fish for food. The boulders covering the ground might be cleared up, the bushes exterminated, and a clear field of several hundred acres left for cultivation.

He went away, but soon returned, bought out the miner, obtained a clear title to the whole "hole" and then, with men, horses, tools and blasting powder, he set to work.

The first thing to be done was to make a road over the steep, rocky sides down which horses, burros and wagons might pass. This was a difficult piece of work but was at last satisfactorily accomplished. The heavier articles needed for use in the basin below—wagons, plows, scrapers, harrows, powder and dynamite—were all lowered by ropes over the perpendicular wall seven hundred feet in height; but all was at last completed, the trees planted, and the "Devil's Corral" with its name changed to the "Blue Lakes" to fit its smiling beauty, is now the region of five thousand prosperous fruit trees, besides grapes, strawberries and watermelons. Prunes, pears, apples, peaches and nectarines grow there in great luxuriance, and their owner is fast becoming a wealthy man from their yearly yield. Frosts never touch his land nor broiling sun burn up his young fruit. His lakes are always full, and always at the same temperature—sixty degrees. They are fed by subterranean streams, and their surplus water flows off through underground channels.

With his wife and two beautiful children he lives here a life of content and happiness, undisturbed by the turmoils of the outside world.

Mice Love Music.

IT is said that mice love music and have been known to get inside of pianos and scratch on the strings, apparently for the purpose of hearing the tones so produced. It is said that once while a piano was being played in a house, several mice came out upon the hearthrug and began to jump about as though delighted with the music; so absorbed were they that one of them allowed himself to be picked up and carried away in tongs by the housemaid.

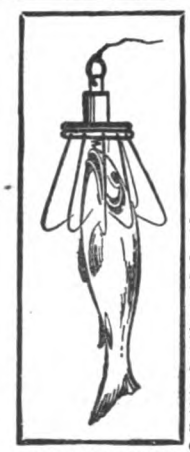
THE dwarf tribes inhabiting the forests near the equator in Africa make a pipe of the midrib of the banana leaf, which is cellular. They get the bore required for the stem by pushing a long, hard river weed through the rib; then they plug the lower end with clay and roll up a piece of banana leaf into a ball, cut a hole in the stem and insert it for a bowl; the sap preventing combustion, as the tobacco burns. The English clay pipe is the principal pipe used in New Guinea, and is generally acceptable as part payment for a day's labor. During the civil war, American soldiers used a pipe, the bowl of which was made from a potato and the stem from a piece of twig from which the pith had been driven.

The Elusive Dragon Fly.

THE dragon fly possesses the unique faculty among winged creatures, birds or insects, of flying backwards and forwards and sideways without turning its body. There are very few insects that the swallow, with its marvelous speed and dexterity, cannot catch, but the dragon fly is one of them. The dragon fly without any apparent trouble, will keep a few feet ahead of a swallow for half an hour at a stretch, and no matter how swiftly the swallow flies, the dragon fly is never just there when it makes its swoop. This is because the swallow has to turn its body. While the dragon fly only reverses its wings.

TOM, is the name of a cat who has a record of covering a distance of 675,000 miles in the past thirteen years. He was only a kitten when he climbed up the sides of the steamer Alameda, of the Oceanic Line, and took refuge in a remote corner until she went to sea. He made his debut while chasing a rat, when he jumped onto the galley stove. His agony was relieved by the engineer, who carefully dressed his paws, after which Tom was his inseparable companion. When he had travelled 600,000 miles, he was presented with a silver collar by his American admirers in San Francisco, and his friends in Sydney have asked the privilege of presenting him with a gold collar when he finishes his million mile record.

An excellent breakfast for the average person consists of a bowl of well-cooked cereal with a little cream, a slice of whole-wheat bread, and, if he has been accustomed to it, a cup of coffee which is half heated milk with no sugar.



A NEW gem has been found in Mexico, which, on account of its resemblance to an eye has been named "Cyclops." It was found by an opal miner who sent it to Chicago to be examined; when the stones were cut they were found to be very beautiful. The rough stones resemble a rose, and vary in size from a pea to three-fourths of an inch in diameter. When the stone has been smoothly cut a little red spot shines through, this giving the stone its name. The clear substance surrounding this red center is chalcedony, and the general shape of the stone is hemispherical, with the red ball in the middle of the flat side.

THE feeblest infant, unduly arrived in this vale of tears, may be grown to the right proportions by means of the baby incubators, now in quite common use in the hospitals. The little ones struggle along under glass and the nurses claim that they are more healthy when they leave the incubator than the offspring reared in the way nature intended. The most irritable infant submits to the quieting influence under the gentle, soothing warmth that surrounds the immature little frame. Children of a larger growth whose immature mental and moral calibre would be greatly improved if they could be kept under glass for a period, should receive the attention of scientists!

Empress Augusta Victoria of Germany offers a golden cross to every servant girl in the country who can show a record of forty years of service in one family. Last year she bestowed one hundred and forty-four of these crosses, and only one of them went to the city of Bremen.

—THE—

A WONDERFUL INVENTION. BEST TRAP IN THE WORLD for CATCHING FISH, ANIMALS, AND ALL MANNER OF GAME.

A wonderful and most ingenious device. It is easy to set, suited to any bait, can be used anywhere, nothing CAN ESCAPE UNTIL RELEASED. Every fish, muskrat, or squirrel which bites at the bait is surely caught. Perfectly safe for children, will not rust. One bait will catch from 20 to 30 fish. Will spring in any position; in short, it is a grand triumph over the unsafe and uncertain common fish-hook. Highly recommended by the Tribune, World, Press, and the Turf, Field and Farm. The Ohio Farmer says: "The Eagle Claw is a very ingenious article. The best device for catching fish and game we ever saw. Safe, sure and convenient." No. 1 is for all ordinary fishing, the ladies' favorite. No. 2 is for general use, both large and small fish and game. We have sold thousands, and they have all given splendid satisfaction.

PREMIUM OFFER. We will send a No. 1, Eagle Claw Hook and our splendid monthly paper six months on trial for only 30 cents; or, send us 50 cents and we will send the No. 2, Eagle Claw-hook and our paper on trial six months. Price, per dozen, by express, No. 1, $2.25; No. 2, $3.50.

PHONO' PARLORS

GIVING PROFITABLE EMPLOYMENT

Will be established in all parts of the country. Hundreds of thousands of people have never heard a talking machine. Late improvements in the Gramophone Records now make it possible for any one to open up entertainment resorts right at home and make a large amount of money without any capital. The latest machines can be relied on to furnish not only the very best of vocal and instrumental music, but they talk and reproduce all sorts of exquisite voices or sounds in a decidedly clear and distinct manner sounding exactly like the original from which the matter is reproduced. The Talking Machines we are introducing come in a nice box case about a foot long and nearly nine inches wide. They make a very attractive article for home use. The construction is very unique and strong; nothing to get out of order and they are the marvel of the age. For House, Home and Church entertainments we have machines that are just perfect in the required volumes of sound given out that make them marvelous amusement makers, and melody producers. We want to establish proper Parlor, Store and Hall and Street amusement centers in every part of the country and require at once one thousand persons in different parts of the United States to either devote part or all of their time to looking after the business or furnish space in their homes in which to display and show up these marvelous machines. Remember you do not have to invest one cent. Simply say you are prepared to co-operate with us and devote part or all of your time to displaying these wonderful phonograms to your friends and neighbors, provided it is proved beyond a doubt to be a money-making profitable employment for you. One thousand of these new machines will be ready to ship, all charges paid, during the next three months. Write at once if you are willing to have one sent to you. This new business will be adapted to all persons from sixteen to sixty years of age

CONDITIONS. Owing to the extra weight of metal in these indestructible Talking Machines obliging us to send the Phonograms by Express, we pay all shipping charges ourselves, and land the machine free into your home. You keep it as long as you like; make all the money with it you can, without any expense to you whatever. This offer is only made now and this chance to accept comes to you but once in a lifetime.

AS A MATTER OF PROTECTION. We simply ask you to secure twelve yearly subscribers to Family Herald at 25 cents each to help pay newspaper advertising, etc., etc. We get our profit from future sales of machines, records, etc., caused by the exhibition you give the Phonogram, the good words you say in its favor, etc., and if you make any direct sales we pay you big profits. Send for subscription blanks, additional sample copies of The Herald, etc., and we will reserve a machine for you on notice, so you can get up your club of twelve at once before machines are all shipped to other parties. Woman as a Wage-Earner.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

"WHERE there's a will there's a way" is an old proverb but a true one, and never has it been more amply proved true than by the earnest, ambitious woman of the present day. In this country, only a generation ago, woman was thought to be incapable of earning her own living except within certain narrow limits. All the professions were closed to her. Even as a school teacher her field was very narrow and restricted. Now, however, she has taken the matter into her own hands, and has proved, conclusively, that in many things, even in brain work, she is the equal, if not the superior, of man. A few instances, taken at random here and there, will serve to show not only her ambition as regards work, but her success.

One young woman of my acquaintance found herself suddenly left alone in the world with scarcely a penny which she could call her own. Instead of wasting her time in bemoaning her hard fate, or casting herself weakly upon friends to be supported, she bravely set her wits to work to find out what she could do for herself. She had no particular talent, was not a practical housekeeper or cook, and was only a very ordinary sewer; but she had learned, for amusement, the art of photography, and had become quite an expert as an amateur. She had her outfit, of course, and at once started out to make a practical use of her one accomplishment. She went into the suburbs of the city where she was living, and obtained orders from the wealthy residents there to take "views" of their homes and of the picturesque spots in the vicinity. With her aid, albums of home views became quite the fad among those for whom she worked. She made albums for herself of picturesque or noted places in and around the city, and found a ready sale for them at the stationery and art stores. When interest at home began to flag she wandered into the country, and took photographs of their homes for the farmers for miles around. She finally began to visit watering places, and mountain resorts comparatively little known, and there her views were eagerly bought, not only by the guests but by the proprietors of hotels and owners of private boarding houses who used them as advertisements of their places. She is still pursuing her chosen work, and is rapidly growing rich upon it.

Paris has a newspaper, made up and run exclusively by women. Not a man or a boy is employed upon it in any capacity. The pressmen, machinists, compositors, proofreaders, telegraphers, photographers, lithographers, clerks, advertising agents, foreman of the press-room, foreman of the composing room, reporters, artists, foreign correspondents, dramatic, musical and literary critics, business manager and editor-in-chief, all are women. Even the office boy and "printer's devil" are young girls in neat caps and aprons.

The title of this newspaper is the Fronde, so named from a peculiar civil war waged in France in the seventeenth century.

This new woman's newspaper is not an organ for "women's rights," as its name might seem to indicate, but is a political and literary journal, which aims to "make war on all abuses."

Two girls, refined and cultivated, accustomed to good society, but needing the wherewithal to clothe themselves, resolved to furnish houses, that is, to assist in planning the hangings and furniture of the rooms, and also to select the same if desired, to receive it when sent home, and to arrange each room to the best advantage. They superintend the hanging of pictures and curtains, the laying of carpets and rugs, the arrangement of bric-a-brac, and not until the house is ready for occupation in every respect do their labors and responsibilities cease.

Rather different from this is the work of two other girls who, when confronted by the question of how to make a living, resolved to follow the example of the immortal Lincoln, and split logs and make rails, pit posts and caps for the Spring Hill Coal Company in Pennsylvania. They do all the work of felling the trees, sawing them into proper lengths, and finally, with axes, they split them into pit posts. The two girls are sisters, and always work together, sometimes assisted by a younger brother, and they can swing an eight-foot cross-cut saw through an oak tree as easily as most girls run a typewriter. When the tree is sawed through one of the girls sets an iron wedge into one end of the log, and with a large maul weighing about twenty pounds, she drives it in, splitting the log from end to end.

"The work is not hard when one is used to it," they say, "and we can earn more money in this way in one day than we could in a week by working in a kitchen."

Another woman who wishes to add to her income has begun to make a business of cleaning bicycles, going from house to house for her work, and carrying with her all things needed in the process.

Women have now become so generally known as skillful physicians that it would be a mere waste of time and space to rehearse their success in that line, but in this connection it is interesting to note that Miss Hu King Eng, the only female native of China who ever graduated from an American medical college, has lately been accorded very high honors in her own country. She was appointed sole delegate from China to the women's medical convention in London; and, as if that were not honor enough for one Chinese woman, Li Hung Chang, China's Grand Viceroy, has appointed her first physician to his private household. Never before has this high office been given to a woman, and when we reflect upon the low estimate formerly put upon women throughout China, we cannot refrain from congratulating Dr. Eng that she has been the means of ennobling her sex in her native land.

In dentistry and pharmacy, also, woman is rapidly gaining for herself an enviable reputation. For the past five years woman dentists in the United States have had an association which, although founded in Philadelphia, has members all over the country. It is called the National Woman's Dental Association. The first woman to graduate from a dental college was Fraulein Henriette Hirschfeld, who, refused admission to the Pennsylvania dental college by its dean on the ground that she was a woman, appealed to the faculty. Careful inquiry on their part revealed the fact that she had come to America for the sole purpose of taking a course in dentistry at this college, sure that here, in this land of freedom, she would be admitted without any question. She had, besides, been promised by the Minister of Public Instruction in Germany that if she were successful in obtaining her diploma as dentist in America she should be allowed to practice in her own country. Touched by the bravery and the distress of the little foreigner, as well as by her sublime faith in the chivalry of the American professional man, the dean withdrew his opposition, and she entered the college, completed her course, graduated, and is now, and long has been, in lucrative practice in Berlin, Germany. Very lately the same college has graduated a young Japanese girl, who has returned to her own country to practice among her sisterhood, and also to establish a school of dentistry in that far away land.

Another line of business heretofore supposed to be suited only to those of the sterner sex has recently been invaded by women, when Mrs. Brierly, of New York State, assumed the duties of motorman on a street car. She proved herself fully capable of doing what she had undertaken, but, unfortunately for her, her husband objected, decidedly, to her course, and she was obliged to resign her position. Another woman has donned bloomers and gaiters, and gone on the railroad as a brakeman. Let us hope that the fates will be kind to her, and that she will not end her career ignominiously by dying in a ditch of a broken neck.

A Michigan woman has made a new departure by getting herself appointed as game warden for Grand Traverse County. The duties of this position are such that few men desire the place, but Mrs. Neal is a plucky little woman, and has no fears of her success. She handles a gun like an expert, rows a boat, is a skillful woodsman, and knows every inch of the territory over which she has charge. She dresses, when on her trips, in a bloomer costume, carries a rifle, and woe to the unfortunate evil doer whom she catches evading the law! She is a relentless pursuer of such and they are sure of punishment if once she can prove them guilty. In addition to her other duties Mrs. Neal carries the mail three times a week to Traverse City.

In Chicago, a woman—Mary M. Bartelme, junior member of a law firm—has recently been appointed by Governor Tanner legal guardian to minors. It is an office which requires complete knowledge of probate law, a capacity for mastering details, and in addition calls for traits of character which are supposed to be possessed in fuller measure by women than by the sterner sex, as the office involves the care of children, choice of their homes, schools, etc. It is the first time a woman was ever appointed to fill such a place, however, and Governor Tanner is to be congratulated upon the wisdom of his selection.

Much might still be said upon this subject of woman's ambitious efforts and success in developing the best that is in her, but lack of space forbids, and we will only mention one more example.

A young woman, barely thirty years of age, and dependent from the first upon her own efforts for all she has and enjoys, has already, in the past twelve years, made six journeys to Europe, learned to speak six modern languages, and has, besides earning the means to take these journeys and carry on the study of these languages, supported herself entirely upon her earnings as a school teacher, and has paid every penny of her traveling expenses. Her knowledge of foreign languages and the deepening and broadening of mind and heart obtained by travel and observation have fitted her for a higher position than the public school, and she has been offered and accepted the place of instructor in French, German and Italian in a high school for young women. She still keeps up the practice, however, of saving as much as possible from her salary, and uses this surplus, every other year, in visiting some portion of the old world during her summer vacations.

$1,000 FOR A CERTAIN OLD COIN.

WHILE there are some people who have a vague idea that coins issued 100 or 1000 years ago are worth fabulous sums, yet very few know that coins issued only a few years ago are at a large premium. For instance, the silver dollars of 1895 and many of the earlier ones. The first Columbian half-dollar, issued 1892, sold for $1,000. All the half-dollars from 1879 to 1890 are at a premium, also Isabella quarters of 1893, the old issue of the quarters and half-dollars of 1853, twenty-cent pieces 1876 to 1878; five and three-cent pieces of 1877; last issue of the two-cent copper and three-cent silver pieces; first issue of the nickel cents, all gold dollars and three-dollar gold pieces; all Territorial and California coins from 1849 to 1880, and thousands of earlier American and Foreign coins, Canadian especially. There is also a premium on some coins with MINT MARKS O, S, C, D or CC; also on fractional currency, colonial, continental and Confederate bills and old POSTAGE STAMPS. THE GLOBE reports that a coin was found in Galveston worth $5,000. THE NEW YORK JOURNAL says that a cent was plowed up at Aurora, N. Y., worth $1,200, and that Mr. Castle paid $4,400 FOR A STAMP found at Louisville, Ky. THE WORLD says: "Many people have become wealthy by looking after old coins and stamps." THE HOME JOURNAL says: "Coin and stamp collecting is a profitable business, as there are but few in it. The Numismatic Bank buys from Agents all over the country, and pays them big sums." Coins that are very hard to find in one section are often easily found in others. A Boston baker sold 116 coppers for $6,915, 29 silver coins for $4,713, and 4 gold coins for $1,700, and others have done nearly as well. MR. F. W. AYER sold recently a lot of stamps, collected since 1892, to Stanley Gibbons for $250,000. THE COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL NEWS says: "The Numismatic Bank is not only the largest institution of its kind, but as reliable, safe and trustworthy to deal with as any National Bank. The enormous business done by them is the result of SQUARE DEALING and liberality." Send two stamps for our illustrated circular on rare coins and stamps, which may prove to be your stepping stone to wealth and independence. NUMISMATIC BANK, (Dept. C, Boston, Mass.

LADIES WANTED to learn stamping at home. We pay 10c. an hour until fit. Fresh offer is then made. MCGREGOR & Co., Brooklyn, N. Y.

A motherly young woman living in Rockville, Conn., has found life a pretty desperate problem. "I didn't think life worth living," she says, "until the last three years; but now, thank God, everything is different. I am 35 years old, the mother of six children, and I feel better and stronger to-day than I did ten years ago, all owing to Ripans Tabules. About three years ago I sent for a dollar bottle and have been using them both for myself and my family. They have cured me both of dyspepsia and headache, from which I was a sufferer for seven years. I tried everything under the sun, but nothing gave me relief until I got the Tabules, which gave me relief from the very first. I have recommended the Tabules to all my friends and neighbors. They are a blessing in any home."

A new style packet containing TEN RIPANS TABULES in a paper carton (without glass) is now for sale at some drug stores—FOR FIVE CENTS. This low-priced sort is intended for the poor and the economical. One dozen of the five-cent cartons (120 tabules) can be had by mail by sending forty-eight cents to the RIPANS CHEMICAL COMPANY, No. 10 Spruce Street, New York—or a single carton (TEN TABULES) will be sent for five cents.

MODERN AIR SHIPS.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

THE thing can be done. I should like to live to do it myself, or to see it done by some other fellow. They are all at it. There is but one reason why I am not wrestling with it; ten years ago I mapped out twenty years of work for myself, and an inventor must stick to his schedule, or accomplish nothing."

These were the words of Thomas A. Edison, in a recent talk on the subject of aerial navigation. He confidently expects that the problem will be solved, theoretically, practically and commercially, during the remaining span of his own life. Theoretically and practically, aerostation no longer belongs to the domain of the impossible. The solution of the puzzle is in the hands of, and has been practically demonstrated by, several of the world's pre-eminent scientists. The commercial possibility of aerostation has only to be exemplified before the mid-air careering of air-ships becomes as common an every day spectacle as the scorching of bicyclists.

With three such men as Maxim, Edison and Langley as its confident prophets (and two of them its most indefatigable students), the paragrapher has found it sensible to abstain from classing the science of aerial navigation with the idiocy of perpetual motion. "Alchemist," as a term of ridicule with which to denominate the investigator of aerostation (it was used by no less an able and intolerant a man as old Dr. Johnson, in his "Rasselas") has fallen into disuse within the past few years. With the most capable inventors, the most ingenious mechanicians, and the most learned scientists of the world arrayed in the struggle to prove to the skeptical the absolute practicability of aerial navigation, the results of the experiments of the next few years can hardly fail to be startling. In truth, the results already achieved since the comparatively recent revival of interest in the subject among scientists are sufficiently amazing.

In tackling the subject of aerial navigation, modern investigators have thus defined the four obstacles confronting them:

First, ascension; second, propulsion; third, direction; and fourth, equipose.

None of these modern scientists, including the most successful among them, regard the matter of safety as one of the obstacles. That is to say, they unite in assuming that if the ascension is perfect, the question of safety is eradicated.

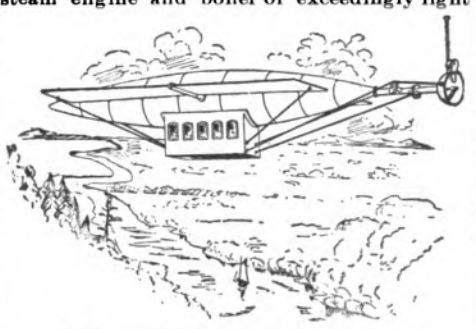
The inventors of air-ships of the gasometer type commonly omit ascension and equipoise as factors in the problem, for their contrivances only demand the consideration of two of the obstacles; propulsion and direction. But with the aeroplane devices, to the study of which the greatest among the students of aerial navigation have devoted themselves almost exclusively, the matter of equipoise has been the great and almost unconquerable difficulty, for the very simple reason that any object designed to float in one medium, and especially a medium so light and thin as air, must be poised to a degree almost incalculably nice. A little too much weight upon one side or the other, would overturn the machine, much in the way an unequally-balanced kite is overturned. It is this problem as to proper equipose which has chiefly stood in the way of a rapid development of the air-ship, and this problem, according to both Prof. Langley and Mr. Maxim, has finally been successfully solved.

Notwithstanding the almost exclusive attention which the more celebrated scientists are giving to the aeroplane devices, there is still an immense amount of work being accomplished by lesser investigators in developing the balloon or gasometer type of machine. In fact, there are more patents granted in the United States for inventions of this class than for the aeroplane class the world over—this being doubtless attributable to the neglect with which the comparatively few aeroplane students treat the gasometer (regarding it as a device incapable of further evolution) and the corresponding activity of the believers in the balloon, who belong for the most part to the constantly increasing class of professional aeronauts, and who take out the major number of patents on inventions of the gasometer class.

A United States patent was recently granted to a Brazilian for an aerostat of exceedingly ingenious and novel construction. The illustration shows the device in side view.

The gas reservoir of this device is of an elliptical and elongated form having a thin outer edge to serve as an aeroplane. A rudder of crescent shape is mounted upon a shaft projecting from the rear end of the reservoir. A car is suspended from the reservoir, and between the car and reservoir a series of sails is arranged. Propellor wheels are provided at the sides and rear end of the car, and these are operated by electric motor or storage battery.

PROF. CONTINHOS' AEROSTAT.



At a public trial of this air-ship made by the inventor at Pernambuco, Brazil, in June last, an average speed of forty-nine miles per hour for three hours was attained, the propellor being operated in the teeth of a strong wind for nearly half the time. The French military office has taken an interest in the device, and negotiations are pending for its use by the balloon corps of the French army. The inventor claims that his air-ship is capable of such perfection that he will eventually attain a speed of a hundred miles an hour with it.

The air-ship propelled by means of explosives is among the most novel of recent inventions in this class. A short time ago a New York inventor secured a patent for an air machine, the motive power of which is to be operated by the continous explosion of nitro-glycerine cartridges.

This extraordinary device has a bobbin-shaped gas-receiver. It carries a car supplied with a light electric motor. Extending out at the rear of the receiver is a shaft, which is provided with a concussion cup. A magazine designed for the carrying of the explosive pellets rises from this cup. The nitro-glycerine pellets are dropped at intervals, which may be easily regulated by a clock mechanism, and exploded by an electric spark. The recoil of the explosions acts against the concussion cup, and forces the air-ship forward. This machine, which in proportion to its size is exceedingly light, has been thoroughly tested, and the rapidity with which it was forced through the air by the concussive force of the explosives startled the scientists who witnessed the exhibition. The device is regarded, however, as a trifle too dangerous for practical purposes. A manufacturer of explosives who witnessed the trial remarked that it was difficult enough to handle nitro-glycerine on terra firma with any degree of safety, "let alone monkeying with it in mid-air." In time of war, however, when considerations of safety are not so keen, the machine would probably be of practicable service. The ship is provided with aeroplanes at the sides of the gas-receiver, and these are adjustable to any desired inclination, to head the ship either upward or downward.

The machines belonging to the aeroplane class are nothing more nor less than enormous kites, provided with means for propelling and steering. The planes are usually adjustable to the desired inclination. The aeroplanes of which the world has reason to expect the most are those of Maxim, the English inventor, and Langley, the American scientist. Professor Langley only recently returned to this country from Europe, and, while one of the most reticent of men, he has intimated that while in England he entered into an arrangement with Mr. Maxim whereby there is to be a combination of effort to effect the speedy perfection, and afterwards the popularization, of the aeroplane. The Maxim and Langley air-ships, exceedingly similar in their general design, are yet each capable of improvement by the addition of certain features of the other, and when the co-operation of these two masters of aerial navigation begins to be exhibited in essential changes in the apparatus of each, the absolute practicability and commercial possibility of the aeroplane will unquestionably be effectively proven.

Mr. Maxim's air-ship is provided with a steam engine and boiler of exceedingly light weight, when compared with the enormous power developed. The craft is actuated by means of propellor wheels. The ascension is made from an inclined plane— the same mechanical law being followed which the lad instinctively uses in raising his kite. Professor Langley's device, the aerodrome, differs from that of Mr. Maxim in that it is designed to ascend in a spiral course, in the manner of a bird rising from the water or from a level plain to attain the desired altitude before taking flight. The advantages of this means of ascension were clearly shown in the recent experiments with the Langley aerodrome at Occoquan, Va., and this is one of the essential features which Mr. Maxim is to embody in the construction of the new aeroplane which he is now having made at his works in England.

The propelling power of Professor Langley's aerodrome is steam. The machine, which is shown in our initial, carries an exceedingly powerful engine and boiler, which, however, weighs but twenty pounds. The aerodrome with which experiments have been so successfully made is a small model, not designed to carry a person, but which has yet carried in its numerous flights a load of two hundred pounds. A speed of over fifty miles an hour has already been attained with the aerodrome, and, on the common mechanical principle that increased size with corresponding power increase aerial velocity (as in the case of the ordinary rifle bullet compared with the heavy projectile), Professor Langley confidently expects that the large aerodrome now in course of construction, which is to differ from the small model in embracing the best features of the Maxim device, will be forced through the air at a rate approximating a hundred miles an hour.

A REMARKABLE OFFER.

Our readers will doubtless have noticed the remarkable offer that is made in the advertisement of Messrs. Cornish & Company, Washington, New Jersey, that appears in this issue. It states that the Cornish American Pianos and Organs are shipped on one year's trial and upon reference to the advertisement and to the catalogue and circulars issued by this enterprising firm we find that their plan of business is to ship every Piano and Organ upon the understanding that if after 12 months' trial it is not entirely satisfactory to the purchaser, the instrument is to be returned to them and they will refund not only the purchase money and the forward freight charges, but will add interest at the rate of six per cent. This statement certainly proves the implicit faith that Messrs. Cornish & Company have in the quality of the instruments they manufacture. The Pianos and Organs made by them are warranted for a full period of 25 years, and this guarantee is backed up by plant, property and hard cash to the value of over a million dollars. The elegant catalogue issued by this firm can be had by any reader of this paper without cost by writing to Messrs. Cornish & Company, Washington, New Jersey. It is a handsome art souvenir elegantly illustrated in colors and is certainly worth its weight in gold to any intending purchaser of a Piano or Organ. We most cheerfully endorse all the statements that Messrs. Cornish & Company make in their advertisements and we believe that our readers will save a considerable amount of money by placing their orders with the only firm of actual manufacturers of high grade Pianos and Organs in this country, who sell exclusively direct from factory to family, without the intervention of agents, dealers and music stores, and thus save the general public the enormous profits that buying through the ordinary sources entails upon the purchaser.

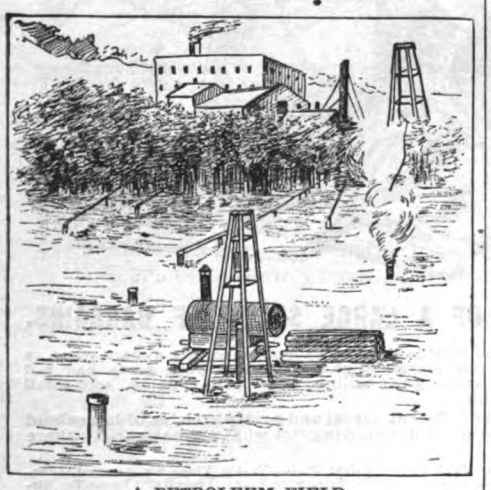
THE CHRISTMAS BOX COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

The Petroleum Industry.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

THE word petroleum means rock-oil, and is, in its present form adopted from the Latin into English. In German it is called Erdol, earth-oil, and Steinol, stone-oil. In French the word is Petrole.

Petroleum is one of the forms of bitumen. Other forms are asphalt, naphtha and natural gas.



Bitumen has been known and applied to the uses of mankind since the dawn of history. Herodotus writes of "lakes of pitch" which, he says, "smelt like asphalt," and which the ancients were accustomed to transfer from the lakes to cisterns; from these cisterns jars were filled in which the bitumen was carried away for use. Strabo mentions having found it in the Valley of Judea and near the Euphrates river.

Bitumen was much used by the ancient Egyptians for embalming, and it was used as a cement for the bricks in building the cities of Nineveh and Babylon. Petroleum itself is mentioned as having been found on the banks of the Oxus in the time of Alexander.

The presence of petroleum in North America was observed by the earliest explorers, but very little was ever made of the discovery. Late in the last century springs of petroleum were noticed in West Virginia, Ohio and Kentucky as explorers and settlers began to penetrate the wilds of that part of the country. Various finds of oil were made from time to time in these regions from this date onward, and for a long time it was bottled and sold for medicinal purposes under the name of Seneca Oil; but no definite or popular efforts were made to utilize the article until the spring of 1857. At this time the Seneca Oil Company was organized, and E. L. Drake was sent out the following spring to drill for oil. He commenced operations by attempting to sink a shaft in an old timbered pit supposed at the time to be of prehistoric origin, but which has since been proved to be a product of more modern times. Water and quicksands thwarted him and at length, after attempting to drive down an iron pipe, he abandoned his attempts for the season. The next spring, however, he was more successful, and was surprised one day by finding his drill hole filled with what proved to be pure petroleum, and the wildest excitement immediately prevailed. He telegraphed to his employer, Mr. Bissell, who at once bought up all the stock which he could obtain of the Pennsylvania Oil Company and leased tracts of land in the vicinity at a great profit.

During 1860, and 1861 several hundred wells were drilled, but only about half of them were producers and a very small proportion were flowing wells. However, even with the failure or partial failure of so many of the wells in the production of crude petroleum the supply became so much greater than the demand in the short space of three years that it dropped from fifty cents per gallon to ten cents per barrel.

Among the more famous of the wells at this time were the Flowing Fountain well, struck in May, 1861; the Empire, which yielded 2,500 barrels of oil each day, and the Phillips, which yielded 3,000 barrels per day. The Noble & Delamater well, yielding three thousand barrels per day, made within two months after its start the sum of $354,000. The Caldwell well, which was thought to be interfering with the Noble & Delamater, was bought and plugged, and during the following six months the Noble & Delamater cleared more than $1,000,000. The whole region was now a scene of bustling activity. Everybody was rich or expecting to become so. Oil Creek Valley, from Titusville to Oil City, was a forest of derricks. Work went on night and day, and the creak of the windlass was never silent. Fortune hunters were rushing madly about; vice and infamy, greed and desperation, were on every hand, and the "oil regions" were anything and everything except the abode of peace, quietness and order. The very demon of unrest seemed to be abroad there and the "Lord of Misrule" reigned supreme.

A PETROLEUM FIELD.

But the "craze" for oil lasted only a few short years, and subsided almost as suddenly as it had arisen, and at the present day all the wild rush of busy life in that region is gone, and the country thereabouts has settled into a quiet, humdrum existence of every day business. The oil industry still goes on, and much petroleum is obtained and much money made from its sale, but the wild excitement which characterized the vicinity of the wells in the early days of the discovery of oil is long since a thing of the past; and law and order have regained control.

DOUCORNET, the armless painter of Belgium, was born without arms and painted with his feet,—being an expert copyist and also painting original pictures. He has a rival in an Englishman, Bertram Hiles, who through an accident lost his arms. Before this dreadful calamity he was very ambitious to become an artist, and his disappointment was so great on losing his hands, that he decided to train his mouth to hold the pencil. This he did, and soon the brush,—and two years after his accident he obtained a "first class excellent" for drawing, at the school he was attending. Eventually he won a National art scholarship at the National Art Training school, and is now an exhibitor at the Royal Society of British artists.

MRS. LETITIA TYLER SEMPLE.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

THE action of the fifty-fourth Congress, which, in March last, passed a bill increasing the pension of Letitia Tyler Semple, daughter of President Tyler, from eight to fifty dollars per month, recalls to the public mind the old, white-haired lady who is now passing the evening of her days in the Louise Home in Washington, D. C., but who, fifty-six years ago, was known as the "First Lady of the Land." She was born May 11th, 1821, at the old Tyler homestead, Greenway, Virginia. As a little child she was present at the reception to Marquis de Lafayette, at Richmond, Virginia. Later, she remembers the funeral services over the remains of Thomas Jefferson, her father, then Governor of Virginia, delivering a eulogy upon the dead statesman.

At eighteen she became the wife of Paymaster James Semple, United States Navy, and thus, at an early age, ended her childhood and youth, and entered upon the serious duties of life. When she was but twenty-one years old her mother died, and, her husband being absent on a cruise, her father asked her to assume for the time the duties of mistress of the White House. Beautiful in person, and cultivated and refined in mind and character, she filled the part to perfection, and has many a tale to tell, to-day, of the great men of the world whom she then met and knew as friends.

Daniel Webster was then in the height of his glory and a member of her father's Cabinet, being Secretary of State. Thomas Ewing, of Ohio, was Secretary of the Treasury, John Bell of Tennessee was Secretary of War, George E. Badger of North Carolina, Secretary of the Navy, and Francis Grainger, Postmaster General. In the official life of Washington at that time, too, were John C. Crittenden, Henry Clay, Rufus Choate, John B. Calhoun, Buchanan, Caleb Cushing, John Quincy Adams, Henry A. Wise, Col. Benton of Missouri, and a host of others, many of whom were personal friends of Mrs. Semple. Here, too, she met and knew Dickens, Ole Bull, John Howard Payne, Washington Irving, Lord Ashburton, and many another famous man of that day.

It was during her residence in the White House that her father gave a fancy dress party there to his eldest granddaughter, who was dressed for the occasion as a fairy with gossamer wings, and a diamond star on her forehead. Among other guests was the little daughter of Gen. Almonte, the Mexican Minister, dressed as an Aztec princess, the children of Henry Wise, and little Master Schermerhorn of New York.

Mrs. Semple remembers, too, the shocking disaster to the Princeton, upon which, while making a trial trip down the river with a most distinguished party of guests on board, including her father, a cannon burst while they were attempting to fire a salute, and instantly killed some of the party and some of the sailors. Among the killed was a Mr. Gardner, a wealthy gentleman from New York; and his daughter Julia, thus suddenly deprived of her father's care, soon became the wife of President Tyler, and Mrs. Semple resigned to her the duties and pleasures of the White House, and rejoined her husband who had been ordered to shore duty at Pittsburg, Pa. The years of 1856 and 1857 she spent abroad, as Major Semple had then been ordered to the Mediterranean Squadron.

At the ever memorable time when the Civil War began, with the fall of Fort Sumter, Mrs. Semple was in Brooklyn, N. Y., and was entertaining a party of distinguished guests at dinner on the day that the clouds of war thus gathered so thickly over our land. Virginia woman as she was and is, her sympathies were all with her native state, and time, strength, money, and even jewelry went to relieve the suffering of the Virginia sick and wounded soldiers. But the fortunes of war brought many others, friends and foes, under her care, and she faithfully tried to do her duty to all.

Returning to her home in Williamsburg in 1865, she found it utterly razed to the ground. Not a brick nor a stone remained of the magnificent pile of buildings once occupied by Lord Norbourne Botetourt; even the wells being filled up, and all the materials of the house having been carted away. Left in this way—homeless, widowed, and with but small means at her disposal, she opened a school for young women in Baltimore where her strong spirit of generosity led her to educate many penniless girls free of charge.

But at last, her eyes having given out, she became an inmate of the Louise Home, where she still lives; her sight constantly becoming dimmer and more dim she patiently and cheerfully waits for the end of life in this world. Surrounded by souvenirs of her past life, her room brightened by flowers and sunshine, cheered by the visits of friends, among whom are many little children, and loving her native country still with all the strong affection as when, in the days of her youth she begged during a severe illness at sea "Only have my body wrapped in the dear old American flag if I am buried at sea." She is endeared to the people of Washington and of the whole country as a true American woman and one of the very few still remaining to us of those who figured in the earlier life of our country.

SENT FREE TO MEN

A Discovery for Lost Manhood Sent Free to Every Sufferer Who Will Write for It.

G. B. Wright Was Restored to Health and Makes a Generous Offer.

George B. Wright, a merchant and well-known citizen of Marshall, Mich., who was permanently cured of lost manhood and nervous debility after declining health for years, offers to send the medical prescription that effected the cure to every reader of COMFORT who is suffering to-day as he suffered. All who will drop him a letter asking for a copy of the prescription will receive it by return mail free of charge. As certain as a wound leaves a scar and as sure as effect follows cause, do men live to repent their follies and indiscretions in weakness and suffering. The tortured sufferer may bear no telltale marks of ruin upon his face to betray his lost manhood. He goes to his grave a human wreck, and never tells of his sufferings for fear of shame. Such mental anguish at times drives him to the verge of desperation, and he is easy prey for those vultures in human form, quack doctors, who hold out alluring hopes of cure only to disappoint, and after robbing him of his money plunge him into absolute despair.

No one can appreciate these horrors of lost manhood except he has suffered them. No one can help such sufferers except he knows a cure and has himself been restored to full manhood. A notable cure of lost manhood in an extreme case was affected in the person of George B. Wright, a music dealer and well-known citizen of Marshall, Mich. Mr. Wright for years suffered the agony of lost vital power. He saw his physical powers go from him as the result of insidious disease until he was reduced to a condition of senility, and the best doctors in the country gave him up to die.

Like many others, he tried the various remedies offered by specialists for the treatment of weaknesses peculiar to men, and it was this experience that drove him to a little study and research for his own benefit.

He asserts that his ten years' suffering, both mentally and physically, was turned to unbounded joy in a single night through a rare combination of medicines that literally made him young again. It is the prescription of this discovery that his enthusiasm leads him to offer free to any man, young or old, who feels that his animation or the fire of ambition has left him and needs something that will not only brace him up and enable him to be prepared for any undertaking which may present itself, but will restore the parts to their original size and vigor.

There is no question but what in his individual case the results were just as described, and it seems quite probable that any man who believes himself to be weak may profit by sending for this free prescription. Many people wonder how he can afford to send this prescription free, but it costs him but little to do so and he feels a philanthropic interest in giving weak men an opportunity to cure themselves.

A request to G. B. Wright, music dealer, box 1244, Marshall, Mich., for his free prescription, will be promptly and privately complied with by return mail.

THREE HUNDRED PER CENT. PROFIT. A MONEY MAKER FOR AGENTS.

The ordinary store keeper can feel proud when he makes twenty per cent. on sales; but when you handle the Magical Sponge, which you will notice advertised in another column of this paper, you cannot make less than one hundred per cent. and can easily clear three hundred per cent. profit. It is the neatest and greatest seller ever seen and sells itself. Just look at a few orders within a few days and see how it goes. These are not selected orders, but a few picked out of the heap, all haphazard, just to give you an idea and encourage you in taking hold and winning your fortune. Here was Joshua Crosby, East Weymouth, Mass., ordered a gross, February 23rd, and on the 12th of March ordered another. That's nearly $52.00 clear (simply paid Exp. charges out of it), just for a little work done at odd times in a few days. Mrs. J. Cartwel, Milford, Ill., on April 2nd sent for 6 dozen and on the 7th sent for a whole gross. There's thirty-nine dollars cleared up in a few days. Almon L. Reed, Benton Station, Maine, sold a dozen. Annie T. Silvey, Stevensville, Mont., ordered five dozen in less than a month. Mrs. John Abbott, Georgiaville, R. I., had 3 dozen sent her March 19th, and on April 3rd had a whole gross. A. E. Bryson, Oakdale, Pa., a dozen one day and right after 3 dozen, and so on through a whole pile of correspondence and orders, all telling how easy it is to sell the Magical Sponge, and how anxious people are to get it when they see what it will do. Many agents after showing the work of the sponge, easily sell from 3 to one dozen sponges in an office, or a building, while it is no trouble to sell them on the street, in shops, factories and houses as fast as you can handle them. Remember that every sale means large profit and never less than one hundred per cent. clear, which just doubles your money, while you can with a little energy and push, make six dollars on every dollar invested. You will notice we give you a sample to start you if you send for a subscription to "COMFORT" to-day.

LADIES I Make Big Wages —At Home— and want all to have the same opportunity. It's VERY PLEASANT work and will easily pay $18 weekly. This is no deception. I want no money and will Gladly send full particulars to all sending 2c. stamp. Mrs. A. H. Wiggins, Box 18, Lawrence, Mich.

TALKS WITH GIRLS

CONDUCTED BY COUSIN MARION.

A Merry Christmas to you all, though it may be just a little early to be making Christmas wishes. It is the last month of the year though and when we meet again in this column the old year will have gone into that mysterious past which nothing ever comes out of, and into which all things earthly go. However, this is Christmas month when all the world is glad and it is not good to be talking anything but laughter and good cheer; so here's to you for a Merry, Merry Christmas and many more to follow.

The very first questioner in this last month of the year is from the pretty hill town of Lynchburg, Va., and Cousin Irvine wants to know a whole lot. What will cure bashfulness? It can not be cured, but it can be improved by getting your mind off of yourself, and you can do that by constant association with other people. (No. 2) No, I cannot tell what a good book is so definitely that you may judge all books by the definition. The Bible is a good book, but it cannot be compared with any other. There are many kinds of books, and each kind has its own good ones. (3) A good student is one who best pleases the Faculty, I should venture to guess. (4) I do not know the last line of "The Forsaken," unless it is: "To wake to what?"

Muriel, Chicago, Ills.—Publishers say that there is no demand for short stories as compared with books. In copyrighting a book, you may have it copyrighted in manuscript yourself or sell the Mss. to the publisher giving him the privilege, or you may copyright it yourself when published. P. S. I am glad to hear you don't think about "beaux." There are so many better things to think about, dear.

Garnet, Mahanoy City, Pa.—asks me for a little prayer for grace at meals, but Garnet, dear, you don't want me to give it to you. Let your own thankfulness speak.

Maud and Minnie, Crow Wing, Minn.—Girls of fifteen may go to school with boys of seventeen when their parents are willing, and that is enough going. Some parents need guardians themselves. The other questions about boys and kissing are too silly to be answered.

Artistic, Holdingford, Minn.—As between becoming a stenographer and a grocery clerk, I should say that the latter had better opportunities and less competition. A good common school education ought to be plenty for either position. (2) Don't make a friend of a young man who has a bad reputation. The fact that he makes himself appear differently to you is not to his credit because he is deceiving you. (3) A nice wedding present for your new brother-in-law would be a silver match safe, a nice umbrella, a silver key-chain or something of that kind.

Ignorance, Springfield, Mo.—When a nice girl begins to lose her hold on the man whom she has believed she held firmly, it is best to move along in the even tenor of her way and let him go if he wants to. Be just the same to him as always and do nothing more.

Blue Eyes, Tallahassee, Fla.—I am sorry the beaus you have are so numerous that you don't have time to breathe, for if they were not, you might have time to learn the ordinary rules of spelling and grammar.

Efride, Kilgore, O.—A girl of fourteen should not have beaus three times a week or one time. She should be studying her lessons.

Miss A. M., Ludington, Mich. Write to the Secretary of the Detroit Club, Detroit, Mich., for the information you seek.

Twenty-Seven, San Francisco, Cal.—There are worse things than "old maidism," and one of them is unhappy wifeism. Still I think you don't run a great risk in marrying the man you mention, if you do not care for any other.

Three Sisters, Hartford, Kan. (1) It would not be proper for the young man to pay the hotel bill for the lady. (2) I suppose two young people might sit in a buggy for a short time and talk. (3) It would be correct for a girl to visit the mother of the young man she is to marry and she might also kiss him before his mother.

Brown Eyes, Grove City, Pa.—Long engagements are not to be commended. Wait till you are ready to marry. (2) A girl may write to a young man to whom she is not engaged. (3) The man's size should not be any bar to his favor in your eyes, if he is a good fellow. (4) If you get your parents' consent to your marriage, that is enough, unless the grandmother has money to give you.

Sweet Pea, Red Wing, Minn.—I do not know why it is, but most children seem to get along better if slippered occasionally.

Vera K., Hyndesville, N. Y.—If you are bashful and the young man is quite as much so, it seems to me that if you both told each other about it and agree not to be, the whole trouble would be remedied at once. Try it and see.

Gypsy, Stratton, Me.—It is quite proper to go wheeling with a man you know. (2) Nearly any colors may be worn with blue eyes and brown hair. Indeed, nowadays, nearly any colors may be worn by blonde or brunette, if not too pronounced.

Student, Medford, Wis.—I know of no college nearer than the one mentioned.

Annette, South Pittsburg, Tenn. A First National bank is no better than a Second or Third one. Sometimes not so good. National Banks take the numeral name simply to designate the order of their organization.

Lillian, Silverwood, Mich.—It is a safe rule to refuse the attentions of any man who counsels you to disobey your parents. The man is radically wrong.

Blue and Brown, Palmyra, N. J.—When a girl asks me which of two men she should accept, I tell her "neither," because a girl who doesn't know how to choose for herself in such a matter has no business marrying. (2) A girl may accept a box of candy from a man.

Ignorance, Sterling, Col.—(1) The man should never take the lady's arm, and she should simply tell him so, if he does. (2) Ladies who shake hands are not old fashioned. (3) There is no need of a man changing from one side of the sidewalk to another when walking with a lady. (4) Think about something else than yourself and you won't blush. (5) Don't try to divert your thoughts from your sweetheart while waiting for him. (6) There is no set rule for getting rid of a person you don't like to have round, and there ought to be, goodness knows.

Laura N., East Weymouth, Mass.—Better consult your family physician about removing the blotches. There's danger in it.

Hope and Faith, Austin, Texas.—Give up your notions of going on the stage. You had better learn to be good cooks.

Pansy M., Monticello, Wis.—Wouldn't it be a good idea to wait till the man proposes before you think of marrying him?

Louise, Applegarth, Md.—A man who makes love to one girl and writes to half a dozen others is a flirt to be avoided. (2) It is permissible for a man and a girl to exchange pictures.

A Reader, Atlanta, Ga.—To obtain your friend's discharge from the army you must get the help of your Congressman and U. S. Senator. See your Congressman.

Rosebud, Peoria, Ills.—Blue and black eyed people may wed. I never heard they shouldn't. (2) Give up the young man you are now interested in and trust to the Lord for another one.

Edith, Red Bluff, Mon.—A lead pencil is not good form for letter writing.

Daisy D., Jefferson City, Mo.—It is quite right for your fiance to call on you three or four times a week and perhaps to kiss you, seeing you are of age; but be chary of your kisses. I do not see why you do not marry as you seem to be so well satisfied with each other. I think you will be very happy though married.

Sweetheart, Mansfield, Ohio.—It is not quite possible to tell you why I do not think it is nice for a girl to kiss her escort good-by when she is not engaged to him. There are hundreds of reasons why she should not if she wants to be what every man wants the woman to be he wants to marry. Ask your Sunday school teacher why, man or woman.

Geneva, Attica, Ohio.—Since you are so undecided and are not yet twenty you had better not marry the young man for a year or two. If he really loves you he will wait, and if he doesn't you don't want him.

Three Girls, Marshalltown, Iowa.—It is never right to become engaged to a man unless you mean to marry him. It is worse than lying and stealing. (2) You can not be taught how to write a letter from the heart. If it is in your heart it will come out all right. (3) You did right to slap the young man in the face. He should offer you the apology, of course. You don't owe him one.

That answers the last questions, dears, and there were many this month. Now good-by until another month and until I may say to you all A Happy New Year. To the old year 1898, good-by forever.

Young Americans Letter Writer.

Or the New Art of Polite Correspondence. A Book that Will Lead You on to Fame.

Adapted for Both Sexes. This is the Best Letter writer published in Europe or America. It teaches how to write a Letter on any subject out of the writer's own head, or to compose a first class, intelligent Business Letter, or a Love Letter, or a Friendly Letter. It gives as Samples hundreds of Letters of every kind, shows you how to carry on a long correspondence with a Lady or Gentleman—Letters that never fail to penetrate the Heart. No other Book has this MYSTERY OF SECRET CORRESPONDENCE. Only French Books have it. It is the Book to refer to when you want to write what you cannot find words to express. It opens all the little rivulets that start from the Soul, enabling you to write on any topic with ease and elegance; or how to write a Complimentary Note, or how to write for the Press, Rules on spelling Correctly, on Punctuation, on Directing Letters, and an immense amount of information to be found in no other book. There are many young people who are good scholars, but are woefully deficient in Ordinary Letter Writing. They receive letters from friends, that they postpone answering on account of their own ignorance of elegant letter writing, until at last they remain unanswered, and they lose their correspondent. Many a son or daughter at school, receive beautiful letters from home, and wonder why they cannot write such letters in return. It is because you need Practical Instruction in Letter Writing. Price by mail 25 cents, or Three copies for 50 cents.

SPECIAL. Send 50 cents to-day for a two years' subscription to our popular monthly SUNSHINE, and we will send all three, "The Book of Politeness," "Society Dances," and "Letter Writer," free. Address SUNSHINE, Augusta, Maine.

The STANDARD BOOK on POLITENESS

Good Behavior and Social Etiquette. Your Manners May Be Your Fortune.

At last the door is opened and the riddle solved. This Book gives Practical Advice and knowledge to all that desire to enter Society or Business Perfect and Graceful in their Manners. There is a SOMETHING in this Book that our Artist could not illustrate nor could we find words to express it. Were you ever at a friendly gathering where everything seemed to go wrong—guests all separated by a barrier of reserve—gloom settling down on the scene, when all at once a person enters who seems gifted with a spell, like that of the old Magicians, the gloom disappears, the ice thaws and they all enjoy themselves. This Book tells that great Secret—how to so behave that your society will be courted and sought after by every one. This is the wonderful power of Manners. It is worth to you more than Beauty. True Politeness, as this Book teaches it, will give you access to any family in America, and then you want nothing but opportunity to become great. It is a charm better to possess than talent or wealth. This Book embraces the Usages and Customs of Good Society, Etiquette, Social Intercourse, Dress, Introduction, Cards, Letters and Presents, Conversation, Morning Calls, Dinners, Balls, Evening Parties, Love, Courtship and Marriage, Riding and Driving, the Promenade, Boating, Staying with Friends, etc. It teaches how to act in any emergency, or enter any society without embarrassment, and how to avoid incorrect and vulgar habits, in the Street, at Home, or in Society. It is a Perfect Guide to New Beginners in fashionable life. Parents should purchase this Book, and keep it where their Sons and Daughters can easily refer to it. It is a Text Book of Gentility. It will bring out the finer qualities of a Lady or Gentleman, even if you were born in the backwoods. Price 25 Cents, or Three for 50 cts. by mail.

SPECIAL. Send 50 cents to-day for a two years' subscription to our popular monthly SUNSHINE, and we will send all three, "The Book of Politeness," "Society Dances," and "Letter Writer," free. Address SUNSHINE, Augusta, Maine.

Sour Stomach

"After I was induced to try CASCARETS, I will never be without them in the house. My liver was in a very bad shape, and my head ached and I had stomach trouble. Now, since taking Cascarets, I feel fine. My wife has also used them with beneficial results for sour stomach."

ILLS AND AILS THAT OXIEN HAS CURED.

OXIEN CURES RHEUMATISM

AND IS ONE OF THE GREATEST PREVENTIVES OF PNEUMONIA KNOWN. IT CURES COLDS AND THROAT TROUBLES, AND GIVES QUICK RELIEF TO SUFFERERS FROM LA GRIPPE.

Being such a potent remedy for Diseases of the Throat and Lungs every careful housewife will be glad to equip herself with it. It has cured thousands of children of the Croup, and we have to-day in our strong room barrels of testimonials from men and women who have been cured of Catarrh and Throat ailments by the use of the OXIEN Remedies.

Runs a Crosscut Saw. A. GRANGER, LUCE, MICH. The doctors said I had spinal complaint. My left side and limbs were nearly paralyzed. After suffering nearly four years, I used only one lot of your wonderful Oxien remedies. Now I am running a crosscut saw every day.

Weak After La Grippe. MRS. KATE DAVIS, NOBLESVILLE, IND. Last winter I had a severe attack of la grippe. My recovery was slow, and I was left very weak. My nervous system seemed completely broken up. Oxien restored my health and strength.

A Perfect Wreck. MRS. MARY JAMESON, FOLSOM, KY. I had enlarged glands of the throat, nervous prostration, also female weakness of the worst kind. I was a perfect wreck. Oxien cured me.

Feels Like Different Woman. MRS. P. V. SANSOME, DALTON, GA. I feel like a different woman. Oxien is a great remedy. I believe by its continued use that any female disease that can be cured will be cured.

Saved His Life at the Age of 85. D. G. WILKINS, MARBLEHEAD, MASS. One day I was feeling very poorly. Two Oxien tablets helped me to reach home. They saved my life. I could not exist without them.

A Walking Advertisement. MRS. JOHN OLDENBURGH, MILLVILLE, N. B. I was sick for eleven years after having lung fever, which left me with a violent cough every fall and spring. Every one thought I had consumption. Now I am a walking advertisement of a cure by Oxien.

Stronger Than Ever Before. MRS. EMMA HECKERT, DANVILLE, PENN. I suffered with neuralgic nervousness and heart trouble. I have taken three boxes of Oxien, and I am stronger than I have ever been in my life before and am in good health.

No Doctor's Bills. MRS. B. PAYNE, SMITH GROVE, KY. We have saved, probably, hundreds of dollars in doctor's bills, besides a great deal of suffering, by having your remedies always at hand. They will check and cure pneumonia if taken in time.

Sleeps Like a Baby. MRS. WILLIAM FRAISER, BRIDGEVILLE, N. S. I did not get a good night's sleep for three years. I took Oxien tablets, and then I could sleep like a baby. I recommend them to others.

Couldn't Eat Any Food. S. E. MCCOY, CLARK CITY, MO. I was not able to leave my bed. I could not even drink water or eat any food. I lived on malted milk. My nerves were in such a weak condition that no one was allowed in my room. My limbs were useless, as were my arms. I was prevailed upon to try Oxien tablets and plasters. Now I believe I am completely and permanently cured.

Can Cook and Wash at 78. But Before She Took Oxien She Could not Walk Without Aid—Other Cures. MRS. CATHERINE M. SPENCER, of MURRAY, KY., writes under date of May 21, 1898: "Two years ago I had rheumatism so bad that I couldn't walk without help. I was cured by Oxien Electric Plasters and the Oxien tablets, so that now although 78 years old I can do my own cooking and washing."

An Old Soldier Made Well. "I am an old crippled soldier of the rebellion, and I was troubled with salt rheum for over 40 years," writes Peter Jasperson of Ashland, Neb., Jan. 13, 1897. "I laughed when somebody suggested Oxien. I laugh differently now for I tried Oxien and it has made me well."

Walked in 6 Days. MRS. LYDIA MONTGOMERY, CAMERON, W. VA., April 8, 1898: "My little girl was so afflicted with inflammatory rheumatism that for five weeks she couldn't walk a step. The fifth week we gave her Oxien only. In six days she could walk and to-day is in perfect health. I am willing to take oath to this statement."

More Good Than Doctors. MR. JOSEPH GOETTEHNAN, DECORAH, IOWA, March 27, 1898: "For years I was troubled with rheumatic neuralgia. Your Oxien tablets and Oxien plasters did me more good than could all the doctors in the state of Iowa."

A New Man. MR. FARQUHAR MURCHISON, OSCEOLA, ILL., Jan. 20, 1898: "When I first heard about Oxien I was a cripple from rheumatism. The Oxien tablets, plasters and pills made a new man of me so I am now at work and happy."

Rheumatism 10 Years. MR. GEORGE L. CATLIN, MENON, IND., Jan. 30, 1898: "I had rheumatism in one knee and one elbow for ten years, which the Oxien plasters entirely cured in three weeks."

Oxien the Remedy That Cures. MRS. E. E. POWERS, CONCORD, N. H., Jan. 3, 1898: "My little boy suffered such tortures from rheumatism that he could hardly stand on his feet. He would cry out with pain and at times would remain in a stupor for hours. Since he began using Oxien a year ago he has not had a single attack of rheumatism."

L. A. PERRY, ROXBURY, MASS., Jan. 22, 1897: "Oxien cured me of rheumatism which made life a burden."

Bedridden For 15 Years. Think of being bedridden for 15 years! This was the condition of Mrs. John H. Hunt of Fairview, Ohio, whose husband under date of January 27, 1896 writes: "About the first night my wife used the Oxien Electric Plaster the pains in her back disappeared. After taking one large box of Oxien tablets she was able to get up, and at the present writing she is free from pain."

Remedy for Pneumonia. After $1000 Spent in Doctor's Bills a Pennsylvania Woman Finds Relief in Oxien. The debility that follows pneumonia has been the bane of many men and women. Mrs. R. S. Pershing of Grip, Penn., had the best of doctors for it and her husband spent over $1000 trying in vain to get her cured. On Feb. 15, 1897, she wrote as follows: "I got a dollar box of Oxien and it completely cured me."

"Your Oxien remedies cured my little boy, 3 years old of pneumonia," writes Mrs. W. Mead of Beckwith Ridge, N. B., last spring.

CONDUCTED BY REGULUS.

THE year 1899 gives us five eclipses; the first Lunation or new moon of the year being a partial eclipse of the sun. The eclipse occurs at about forty-one minutes past five o'clock in the evening, on the 11th day of January. It occurs just after sunset to us on the eastern coast and is consequently invisible at Washington, the seat of government of our country. It is visible in Alaska and the northwestern part of British Columbia, also in Japan and the northeastern part of Russia, and to those regions where visible we are taught we must look for such effects as flow from the obscuration.

At the moment of the ecliptic conjunction, Washington time, Mars will be just rising in the east, and Neptune will be in the lower heaven or the 4th house; while Herschel, Saturn, Venus and Mercury will be in the 5th house, and the conjoined luminaries will be in the 6th.

Mars retrograde and rising points to some unusual excitement or angry discussions at public meetings, if not violence of a very lawless character; fires are likely to be unusually prevalent and all are cautioned in this particular to have care; the lunation falling in the 6th points to some unusual sickness, probably of an eruptive character, among the people and particularly among school children; hotels and theaters do not have as favorable season in January as usual and some extraordinary scandal or vicious development at a prominent hotel creates public excitement or unusual press comment. Scandal among theatrical artists or some accident at a theater is likely in this lunation.

Mars rising has a tendency to cause a warlike and contentious sentiment among our people as a nation and will keep alive the patriotic spirit that characterized us in the middle of 1898. Some of this effect will be seen in the last half of January, when also the financial affairs will be in some disorder.

The great benefic Jupiter will be in 4th house and gives us profit from our agricultural productions and healthful conditions on earth that promote advantages to the farming community.

The eclipse being visible in Japan, Russia and China, gives some indications of warlike disorder there and probably some serious earthquake or great disaster in that region of the earth's surface.

CELESTIAL CALENDAR FOR JANUARY, 1899.

JANUARY, 1—Sunday. Not especially favorable as a Sabbath day; pulpit efforts will not be notable for soundness of either logic or judgment. Social matters are adversely affected and the fair sex are unpleasantly disposed.

2—Monday. Use the morning hours for asking favor from persons in authority and push all honorable undertakings vigorously during the first two-thirds of the day; the late afternoon hours will be less agreeable, being likely to bring disappointment and otherwise baffle thy progress; do not employ the afternoon for any kind of transactions pertaining to houses or lands or agricultural productions, nor make any new beginnings in any matters of a literary character; postpone correspondence.

3—Tuesday. Sign no contracts during the early forenoon, when also commercial matters are detrimented or embarrassed. The latter part of the day, on the other hand, should be employed to its fullest extent, preferences being given for artistic work, decoration, painting, dress-making, moulding, architectural designing, chemical processes, compounding ingredients for patent articles, and for electrical work of all kinds; seek audience with the fair sex and press the suit towards matrimony.

4—Wednesday. Choose the forenoon of this day for the purchase and sale of fancy goods, silks, wearing apparel and all articles of adornment and make thy selections of patterns, styles, colors etc., in dress; the day is in the main a good one for all the honorable undertakings in life; the evening forbids thee making any effort to obtain advantages from thine employer.

5—Thursday. Lose no moments of this day but give all thine energies to business; deal in houses and lands, sign deeds, make contracts, do important correspondence, improve the intellect, engage help, travel and deal with lawyers and all persons engaged in the literary pursuits or employed with the pen.

6—Friday. Disputes are likely to mar the events of the forenoon unless the tongue be held well under control; actively pursue thy business as the day advances, however, and thou mayst have more than ordinary assurance of the success of thy reasonable undertakings begun in the afternoon hours, when also money solicitations and transactions are likely to be successful; purchase goods for trade and adjust accounts with persons of wealth.

7—Saturday. Make personal applications for favor or promotion from public men and persons in superior positions or having any kind of authority over thee; engage in chemical and scientific studies and buy electrical and mechanical apparatus, drugs, and sharp instruments.

8—Sunday. A day of intellectual acuteness, executive force, and celerity of movement; though there will be tendencies to sarcasm and bitterness of speech; strange whims and notions become pronounced and the temper will need healthful check; the evening cautions against impatience and suddenly conceived fancies, inducing unpleasantness to the gentle sex and promoting quarrels and ruptures of the tender relations between the sexes.

9—Monday. A singularly evil day; enter not upon new business, for no permanent pecuniary advantage will accrue from such now begun; beware of dealings in real estate and be cautious to scrutinize the signatures to commercial paper and against a too ready belief in representations.

10—Tuesday. Pursue vigorously all thine avocations on this day, for thine exertions for pecuniary advantage in all honorable undertakings will meet with more than ordinary success; buy goods for trade and deal with judges, ecclesiastics and the wealthy; seek money accommodations and speculate in stocks if thy nativity also favors at this time; the day increases in benevolence each hour until the late evening.

11—Wednesday. Partial Eclipse of the Sun. Don't take this day for the beginning of any important undertaking, but rather urge the routine duties and economize thy strength and energies for better conditions under which to "born thy ventures;" the evening and night hours induce quarrels and strife and criminal impulses will be quickened; fires and explosions are to be guarded against; beware of all contention and litigation on this and the following day.

12—Thursday. A very evil day for travel, conducive also to bad fires, strife and contention; let the temper be guarded carefully; have no surgical operations performed; do not get caught in speculative disasters, but be very watchful of the purse and defer making purchases of merchandise for trade. The time is peculiarly unfortunate for persons born about the 10th of March, 28th of May, 10th of June, 14th of July, 10th of September and December, and the 28th of November, of past years; as such persons are likely to be baffled and defeated in most of their undertakings or are not in the best conditions of health. Let all such persons have the best of care for avoidance of lung and bronchial troubles, protecting the body more than usual during this winter season by woolens and flannels; avoid all chances of business disasters from making changes in their affairs in these passing weeks. Ladies, so born, should be more than usually watchful for the health and welfare of father, husband, brother, or other male relative dear to them, or to whom they look for worldly blessings. To all such persons REGULUS suggests that these are only temporary conditions of mischief which invite the special caution and that those born as indicated should be patient and watchful for a season the better to avert a great measure of the evil and to have confidence that the threatening clouds must roll on erelong and a brighter condition of things prevail.

13—Friday. Be stirring early and deal with elderly persons, hire houses and lands, and deal with persons in the dirty and laborious occupations; the afternoon invites special activity in the literary pursuits; deal with printers, publishers, booksellers, contractors, and persons in business connected with agriculture.

14—Saturday. The middle hours of this day are disappointing and dealings with railroad officers or persons in government positions do not result favorably. The very early and late hours are best of the day.

15—Sunday. An unpromising day for religious advancement or for success in the pulpit. The brain and nervous energies have suffered considerable detriment during the last ten days and nervous diseases have been inclined to melancholy and despondency, and suicides have become frequent.

16—Monday. Push affairs vigorously during this day, especially such as are connected with the mechanical pursuits or the manufacturing trades; deal in cattle, machinery, leather, cutlery, chemicals or electrical goods and particularly patented articles, but let all classes have care in the use of the pen in the forenoon when the signing of deeds and important contracts and correspondence are best postponed.

17—Tuesday. This day is propitious for music and art, and for pursuit of the elegant occupations; dealers in fancy goods, embroideries, milliners and jewelers should urge their business on this day. The time is favorable for the fair sex and for the pleasures and gratifications of life.

18—Wednesday. Bridle the tongue during this day and avoid contentions of all kinds; have no surgical operations performed that can be avoided, nor deal with chemists, butchers or bakers; look out for fires and explosions; let all have care in the handling or care of fire, hot liquids and chemicals and avoid accidents from such sources as well as from steam and electricity. These suggestions are particularly appropriate for persons born on or about the 18th of January or April, or the 21st of July or October, of past years, for the majority of such persons are now likely to be physically and mentally feverish and excitable; oversensitive in feeling; in the midst of controversy or contention; peculiarly rash in thought, deed, or act, and should especially avoid travel or otherwise placing themselves in the way of harm or loss from accident, or of danger from eruption and inflammatory troubles. Many of the persons born as indicated are threatened with severe money losses either from fire or through unwise speculations.

19—Thursday. Be not rash in thy business ventures nor invest thy capital in stock on this day; the conditions induce money losses and unwise and exhaustive payments; keep a strict eye upon the purse and all inclinations to expend thy means.

20—Friday. This day is full of energy and enterprise and invites activity in all the walks of life, but especially for machinists, engineers, mechanics, travellers, surgeons, electricians, military men, cutlers, and iron and brass workers; consult thy dentist and experiment in chemistry.

21—Saturday. Have no important dealing on this day with very aged persons or those in public office, and beware of wasting thine energies in the pursuit of foolish projects or delusive schemes for improving pecuniary circumstances; patents and novelties offering on this day will prove to be poor investments.

22—Sunday. Evil conditions interfere with the general benevolence of this day; expose not thyself to disappointment.

23—Monday. An indifferent day, when conditions are not particularly conducive to success in any venture.

24—Tuesday. Improve every moment of this day; purchase goods for trade, deal with bankers, clothiers, woolen dealers, judges and persons engaged in the ecclesiastical callings.

25—Wednesday. Avoid litigation, and do not indulge in bitterness of speech; humor the whims and notions of thine associates rather than seek to correct them; the day promotes combustibility and may witness some bad fires; have care in handling animals and chemicals; persons in the mechanical callings are adversely affected.

26—Thursday. Ask no favor of persons in authority; deal not in real estate; buy no merchandise for trade and see that the purse is not lost or its contents wasted; do not speculate or solicit pecuniary advantages from banks or wealthy persons.

27—Friday. Diligently improve the benefic influences which prevail on this day for all the elegant pursuits; architectural and horticultural studies, furnishing and decorating real estate, landscape work and animal painting; deal in such commodities as coal, iron, petroleum, wood, lumber, lead, wool, and grain; the evening will give pleasure from the drama or musical entertainment, when also social gatherings will be agreeable, notwithstanding the weather may be stormy.

28—Saturday. An indifferent day, giving but little promise of profit or advantage from undertakings now begun; push routine work and duties; postpone every important correspondence and have care in all matters of account that errors are not committed.

29—Sunday. An excellent day for all purposes for which it is appropriate; though the financial interests of religious organizations are considerably injured in these passing days.

30—Monday. Make no contracts pertaining to houses or lands during the forenoon hours, when the artistic pursuits are adversely affected; more than ordinary prudence and circumspection will need to be exercised by the gentle sex with reference to health and deportment, especially such as were born about the 11th of March, June, September or December, of past years. All marriageable persons born about these dates are likely to be much disturbed in mind over their affairs of heart or in their social surroundings. Young gentlemen, so born, should check all impulses towards foolish gratifications either of appetite or passions. Many of them now learn of the fickleness of the human heart. The afternoon of this day invites special activity in the mechanical pursuits, experiments in chemistry, and dealings with military men, druggists, bakers, tailors, carpenters, machinists and engineers.

31—Tuesday. Use this day for applications to public authorities or officers of great corporations, for favor or advantage of any kind in thine affairs; make changes of habitation, travel, and deal with persons noted for eccentricity of habit or dress; attend to patent matters, and such as are novel and original.

LOST MANHOOD

5 DAYS' TRIAL TREATMENT FREE

Prof. Jules Laborde's Wonderful French Restorative

"CALTHOS"

No C. O. D. or Deposit Scheme. Food for Thought.

As a man grows in years, his system gives out here and there. If no help be sought from Science, the trouble grows worse. When the eyesight fails, skilled oculists and opticians soon make the patient see as well as ever. If the teeth decay the expert dentist builds them up permanently with gold, and restores them to their old-time usefulness. If deafness come, specialists in the treatment of the ear quickly bring back the sense of hearing. So it goes until we reach that infirmity commonly called Lost Manhood. The man so afflicted may well be pitied. His thoughts go back to the days of youth, when his veins tingled with the vigor of strength, power and ambition; when he mingled in society and was a real man. Possibly you, the reader of this notice, are so afflicted. If that be true, you can have your infirmity cured, just as failing eyesight, hearing and teeth can be corrected.

CALTHOS.—There is a great French remedy named CALTHOS, which restores men to vigor and strength in the organs of true manhood. It cures Varicocele and all weaknesses caused by excesses, overwork or indulgence in stimulants, and develops small or shrunken parts. It is the only discovery of Science which does this. There are many men in Congress, in the Stock Exchanges, in great business houses of large cities—professional men, farmers, laborers—who have had their powers of youth brought back by CALTHOS. You can tell them by the brightness of their eyes, by their erect carriage, by the vigorous, virile way they go about the duties of life.

CALTHOS is the discovery of the celebrated Paris physician, Prof. Jules Laborde. It is sold in America, Canada and Mexico, by The Von Mohl Co., of Cincinnati, Ohio, the largest importers of standard medicines in the United States, which is well known for its reliability and high standing in the profession.

This company never, under any circumstances, makes public the names of its patients, although thousands write every year expressing great joy at their recovery. All correspondence relating to the CALTHOS branch of their business is confidential and is kept separate and distinct from their general business.

GREATEST MONEY MAKER AND MONEY SAVER EVER SEEN: NEEDED IN EVERY HOUSE IN THE WORLD.

Hundreds of dollars are wasted every year in paying for repairs which could be done by you just as well as by the person you hire. "Yes," you will say, "I could do this work if I only had the tools." You have to hire the plumber or cobbler and pay him for his time while you stand around and look on, watching him do the work which you could do as well as he, but it is always that you have no tools. We have put together the best kit of tools for repairing which was ever seen, and we will sell the entire outfit for less than half the money for which you could buy it at any store. The outfit consists of forty-four first-class tools, as shown in the above cut, viz: 1 iron last for men's work; 1 iron last for boy's work; 1 iron last for women's work; 1 iron last for children's work; 1 iron stand for lasts; 1 shoehammer; 1 shoeknife; 1 peg awl handle; 1 peg awl; 1 wrench for peg awl handle; 1 sewing awl handle; 1 sewing awl; 1 stabbing awl handle; 1 stabbing awl; 1 bottle leather cement; 1 bottle rubber cement; 1 bunch bristles; 1 ball shoe thread; 1 ball shoe wax; 1 pkg. clinch nails, 4-8 in.; 1 pkg clinch nails 5-8 in.; 1 pkg. clinch nails, 6-8 in.; 1 pkg. heel nails; 4 prs. heel plates, assorted sizes; 6 harness needles; 1 harness and saw clamp; 1 box slotted rivets, assorted sizes; 1 rivet set for same; 1 harness and belt punch; 1 soldering iron, ready for use; 1 handle for same; 1 bar solder; 1 bar resin; 1 bottle soldering fluid; 1 copy directions for halfsoling, etc., 1 copy directions for soldering all securely packed, together with directions for use, in a neat case. These tools bought at a hardware store separately would cost between $7.00 and $9.00. You can repair boots and shoes, [illegible] and heel them, mend your harness or make a new one, mend all kinds of [illegible]ware, repair pumps, plumbing and similar work, and do all kinds of leather work about carriages, etc., as well as repair and mend rubber boots, rubbers, overshoes, and all kinds of rubber made articles. The clamp is used for mending harnesses and filing saws. Has a coil spring and is made of iron. You can easily save five times the cost of this outfit in six months and make a heap of money doing little repairs for your neighbors and others. "A stitch in time saves nine," and if you have these tools in your house you can make repairs and save a great deal of money which you would pay if you let a break go or hired a man to do your repairing work for you. Every one of these tools are full sized, practical, neat and cheap. It is the only complete outfit in the market and thousands have been sold in past years for $3.00 when the outfit contained but about half as many smaller articles to people living in the country and small towns as well as in the city." This repairing outfit, weighing 20 lbs. will be sent by freight complete as above described for only $2.50 which includes a 6 months' trial subscription to this paper.

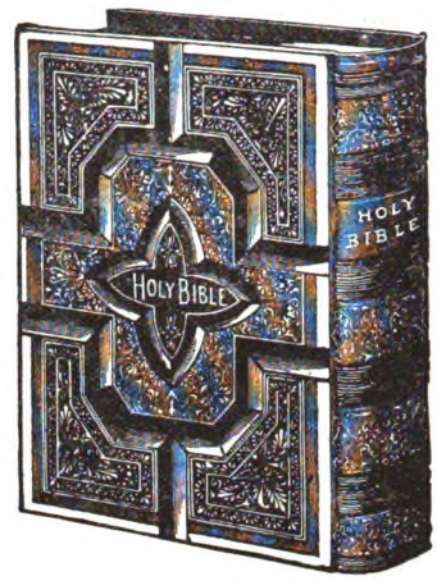
HA! HA! HA! FUN ALIVE!

The Comical Mirror.

A handsome convex mirror in a case suitable for carrying in the pocket. For many years the funniest and most laughable attraction in nearly every museum has been the large convex mirrors in which a person appears drawn out as long and narrow as a bean pole, or flattened down like a gridiron with a face as broad as a cellar door. This mirror produces the same effect as the large and expensive mirrors in the museums.



By holding the mirror in an upright position stout people look thin and in a horizontal position thin people look stout; anyone can recognize themselves at once, but their features are so distorted and their general appearance so changed that they cannot fail to have a good laugh over it. If you have a friend (lady or gentleman) who think they are a little better looking than anyone else, let them take a peep into the mirror and it will take them down a peg or two—either the "short and fat" view or the "long and slim" view are stunners and will cure the blues every time. Send for one it will afford you lots of fun.

GRAND OFFER TO YOU. Send us 12 cents and we will send this splendid literary monthly for the Home, three whole months on a trial subscription and one Comical Mirror, postpaid; for 27 cents we will send you the paper 3 months and three mirrors all paid; or, for only 76 cents we will send the paper a whole year and one dozen mirrors by express. ELECTRICITY IS LIFE.

THE GREAT HOME HEALER.

Pain Vanishes, Blooming Health Returns at the Touch of Science.

Read of this Modern Scientific Machine that Heals, Teaches and Amuses.

Electricity no longer the master but the servant of man, represents to us light, heat and force. By these three great powers everything on earth lives and electricity means life. This grand machine is a combined motor and dynamo and gives a perfect electric organization. Most interesting and instructive of the recent products of electrical science; teaches and instructs while it amuses, young and old alike. Scientific in construction and no student or ingenious boy should be without it. Perfectly harmless, but produces no end of fun, by giving shocks to circles and many harmless tricks. FOR A HOME CURER. Doctors know almost every known disease and pain yields readily to electrical currents. The cost of electric batteries as generally sold places them far beyond reach of any but the wealthy. This Electrical Machine has been produced by the latest and most improved machinery and at nominal cost as compared with the expensive batteries formerly sold at $8, $10 or $20 each. The great improvements in machinery enables us to produce this and to offer it to you for a mere trifle. See What Electricity is Used For. There is no disease of the nerves or any bodily pain which will not yield readily to electric currents. This wonderful machine utilizes the forces of nature; drives out Rheumatic Pains, Neuralgia and every species of blood and nerve disease; Cures Weakness of every kind and nature and restores youthful health and vigor. Works like a miracle for that worn out feeling and languor and despondency and strengthening nervous system with a direct (not alternating) current, large in volume but pleasant to take, no shock or irritation. Patent switch adjusts current to weakest child or strongest man. A valuable treatise accompanies every machine shipped. We now place nature's great restorative agent, Electricity, within the reach of every sufferer rich or poor.

A Wonderful Offer to All. This Electrical Machine is needed in every home and family. We will send one to any person who will send us $1.00, and 25 cents to pay all shipping charges besides sending our great home paper, COMFORT, subscription paid for one year. ($1.25 for everything.)

Men, Women and Things.

CONDUCTED BY JENNIE MELVENE DAVIS.

Helen Gould is an admirable type of balanced, self-contained, generous, American womanhood. Through the golden haze of the glamour her millions throw about her she stands out clearly and sharply, a practical, sensible, loyal, patriotic, American girl. Her wealth has not spelled self-indulgence to her but opportunity—opportunity to help the helpless, to comfort sick children, to aid the needy soldiers and to redeem the name of Gould from a synonym for mere greed of money. The name of Jay Gould was feared and hated from the powers of Wall Street to the dwellers in the far East side slums. He died and no tithe of his millions went for a charitable or philanthropical purpose. Four sons were left but they have not changed public opinion as to the Gould traits. George Gould married an actress, Edith Kingdon—his brother Howard has just sacrificed $5,000,000 by marrying the woman of his choice without the consent of his family. His wife, Kathryn Clemmons, was also an actress. Anna, the youngest daughter, made a brilliant society marriage and is spending her share of the Gould millions merrily with her French Count. Helen Gould is a simple, natural young woman—not at all "strong minded" but earnest and serious. She is not indifferent to the charm of dress, is interested in athletics, is a great reader and a sympathetic friend. From the time she left the schoolroom her name has been connected with charitable efforts. For a time this was looked upon simply as the fad of a society girl. Helen Gould entered the Woman's Law Class at the University of New York and graduated from it with high honors. In every way she has endeavored to fit herself to be a judicious almoner of the wealth at her command. It is not alone that she gives generously and freely of the fortune that is hers but she gives time, care, attention to the manner of giving. She gives herself first and the wealth that is hers, last. She has shrunk from any publicity in the matter, but at the outbreak of the war her rampant patriotism overcame all her shrinking from the public eye and she came forward with her instant offer to the Secretary of War of $100,000. From that time she has been prodigal of health, wealth and time in her devotion to the cause. She has personally visited the camps and hospitals. In her beautiful home at Irvington she has nursed many soldiers back to health. Here she gathered the needy women and paid them liberally to work for the soldiers. No woman who works every day for a livelihood has a busier life than this woman of millions. She has one woman secretary and each day brings its enormous mail connected with the various enterprises under her care. Helen Gould has redeemed the name she bears from the stain that an unscrupulous greed for gold has placed upon it, and the crippled child and the strong man dying for the flag see Helen Gould, not as the inheritor of wealth, but as a gracious, noble-minded woman, whose greatest fortune is in her own personality.

The Empress of China, who is the real power behind the "Dragon's Throne," is the strongest personal influence of the day whose personality is almost unknown. The seclusion that Chinese women of high rank maintain seems to hide this Empress who has stood between the threatening power of Russia on one hand and of England on the other, and who has preserved her life and her influence in the mystery of intrigue, assassination and rebellion that marks Oriental dynasties. Tuen, Empress-Dowager of China, was a slave girl in the Province of Hungary. Her master was Viceroy of the province and the little slave girl gained his favor by a beautiful New Year gift. When he asked how he should reward her she answered: "O wisest and best of men I would like to learn to read." This was an unheard of request in China but the Viceroy was kind and curious and asked the little slave girl why she wished to learn. "That I may be wise and therefore good and being both of these the better able to serve the Viceroy," answered the slave who was one day to be Empress. A silver casket was recently presented to her and within was a book inscribed "Scriptures for the Salvation of the World"—a present from the Christian women of China. In time the slave girl who could read, entered the household of the Emperor and then became Empress of the Flowery Kingdom. While comparatively little is known of her it is certain that she is a woman of strong character and of great ability. She seized the reins of power at a threatening crisis but the final outcome of her influence is yet problematical.

The capture of Omduram by Gen. Kitchener writes "finis" at the end of one of the most exciting and romantic chapters of modern history. It avenges the death of Gen. Gordon and the doom of Khartoom. In place of the victorious figure of the Mahdi we have the conquered Khalifa. Abdullahi Ibre Sayed Mahmud Khalifa el Mahdi is one of the most interesting figures of the age, representing as he does the last mighty convulsive effort of a lost cause. He has resisted the onward march of an aggressive civilization and over one hundred thousand square miles of territory he has ruled supreme. He presents a strange mixture of fanaticism and cold common sense, of tricky cunning and whole souled generosity, of utter ignorance and of trained diplomacy. He was the chief adviser of the Mahdi and it was the Khalifa who planned the campaign that resulted in the capture of Khartoom. The Mahdi urged his followers to put complete trust in his mainstay the Khalifi saying, "All those who believe in God and in me must also believe in him, and should any one notice anything apparently wrong in him they should attribute it to a mystery which they cannot understand and that therefore it must be right." The Khalifa showed a sense of fair play as keen as that of any Yankee and in his treatment of Slatin Pasha he showed a generous kindness even though he was not deceived by the subtilties of the white man. The Khalifa dresses in the most humble of garments and urges humility, sincerity and honesty upon all his followers. He taught his followers to ride fearlessly into battle urged on by the war cry "Fi shan Allah wa Rasulahu (For God and His Prophet)." Clothed in patchwork and rags with no other weapons than swords and spears they charged directly at troops armed with the modern murderous rifles. Crying "Allahu Aklar, Allahu Aklar (God is Great) they rode fearlessly to their death. The Khalifa forbids mourning for the dead who he says are assured of bliss if believers. This man of the desert has built a powerful empire out of a wild and barbarous race. For years he has held the Soudan against English power and held his wild followers through their religious belief. Scarcely able to read and write he has shown that intuitive knowledge of men and affairs that always marks a great leader. He has taught his followers doctrines as austere as those of the early Puritans. Bad language was punished with eighty lashes of the whip, dancing and playing were discouraged. He has ruled autocratically and absolutely a people as little susceptible of control as the whirlwind. In one of his exhortations he preaches a doctrine of absolutism that rings strangely in the democratic nineteenth century, "Obey my orders and the joys of Paradise will be yours. Those who are disobedient and do not take heed to my words are lost, for them, as for the disbeliever, eternal damnation and hell fire are prepared." This is the man whom Gen. Kitchener has conquered.

Viceroy of India! It is a proud position and a proud title, second in rank in the British Empire. It is safe to say, however, that the Right Honorable George Nathaniel Curzon will bear himself in a manner that will seem to patronize even this great position. His friends call this air "a quiet consciousness of his own sufficiency," while his enemies consider it the superciliousself-sufficiency of youthful success. Whatever it may be, it is certain that the life of George Curzon has been singularly successful. He has been constantly in the public eye for the past ten years. He is a University bred man who carried off two prizes at Oxford and a fellowship at All Souls. He entered political life when he won the seat in Parliament from Southport—a seat he has held ever since. No Viceroy of India with the exception of Lord Lawrence has known so much of the country. He knows so much that he may have much to unlearn. All his holidays and vacations have been spent in travel in Asiatic Russia, India, Persia and the land that lies "east of Suez." In the last Conservative government he was Under Secretary for India and under Lord Salisbury he is Under Secretary for foreign affairs. He is an advocate of the "forward policy" on the northwest frontier. He has encountered much advance criticism on account of the unchecked advance of Russia in China, and his defense of the Salisbury administration of foreign affairs has done much in the last year to give him a brilliant Parliamentary record. George Curzon has the genius for hard work and united with it an extreme readiness of speech that is akin to eloquence. His published letters to the London Times fill two large volumes and contain an immense quantity of definite data in regard to the East. His personal knowledge of the Northwest frontier was gained upon horseback and so minute is it that he was the only member of Parliament who could correct the error in the speech of a member who did not know the location of the Kohat pass. George Curzon can boast of the claims of long descent, for although his father is a poor country parson, he is fourth Baron Scarsdale and his family dates back eight hundred years. The title of Baron Curzon of Kedleston has just been conferred upon the new Viceroy. The Viceroy of India resides in Calcutta in a rent free palace with horses, coaches and servants also furnished by a liberal government. His salary is over $7000 a month but the larger part of this sum must be spent in entertaining in a gorgeous style, for the Orientals love display and the Viceroy must impress them with the magnificence of the British Empire.

"Ask me not here to turn a careless rhyme. It ill would suit the solemn place and hour, When Haddo's Lord bears to a distant clime The Gordon conscience backed by Britain's power." These are the lines which our Secretary of State, Col. John Hay wrote in the visitors' book of Haddo House just before its owner, Lord Aberdeen, sailed to become Governor-General of Canada. After five successful years, Lord Aberdeen terminated his official residence during the month of November. Lord Aberdeen stands in the foremost ranks of England's peers by virtue of his personality and his rank. His brother, the sixth Lord Aberdeen, threw aside his position and worked for years as an ordinary seaman. His wild adventurous life ended as strangely as it had proceeded. The sea claimed its own, and the younger brother became Lord Aberdeen. His family traces far back to the days of Richard the Lion Hearted. It has numbered great men and statesmen in its lists from Lord Aberdeen the loved Prime Minister of Victoria's young queenhood to the scholarly and practical statesman who just resigned the rule of "Our Lady of the Snows." Lord Aberdeen has just passed the half century mark although his fondness for physical exercise has kept him singularly youthful. He is a skilled rifle shot. He identified himself with the Liberal party and when the Gladstone ministry of 1886 was formed Lord Aberdeen was asked to become Viceroy of Ireland. He accepted this trying honor and during his brief rule succeeded in establishing most friendly relations between himself and the Irish people. For the first time in the history of English rule in Ireland the Lord Mayor of Dublin and the Viceroy of Ireland were on friendly terms. Lord Aberdeen is a practical locomotive engineer. As a schoolboy he spent much time on the engine of a local railway and finally mastered all the details from the duties of the fireman to those of the engineer. This knowledge gave him his first start in public life. The question of a select committee on railroad matters came up in the House of Lords and Lord Aberdeen made his first speech relative to this subject. The expert knowledge that he displayed gained him the attention of the House and an important place on the committee when it was finally named. The celebrated Plimpsoll bill on the sending to sea of ships that endangered seamen's lives led to the establishing of a Commission and Lord Aberdeen was made Chairman. He reconciled the warring elements there represented and won the esteem and admiration of all by his courteous but unwavering decisions. Lord Aberdeen has a wide interest in philanthropic affairs and a keenly intelligent grasp of social and political problems of the day. He has given Canada a wise administration and returns to his Scottish home with the love and esteem of the great dependency over which he has ruled. Lord Aberdeen is exceedingly democratic in his tendencies. His affability and courtesy are proverbial and his genial nature almost leads careless observers to forget the strong positive character behind this seeming disregard of the conventionalities of his rank. Haddo House in Scotland is the home of the Aberdeens but they also possess local "habitations" at Vernon in British Columbia, in Grosvenor Square, London, and at the suburb of Dollis Hill. They entertain largely and the visitors' book at Haddo House has many other interesting facts and fancies besides the one with which Col. Hay gave them a "God-speed" in their coming to Canada.

"PAPA, will you take me as an apprentice? I want to learn to set type."

Mr. Horace Staples, head of the Boston publishing firm of Staples and Stilton, looked up in surprise from the morning paper he was reading, at the tall, graceful, serious-eyed girl who stood before him; then he broke into a puzzled laugh.

"Bless my soul, Theo, what in the world do you mean?" he exclaimed.

"Just what I say, papa, I want to be a printer. I have been thinking about it seriously for a week, and I have decided to have that sweet-looking woman who works at the case near the desk in the upper room to teach me, if she will."

"Upon my word, Theo, you grow odder and odder," said her father looking at her curiously. "Why don't you act sensibly like your sisters and not annoy us all by breaking out into such unexpected fads."

The girl stood with her head thrown slightly back, her hands clasped behind her, a soft pink flush on her fair face and a far away look in her large, dreamy, brown eyes as she replied.

"A great many things have set me to thinking lately papa. I know, though you have not said much, that your business is not as prosperous as you would like it to be, or you wouldn't have taken a partner lately. And you have three unmarried girls on your hands. I am twenty-three and am not so likely to marry as Rose and Anna. My brothers don't take kindly to the publishing business, and I know I should like it, and I thought I might begin with type-setting and learn all branches so that in time I may be of assistance to you. Besides, I want to know how life looks from the point of view of the common workman. I hate the useless life I am forced to lead. I just long to do something."

And now her eyes sought his with a tense imperative look that he had come to know well as implying a mood it was useless to argue against. But though he was touched by the tender, unexpected thoughtfulness evinced by her reference to his business, yet he made one more attempt to move her.

"If it's a career you're after, Theo, why don't you take the good the gods offer, marry Mr. Bernard, and enter upon a career that any other girl in your set would glory in? He is rich, of the bluest blood, and as his wife you could sway society to your liking."

Theo's beautifully curved lips curled with contempt.

"Mr. Bernard! you would like me to be chained to a Golden Calf rather than see me living a true life of helpful beneficence! Oh, papa, if his blood is 'blue' it must be because it has been frozen to the point of blueness. Sway society through that soulless animal! I'd rather marry your stable-boy. No, I must meet life face to face. If you won't let me go into your establishment, then I shall apply somewhere else."

"Theo, you try me so," her father cried, "suppose I yield, what would your sisters say, what would my employes say, what would society say?"

The gold-crowned head gave a little toss, the Grecian nostrils slightly quivered, a defiant smile crept into lips and eyes.

"Why, papa," she said. "What can they say but that I'm the 'odd one' of the family? Do let me live up to my reputation."

"Well, go along and talk it over with your mother, child," said Mr. Staples resignedly returning to his paper, "and I'll see about it."

Yes, Theodora Staples was and had been from childhood decidedly "odd." Her two brothers older than herself, and two younger sisters comprised the family. The young men had studied respectively medicine and law and were now slowly getting into practice. Their sisters Rose and Anna, were two rather pretty lively girls of twenty and eighteen. All these went along in the recognized lines of the society in which they moved. With Theodora, the eldest daughter and beauty of the family it was decidedly different. In her childhood she exhibited queer traits of character. She was given to going away by herself, sitting for hours in a state of dreamy reverie, with a happy smile on her lips and a far away look in her large eyes. She resented interruption at such times and afterwards told her parents strange fairy-like tales of what she had seen and heard. But after she had been punished several times for this inclination to romancing, she no longer indulged her imagination in this way, at least there was no further recital of her visions. She was apt too, to stop in the midst of her play, turn her head in a direction where there was no person visible, as though listening, then make some irrelevant remark; but this passed away with her childhood, and the fears for her sanity entertained by her worried parents partly wore away also, since in her bright moods no one could be more charming or reasonable.

But all through her childhood, and even since attaining maturity, she was inclined to do and say the most unexpected things. Her brothers were seriously annoyed by this and her sisters more often amused. "Oh, it's only one of Theo's oddities!" her lively sister Rose would explain to some puzzled visitor. "She's the salt that savors the commonplace of our lives." To her father she was a puzzle, but to her invalid mother she was a comfort and joy. Who brought so much sunshine into the sick room as Theo? Whose step was so soft, whose hand so deft, whose presence made the evenings when Mr. Staples was deep in business problems, and her younger daughters absent at party or theater, times of sacred soul communion, reading to her from Emerson, the Brownings and others, or from some wise magazine essayist bits of gold from mints of truth, which led to long conversations between mother and daughter that drew them both into higher intellectual and spiritual altitudes, albeit she could not always follow Theo's daring leadership into rare atmospheres.

One of the oddities which gave most offense to her brothers, which even worried her mother, and against which her sisters most strongly protested, was the utter unreasonableness as well as strength of her attractions and antipathies for persons. And indeed it was not pleasant for her brothers when they brought home a gentleman friend whom they highly honored, to find his introduction to their beautiful sister met on her part with cool hauteur; or at parties given in their own home to find Theo made conspicuous by her absence, simply because she "could not endure" the presence of some of the invited guests. When her father gave a dinner party it was not always that he could prevail upon his eldest daughter to take her invalid mother's place at the table. Rose had of late come to be the one relied upon to do the honors of such occasions. Even when traveling she was very likely to change her seat unceremoniously because it made her unhappy to be in near proximity to often personally unknown fellow travelers. On the other hand she would evince a strong attachment to some servant or dependent of the family; while often she would enter into conversation with strangers who took her fancy on street car or railway. Still there was always a certain dignity in all she said and did, which repelled familiarity on the part of those she liked and which prevented those with whom she had no affiliation from quite hating her.

She was now twenty-three and strangely, so her family thought, so far had shown no inclination to listen favorably to any one of the many eligible young men who would fain have wooed her favor. Despite the striking beauty and the pleasing manners which became her so well when in the mood, there was no trace of coquetry or approach to flirtation about her. She became ice at once with each would-be wooer so soon as words or actions intimated his hope.

And now here she was in one of her perverse moods demanding permission to learn a trade, and such a dirty trade! But her father knew from many earlier experiences with this odd child of his that she would never rest satisfied until she had tried this new experiment, as their family doctor, when consulted as to her strange, childish freaks, had warned the parents to beware of too strongly crossing the will of this wayward one, with dark hints of possible insanity if her whims were opposed. But what a trial such oddity was in a girl so lovely and generally so lovable!

As foreseen, Theo had her way, and a few weeks later found her promoted to a case of her own in one of the rooms where mainly women printers were employed. She had really shown remarkable aptness in learning to set type, and as the quiet widow whom she had chosen as her teacher informed her, gave promise of becoming an expert if she kept at it long enough. She had taken to it with real enthusiasm and she made a striking picture dressed in a high-necked apron of dark stuff to protect her black dress, her cheeks flushed with interest, and a pretty frown between her eyebrows as she bent over the stick of type in her hand while she consulted with rapid glance the next word in the copy. At least so thought Mr. Ambrose Stilton, recently taken into the house as a partner, but whom Theo had not met before her type-setting mania had taken possession of her.

But Theo had entered upon this experiment with a serious purpose in view. She wanted really to know the lives of working girls, with a hope to be of help to them. So at the noon hour, and at other leisure times, she cultivated the acquaintance of such girls as seemed most interesting to her, leading them to talk of themselves until she won from them a most affectionate yet respectful place in their hearts.

All unsuspected by herself she had also won the passionate admiration of her father's partner. But Ambrose Stilton was too wise to commit himself in any way until he felt somewhat sure of his ground, especially with one who had the reputation of "the odd one." That oddity in her only made her all the more attractive to the very strong willed young man who delighted in overcoming obstacles of whatsoever nature.

In his official capacity he had opportunities for addressing her which otherwise would not have been possible. As for Theo, she decided at once that Mr. Stilton was one of her antipathies, and when her father introduced her she greeted him in her haughtiest manner, with a little nod of indifference. But this repulsion gradually disappeared and she soon found him rather agreeable.

Ambrose Stilton was tall, broad-shouldered, a good figure, suave, alert and wide awake in manner, dark skinned almost as a Spaniard, with close cropped black hair, shining black eyes, Roman nose and well-shaped mouth, half concealed by a carefully trimmed mustache. He was a man whom most girls would think very attractive, but a student of physiognomy would have detected about the mouth hard and cruel lines, inflexible strength of will in the curves of the jaws, shifty, treacherous lights in the piercing eyes. Something of this Theo felt and she avoided much conversation outside of business matters.

Her father had taken her all over the establishment when she first entered. On the floor below the one where she worked, the book printing was done, presided over by a young foreman, Oliver Norman, whose quiet dignity of manner, dark blue melancholy eyes and Greek profile had arrested Theo's attention as, at her father's desire he explained some of the working of the machinery. He seemed about twenty-five.

"Isn't he rather young, papa," asked Theo, as they proceeded to other portions of the building, "to have charge of so many people, many of them older than himself?"

"Yes," replied her father, "he does seem young, but he is quite a genius in his way. He comes of a family that have seen 'better days,' as the saying is, and when he was obliged to leave college at seventeen, he chose to learn the printer's trade. He went into it with enthusiasm too. There isn't any part of the printing and publishing business which he doesn't understand, so that he is really more proficient than most men twice his age. He has also considerable mechanical skill. He is at work now on an invention which he thinks will be a great improvement in one part of our press machinery. I have partitioned off a corner in the office on that floor where he can work at odd times on his model. If it's what he represents, it may bring him a pretty income when he gets it patented."

"Oh, papa," cried the deeply interested Theo, "why in the world didn't you take him into partnership instead of Mr. Stilton?"

"Because, my dear, the business needed money and push more than brains or knowledge of the business. I have secured both in Mr. Stilton, who would not be able to fill Norman's place in the direct management of such a happy-go-lucky set of printers as we have. For all his quiet way Norman gets more work out of them than any man we have ever had in his place."

Though Oliver Norman's business brought him frequently into the department where Theo worked, he never seemed to note her presence nor that of any of the working women save as workers, and it was two months after her entrance upon her new life before he spoke to her. It came about in this way.

Theo's own individuality was, to herself, a profound mystery. With the exception of her mother the members of her family were prosaic, "correct" personalities. Her own repressed self which broke forth ever and anon into emphatic expressions, seemed so often to perplex or horrify her relatives, that she unceasingly wondered why she was so different from them. But her knowledge that the thoughts she longed to share with others in regard to the mysteries of being, would be met with troubled stares and uncomprehending replies, had caused her to seek to conceal her real self more and more as she grew older.

Staples & Stilton, in addition to book publishing, did the printing for various periodicals. In this department Theo's first work was done, and one day she became deeply interested in some copy given her for one of these which dealt with some of the questions which had so haunted her mind; its title was "Psychic Mysteries," and in it she found allusion to many of the so-called illusions which had been hers in childhood and to others that still worried her at times. It was delightful to know that others beside herself had had the same experiences, the causes of which the writer seemed desirous of solving; explaining the various theories offered by the society for Psychical Research and adding a mere hint of his own. The last two or three pages had been given to another girl, but so soon as the article was complete she sought out the "galleys" containing it, and was deeply surprised to find there the name "Oliver Norman." She recalled that her father had mentioned the fact of his contributing occasional articles to journals and she wondered much if this article was written by him.

The next day as he passed she felt a strong impulse to speak to him, but while she restrained herself from actually doing so, her imperious inner self called instinctively, though silently, "Oliver Norman! Oliver Norman! speak to me!"

As he drew near his pace involuntarily slackened, he turned toward her with a puzzled look, passed onward a step or two, then came to her side.

"Excuse me Miss Staples," he stammered. "Did you speak to me?"

Theo blushed furiously as she raised her serious brown eyes to the earnest sea-blue pair gazing down upon her.

"No, Mr. Norman," she replied, "I did not speak your name but I was thinking it very strongly and wishing much to ask you a question. Yesterday I was setting up an article for the Phoenix Magazine which interested me so much that I read it all after it was in proof. The name signed to it was yours, and I would like to be sure that you are the writer of "Psychic Mysteries."

His eyes brightened. "Oh, are you interested in that question, Miss Staples? I am so glad to hear it. Yes, I wrote the article but I did not venture to express my own views very strongly. Have you made a special study of it, may I ask?"

"Oh, dear, no," confessed Theo, feeling now very much at her ease, "I don't know anything about these theories you write of—I only know that they harmonize with certain facts of my own existence which have puzzled me and chagrined my relatives. I long to know more of this subject Mr. Norman, and will be greatly obliged to you to set me on the right track to gain knowledge on it."

"Why, Miss Staples, it was my own few experiences that set me to thinking on the subject. I will make out a list of books by writers new and old which you will find serviceable. I am now writing a book myself on the problems of telepathy and clairvoyance and I would be profoundly obliged if some*time you* would be good enough to tell me of some of your experiences; it would be so helpful to me."

"What! to put into a book? I couldn't do that you know," declared Theo.

"Not if your personality were concealed? and to aid in the discovery of the true laws which govern Mind, Spirit, the intelligence of the universe—that which we hardly yet know how to name?" he exclaimed with enthusiasm. Then suddenly checking himself—"O, pardon me Miss Staples, it was ridiculous and impertinent in me to ask you. Do please forgive me!"

Theo smiled charmingly.

"I understand," she said, "and to prove to you that you are forgiven, I will tell you now one phase of my experience. I seem to know instantly with most persons I meet for the first time, whether I can trust to their intuitions to understand me when I speak to them frankly, and of my own inmost self, without attempting to conform to the standards of conventionality. To those towards whom I take an instant antipathy I am a sealed book. Other types alternately win and repel me. Still others I feel an absolute indifference toward; they bore but do not cause antagonism. Now, I felt I could trust you as one of the first mentioned. Otherwise I would not have spoken to you of the peculiarities which make me the odd one in my family. Your article offered me the first clue to the mysteries of my own mind, and I could not help saying what I did!"

His eyes sought hers frankly, sympathetically, comprehendingly.

"I sometimes think," he said gently, "that if we could all act directly from such intuitions, we should really make fewer mistakes than we do when guided by the formal laws of society, in our social intercourse with each other. I am sure your intuitive knowledge makes it unnecessary for me to say that your words will not be repeated. May I bring you the list of books to-morrow?"

"If you will be so kind," and she turned hastily to her half-filled stick and neglected copy.

This was the beginning of a new life of thought for Theo. She procured the books suggested by Norman. In these she found reported cases analogous to her own childish experiences; these she read to her parents who thus became interested in the subject, and at Mr. Staples' suggestion Oliver Norman was invited to the house to explain his theories as to thought transference, etc., to them. This led to further calls when a few intimate friends were invited to be present and experiments were made in various directions of Psychical phenomena. Rose and Anna and some of their young friends thought it great fun at first; especially when they found it possible occasionally to guess correctly the thought of others present. But their enthusiasm died out, and soon the experiments were only pursued by Theo and Mr. Norman, who found themselves capable of reading each other's thoughts when definite things were clearly fixed in one mind and the other was in receptive mood.

So, although Norman never called at her house unless he was requested to do so for some experiment, yet a sort of intimacy was established between Theo and himself—an intimacy which was strengthened by Norman's services in her lately begun work among working women. She had, with the help of some of the women printers in her father's employ, started a Working-Women's Club for the benefit of all who earned their living by daily labor. In this club she would only accept the office of secretary, as that called for real service. The president's office was filled by one of the brightest members, the forewoman of a cloak-making establishment. As Norman had considerable experience in the formation of societies of working men, he was glad to be of use in suggesting forms for constitution, bylaws, resolutions, etc., and advising as to the study of parliamentary forms in conducting their meetings.

At first Mr. Staples had looked with suspicious disfavor upon Theo's friendliness toward Oliver Norman, but after spending two or three evenings with them, and observing Theo's unconscious attitude of social superiority, and Norman's evident absorption in his finely spun theories, he ceased to be alarmed.

The Blaze of the Vulture's Eye.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT BY HARRIET W. SEAVER.

WAS a girl eighteen years old then, just home from school, waiting around (all the villagers said) for my step-father to die and leave to me, the only relative,—his estate and fortune which amounted to a goodly sum in those days.

Some said I could not get along agreeably with my step-father, others went even further, explaining, as a cause for our disagreement, that I had a love affair while away at school which he was trying to break up—but that's another story. The facts were, we were not congenial, as is too frequently the case, and during my three years' absence on the continent, he had made the acquaintance of a young aristocrat of an adjoining estate and had resolved, when I had completed my studies, we should marry, which was for many reasons distasteful to me. So during my unfrequent visits home there was continual argument and very rarely I returned to school without some severe and even threatening talk which resulted in a vow that I should never go home again. However, as each vacation came I had forgotten (or tried to forget) the previous storms, and was only too glad to return again to the quiet restful country existence.

On this especial afternoon a ragged, dirty-looking individual shambled up the avenue and being the only one in sight, he asked me for a drink of water; after having made way with half of it he began to unload from his shoulders a huge bundle and proceeded as all peddlers do to exhibit his wares. Though I had nothing in particular to do, I did not want to be bothered with examining his array of useless trinkets and while I was shaking my head and expostulating I noticed he dropped accidently into the half glass of water, what appeared to be a smooth, round greyish colored stone, and the next moment the whole tumbler was illumined with a brilliant red light.

Immediately I inquired what sort of a thing it was, but he knew scarcely more about it than did I, except that a few months before, when he was a minor servant in the German court, one of the maids had said it was some little heir-loom and had given it to him, saying "as long as this remains as it is you will know I am constant."

The peddler was as amazed as I at the sudden change in the stone—and believing then in the unconstancy of his love, he angrily threw it into the hedge and muttering to himself picked up his traps and went his way.

A few days later father found the little thing and after amusing ourselves with watching it blaze for awhile he put it into his pocket and the incident entirely slipped my memory, until a short time after it was brought to my mind, by this article in one of our papers:

"Body of a man, probably a German peddler found on the road between A— and B—. Death due to heart failure."

Sultry August passed and then September much in the same way as all my vacations went. I was either left entirely to myself or else continually nagged and stormed at by my poor gouty old father, and the day set for my return to school was hailed with delight. The morning came at last, my trunk was already on its way to the little stage depot. I was only waiting for my father to come down to his breakfast and have the farcical, though necessary ceremony of leave taking over, when all at once the man who had gone to waken him came crying through the corridor, "The Master is dead! The Master is dead," and true enough it was. I hastened to his room dazed by this startling news, and there he lay as though in a profound slumber. Physicians were summoned but all in vain, and "heart failure" was pronounced the cause.

Even the most disliked relative or connection, have we only one, becomes in a way dear to us when we feel we have lost our last family tie, and for one brief moment I shed the truest tears of remorse and shame that I could not undo many things of the past. My prospective return to the school was indefinitely postponed. After the funeral the property had to be settled, and then it was my severest trial came. This young neighbor who had become the boon companion of my father asked to have his body exhumed and examined, and for reasons which I never knew, the body was removed and the medical examiner pronounced it a case of slow poisoning. As he was not addicted to any opiate habit, tobacco smoking or any thing of that sort, I could not believe but what it was, as they had first said, simply heart failure, and I was the more stunned with the intelligence that I was under arrest for his murder!

Those days are shrouded in such gloom, I remember nothing except that there was insufficient evidence to convict me, while circumstances were against me; I was acquitted, though hundreds of fingers pointed at me in shame and disgust as I left my home, with our old housekeeper, to travel, perchance forget.

Two years after—in one of the gardens of Vienna, I overheard a familiar story a man was telling for the amusement of a few chance acquaintances. He mentioned my stepfather's name, then mine, and as he concluded, he drew a tumbler of water toward him and dropped into it what sounded like a pebble, adding: "This the codger carried in his pocket and gave to me only the day before he died, and, it developed such peculiar phenomena that until recently for fear of losing it I have kept it locked in my chest, in hopes some day to find out what it is." And turning slightly I saw my father's former companion, and in the glass, before the group of listeners, was the same red glare which so angered the peddler that summer afternoon. I drew my veil closer and prepared to withdraw, when the young man speaking apparently fainted. Restoratives were administered to no avail, and before a doctor could reach him his pulse had stopped.

In the excitement of caring for him, all else was forgotten, and seizing the opportunity I took the stone from the glass and hurried to the street. It did seem as though nothing but death had been the lot of all who had kept the little stone-like trinket and I began to fear there was something uncanny in its makeup. So I called a cab and drove to the nearest chemical laboratory where an eminent chemist, after examining it a moment, exclaimed wildly, "Marvelous! and have you not read in German folk-lore of 'the Blaze of the Vulture's Eye?' "

Then laying the eye on the window he proceeded to tell me that over a hundred years ago in Vienna there lived an alchemist, who for some wrong done him by the Emperor sought revenge. The vulture's eye was known to be extremely absorbent, so taking the eye balls from fifty or more of these birds, he soaked them for years in some mixture he secretly compounded, which if kept in continued contact with the body was a most deadly poison. These he gave as talismans to the Royal Household proving their inert power by showing the effect of water at a certain temperature poured over them. (The water caused a slight chemical reaction). He moreover stipulated that they must be worn constantly in order to have the desired effect.

The heat of the body caused the chemicals absorbed by the eye to emit a poisonous gas which penetrated the entire system, and within two months all who wore these trinkets were dead.

The cause was investigated, the chemist put to death by his own method, and the "talismans" were all——and just at that moment came a flash and a blaze as a wee ray of the warm noon sun (shining on the sill where the eye had been carelessly laid for the moment), had caused the final chemical re-action, and the Vulture's eye blazed for the last time.

THE NEW ISSUE IN TEMPERANCE.

"WHISKEY MEDICINES."

THE VOICE,

The Leading Temperance Paper, Sounds the Call to a New Crusade in the Following Article.

"ANOTHER HEAD ON THE HYDRA."

"It is time attention was drawn to a form of alcoholic traffic that seems to have been overlooked by those engaged in the crusade against the rum power. If, as is believed and taught, alcohol is most dangerous when it fights in ambush, if it is most to be dreaded when it finds its first entrance to the system in the pleasant sauces and dishes of the home, then the form of alcoholic traffic in question is doubly dangerous, for it comes in the guise of medicine and attacks a system prepared by weakness to easily surrender to the assault. In many which are largely consumed throughout the country, by all classes of people, there is a percentage of alcohol which puts them on a level with beer, rum, and whiskey as intoxicants. It is the smallness only of the dose prescribed which prevents a prompt recognition of the intoxicating effects of these so-called medicines by those who use them.

"It is safe to affirm that they are

MEDICINES IN NAME ONLY.

Their chief value lies in their alcoholic effect as a stimulant. In fact, those who know, attribute the benefits ascribed to this class of medicines wholly to the stimulative effect of the alcohol they contain. They are used largely by persons not in the habit of drinking liquors, and the little dose taken three or four times a day is as stimulating to these people as his regular 'finger' of 'bitters' is to the regular liquor drinker.

WHAT CAN BE DONE?

"What ought to be done at least is to compel every patent-medicine manufacturer to put on the wrapper of his bottle the quantity of alcohol it contains. That would at least leave people to exercise their own judgments. More than that, no paper truly interested in temperance reform should print the advertisement of any alcoholic medicine. It should be the duty of every temperance organization and branch in the country to look into this question, agitate it, and deal with the facts just as earnestly and as honestly as other facts have been dealt with."

Appreciating the gravity of the issue raised by the strong statement of facts made in the foregoing article, we wish to call general attention to the fact that Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription contain

NO ALCOHOL, NO WHISKEY, NO INTOXICANT OF ANY KIND.

These medicines are equally free from opium and other narcotics.

They are in the strictest meaning of the words, temperance medicines. Of no other medicine, put up especially for woman's use can it be truthfully affirmed, as of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, that it contains neither alcohol nor opium or other narcotic in any form.

While the negative features of Dr. Pierce's medicines may only interest some of the readers of this article, the positive features of these medicines must be of interest to every one. The great value of "Golden Medical Discovery" in the cure of diseased or deranged conditions of the stomach and digestive and nutritive organs is testified to by tens of thousands who have found health and healing in this great remedy. The "Discovery" increases the action of the blood making glands, and by curing the diseases which corrupt and cripple the stomach and digestive and nutritive organs, it enables a full and pure supply of blood to be sent to every part of the body.

WOMEN KNOW ITS WORTH.

Women who are always appreciative of benefits, have been especially appreciative of the benefits following the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Its wonderful cures of irregularities, inflammations, ulcerations, and female troubles, have caused women to name it, "that God-send to women." It is entitled to wear the "blue ribbon" of merit as well as the blue ribbon of temperance.

THE BIBLE OF THE BODY.

Perhaps no greater gift was ever offered than the People's Common Sense Medical Adviser. It contains 1008 pages, and has over 700 illustrations, and is the life work of its author, Dr. R. V. Pierce, chief consulting physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y. This book has been well called "The Bible of the Body." It is to the body what the Bible is to the soul, "a lamp unto the feet and a light unto the path." It deals with the great questions of physical life so simply that all may understand and so purely that it is essentially the one medical work for the home library. The book is published in two forms, one bound in paper-covers, and the other in strong cloth binding. Send 21 one-cent stamps for the paper edition to cover expense of mailing only, or 31 stamps for the cloth bound edition. A CLOSE CALL.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT BY GUY E. MITCHELL.

Copyright, 1899, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher.

WHILE lounging on my couch late one night in Nicaragua, smoking a last few whiffs before going to bed, I was roused into action by hearing a terrific squealing in the pig pen a short distance back of the ranch house, followed by a deep-toned roar and some lively shouting in Spanish. I grabbed my heavy shotgun loaded with slugs and ran out, but was too late by far for a shot, as his majesty, the jaguar, was by that time several hundred yards away. The pigs, however, were safe. Fortunately for them Alvarez was just stirring up the embers of his camp-fire preparatory to roasting a couple of bananas for a light bedtime lunch, when his keen eye caught the dark form of the jaguar as he slipped along to the pig pen, and snatching up a glowing ember, he rushed out there just as the jaguar was gathering for a spring into the pen and the pigs were screaming with fright.

I was making a hunting visit of a couple of months at Senor Montigo's banana plantation on the Escondido River, Nicaragua, and as I had been unable thus far to bag a jaguar, I determined to make a great effort in the morning to capture this one's skin. It had rained heavily during the forenoon; the weather promised fair for the morrow, but then one may always expect to get soaked along the Central American coast.

By daylight Alvarez, more eager than myself, and I were on the broad trail of the jaguar, his big footprints showing up plainly in the soft mud where he had jumped away from the pig pen, leading along the edge of the plantation, in and out among the bananas. We did not expect to find him very soon, but about a mile back of the plantation in the depths of the tropical forest his tracks merged in with those of hundreds of wild hogs, or peccary. These latter had been eating the palm nuts and their hoof tracks literally covered every inch of the ground. We searched very carefully but could find no other trail of the big cat than the one leading in among the peccary. At last Alvarez took a wide circuit around the spot where we had been hunting, and this time found the big tracks leading away, clear and distinct. I started forward keenly but the Nicaraguan declared that the tracks were not very fresh and must belong to another jaguar; yet he was sure they were the same footprints we had followed from the pig pen. There the tracks were, however, plainly before me, and I followed them along without paying much attention to Alvarez's speculations. I soon found them trending out toward the river, on which the ranch house was located.

"Well!" I thought, "that cat is just laying around here, bound to get those pigs whether or no; and with all these wild hogs around here too."

In one place the trail led over a stream. The stream itself was small, but during the heavy rainy season it had cut out a channel between banks twenty feet apart. This the jaguar had cleared at a bound—a magnificent leap.

"This he-jaguar," declared Alvarez. "I think bad. Look here. Sharpen his claws on tree; tear bark."

"He was evidently hungry last night to try and steal the pigs so close to the house," I replied.

At last the trail struck the river, though a mile or more from the ranch house, and then proceeded along its banks, directly for the house, traveling in a well-worn path used by the fruit cutters. It was only a little past noon and I marvelled that the jaguar should come so near the house with the men working around, in broad daylight, but I walked along rapidly with my gun at full cock, expecting every minute to come face to face with a pair of glaring eye-balls and a great tawny skin, spotted with black. After I had traversed about half the distance to the house the Nicaraguan, who was behind me and seemed to have lost all interest in the hunt, said coolly:

"What you hurry home for? You hungry? This last night's track. I told you I knew this not fresh track."

Still half afraid to take my eyes from before me, I turned around to look at the man and then realized that we had been, ever since leaving the peccary tracks, following the old trail of the jaguar of the night before as he approached the ranch for his raid on the pig pen. To say that I was disgusted would be mild. I let the hammer of my gun down with a snap that almost exploded the cartridge, and walked along sullenly, picturing the game that would be made of me by Thurman and the others in the house, the former having refused in the morning to go on any "wild goose chase after jaguars," which he said never were around when you were ready to shoot them. It did not even arouse my admiration to see where the animal had jumped another stream not very far from the house, apparently alighting on the other side as lightly as a feather. The tracks led past the house and directly for the pig pen, but I had no further interest in them and was just entering the porchway and about to stand my gun up in unutterable disgust, when I heard a loud report a short way back of us.

"There's that lazy Thurman," I thought, "out shooting birds. I hope he kills something. I feel like killing something or some one myself."

In a few minutes in came Thurman covered with sweat and excitement.

"Hi there! you and Alvarez, come out here with me. I've shot something I want to show you. He's a bird."

"Well I supposed it was a bird when I heard your gun go off. Why didn't you bring it in?"

"Well there's something to show you about it. Come on both of you. Did you kill any jaguars?"

"No," I answered fiercely.

We followed him along a few yards from the ranch-house to a point where he had struck the creek across which the jaguar had made the leap, thus meeting our trail we had just traversed and I had trailed the jaguar right up to my starting point of the morning, when there near the bank of the creek, lay a great dark body stretched out motionless, an immense dead jaguar.

"How's that?" Thurman said modestly. "I only had one load in my gun, too."

"Whew! Bully for you, old man!" I cried, forgetting my resentment and disgust at sight of the noble game, yet wishing too it had been brought down by my own shot. "But this beats all. Why, we came along here not fifteen minutes ago."

"We lucky," Alvarez said quietly. "That brute trail us instead we trail him. Good thing we walk fast along here; beat him in. He catch us, make spring. He hungry; look how lean."

"Well," Thurman said, "I had an exciting time of it and he came pretty near getting all my nerve, if not my skin. I started out up the creek a few minutes ago with my shot gun, when you passed and so did not call to you for fear of scaring it. You had hardly gone by when I saw through a little glade in the brush this fellow loping along on your trail and cutting the air with sweeps of his tail. He evidently suspected something for he stopped an instant and gave me time to sling out my shells containing bird shot and jam in a couple of brass shells loaded with four and a half drachms of powder and big slugs. The stream lay between me and the jaguar, and just as I snapped the breech of my gun shut he came out on the bank and saw me. He looked as big as a house and his eyes glared at me horribly but I had a bead on him and as he paused I pulled the trigger. Nothing but a snap resulted and then I remembered that these shells had been wet. The beast gave a toss of his head and crouching low, sprang out into the air toward me. I was kneeling about twenty feet from the bank and it seemed as he came flying through the air as though he would reach me with that single leap, but he fell short luckily even of making the bank, catching it with his forelegs and claws; yet he was up on it in an instant, crouching for another spring. I said my prayers in case my second shell did not explode, and taking as steady aim as I could, pulled my other trigger, just as he rose grandly in the air on his leap. My big gun kicked me like a mule and I dropped it and rolled over to one side, grabbing for my belt knife to fight it out for my life. There was a tremendous thud as the body of the jaguar came down directly on my gun, showing how true had been his spring, and I lay there for a moment expecting to see the great paws raised to claw the life out of me. He was dead though; but I tell you I don't want any more such close calls as that."

HER LAST ASSIGNMENT.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT BY JULIETTE M. BABBITT.

Copyright, 1899, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher.

HENRIETTA Fair was a pale, slim little thing with curly, reddish brown hair, big earnest grey eyes and a quiet, reserved manner which did not encourage familiarity. No one about the Leader office, except Mr. Jordansen, the managing editor, knew much about "the fair Henrietta" as some of her fellow reporters called her, but not in her hearing. It was understood, however, that this was her first attempt at newspaper work; that Mr. Jordansen was a friend of her family and had given her the place. She "did" receptions, weddings, teas and such affairs at which some of the young women, on the paper, turned up their noses in scorn of such weak stuff. They wanted to write about startling and sensational things; make big "scoops" and have their pictures—in impossible attitudes and absurd attire—in the many hued Sunday editions, their ideal newspaper woman being a "hustler" and "one of the boys."

Henrietta was just eighteen when she came back from her last term at an exclusive educational institution for young ladies to the cosy flat, in an old-fashioned house, in one of the quietest streets in New York, which had been ever since she could remember, the home of her mother, herself and faithful old Sarah, nurse, housekeeper, maid-of-all-work. Though much disappointed, Henrietta had not been alarmed when a letter came from her mother saying she was not well enough to see her little girl graduate—Mrs. Fair was always, more or less, an invalid—and was quite unprepared to find her mother really ill. Even the young girl could see that the illness was more of the mind than body and insisted upon knowing the cause. She was told that, from being comfortably well off they had become, through the failure of a firm having charge of their financial affairs, almost penniless; that, save for a couple of hundred, or so, in bank, their furniture and personal belongings, they had nothing at all.

"And, what is to become of us, my darling child, I don't know," concluded Mrs. Fair, hopelessly.

"Don't worry, mamma dear," said Henrietta, soothingly, "I will take of you, never fear. It would be a pity—after going to school all these years—if I could not make a living for three women. I am going down, this moment, to beard dear Mr. Jordansen in his den and make him give me something to do for the Leader. Even if I could teach I wouldn't like to, but I've always thought I'd like being a newspaper person," and, marching off, with the fearlessness of inexperience, accomplished her object.

Born and brought up in the same quiet old town in the heart of the Empire state, Stephen Jordansen—some fifteen years the older—had known Mary Fair from her babyhood and had hoped to make her his wife. Before he had put that hope into words she married George Warren, a handsome stranger, about whom she knew very little. An orphan, with ample means but no near relatives, she went, unhindered, to her fate and learned, all too soon, that her husband was wild, dissipated, unworthy the affection of any good woman and without any real love for the wife whose money he was flinging away. Twelve miserable months went by. Then George Warren was arrested for a crime committed several years before; tried, condemned and sentenced to prison for life. His wretched wife, seeking to hide her shame, resumed her maiden name and, with her baby girl, the remnant of her fortune and her nurse, Sarah—who would not be left behind—went to New York where she knew but one person, Stephen Jordansen, who had gone there soon after her marriage. He had been her firm friend, ever since, and Henrietta, looking upon him as a sort of uncle—she knew no other—did not hesitate to apply to him in this emergency.

Without allowing his partiality to be seen more than he could help, the managing editor made things easy for the young beginner and kept her near him when she was in the office. In this way, she saw more of Tom Danvers than was good for her peace of mind. Tom was a big, handsome blonde fellow, son of the principal stock holder of the concern and a great friend of Mr. Jordansen. He was supposed to be studying law but spent considerable time writing rather clever articles which the editor—secretly proud of his pupil—professed to criticise, severely. The young man was very nice to Henrietta but too deeply in love with another girl to suspect the growing infatuation of his friend's protege.

One day he brought two ladies to see Mr. Jordansen, from whom they received a warm welcome. The younger, a tall, slender brunette with soft dark hair, was Miss Katherine Vinsen, the motherless daughter and only child of Peter Vinsen, the several-times-millionaire. The other, Mrs. Von Arnheim, a stately, handsome lady of middle age, was Miss Vinsen's aunt and chaperone. Henrietta, coming in to speak to her friend, hesitated in the doorway. Mr. Danvers shook hands with her, drew her forward and said:

"Miss Vinsen, I want you to know Mr. Jordansen's friend, Miss Fair——"

"And," interrupted Henrietta, "one of his reporters."

She had seen, at a glance, that the young lady—whom she knew, by sight, as one of the leading belles of the season—was something nearer than a friend of Mr. Danvers, and resolved that there should be no misapprehension as to her own position.

"Indeed," laughed Miss Vinsen, her black eyes meeting the upturned grey ones as she held out her daintily gloved hand. "And, what does a little girl like you find to report?"

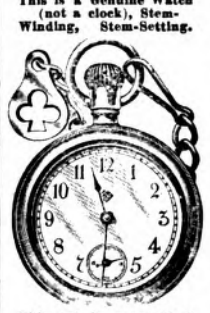
"Nothing very important, as yet," replied Henrietta. "Only weddings, receptions and such things. I hope to do less frivolous work, sometime."

"Just now," declared Miss Vinsen, a little flush tinting her olive cheeks, "I find 'such things' rather important. Auntie and I—my aunt, Mrs. Von Arnheim, Miss Fair—have been working very hard for some tableaux we are giving to-morrow night, for a pet charity. Won't you come and write them up? There will be dancing afterward, and I am sure you will enjoy that. Please, Mr. Jordansen, tell Miss Fair she must come, and don't you fail us either. We would be awfully disappointed if you did."

Mrs. Von Arnhein added a pleasant word or two, then they all said good-by and went away.

"That is the girl Tom Danvers is going to marry," remarked Mr. Jordansen, very busy at his desk. He did not care to meet Henrietta's eyes just then. He had realized, all at once, that he was much to blame for having allowed a young, impressionable girl to see so much of Tom Danvers—lovable fellow that he was—and deeply regretted his thoughtlessness. "It is a splendid match; Katherine is one of the nicest girls I know. Tom is an awfully good fellow and they are evidently very deeply in love."

"Yes, indeed," assented the girl, brightly. "That is as plain to be seen as that Miss Vinsen is exceedingly beautiful. But, I came in to ask which of these weddings I shall do. I can't be in three places, so far apart, at the same hour, you know."



"Take the Ward-Damon affair. That is most important, and, be sure, Henny, to go to the Vinsen's, to-morrow night. They are people worth knowing; their house is very beautiful; the pick of society will be there and I know you will have a good time. Say all the nice things possible, about the folks in the tableaux—that's all Katherine really cares to have said—and when they are over, fix up your account and give it to me. I want you to stay for the dancing. Do you need any money for fixings? You are the only little girl I have, you know."

"Not a cent, thank you, dear Mr. Jordansen," replied Henrietta. "Mamma fixed me up, finely, before the crash—planning to give me a nice time, last summer—and lots of my things have never been worn. I fancy I'll look all right, so far as clothes are concerned, but can't imagine any one wanting to dance with me. I'll have my copy ready for you and will try to do my best to please the very best man I know," and she went out, sadly torn between a desire to see Tom Danvers and Miss Vinsen again, and dread of the pain the sight would give her.

It was a trifle late when she presented her card, next evening, at Mr. Vinsen's—her mother had been less well than usual—and the first tableau was "on" when she shook hands with Miss Vinsen and her aunt at the door of the superb ball room overflowing with Gotham's best people in their best clothes and finest jewels. Miss Vinsen, radiant in pale rose color with diamonds clasping her fair throat and gleaming amid the dusky waves of her

JUST LIKE RAIN.

Every person who cultivates plants should have one of these Bent Neck Sprinklers for sprinkling plants or flowers in house or garden. Also useful to sprinkle clothes for ironing, spraying clothing or carpets to prevent moths, and to disinfect sick-rooms, etc. Much better than dipper or watering pot for every purpose. For plants, destroys red spiders, knits, caterpillars, etc. Sprinkles plants and flowers very quickly without injuring or soaking the earth and soiling everything else near. Constructed so simply of a rubber bulb and hard rubber spray that it cannot get out of order, and will last almost a lifetime. Acts exactly like nature and is the only true substitute for rain in plant life.

AN OFFER TO YOU. To induce you to take a six months' trial of our great Home Story Paper, we will send you one of these large size Sprinklers and the paper on trial six months, all charges prepaid, for only 63 cents. Don't neglect this. Address hair—gave Henrietta a friendly smile; said how pleased she was to see her and added:

"This is my cousin, Mr. Von Arnheim, Miss Fair"—presenting a good-looking young fellow about her own age—"he will take care of you. Carl, find Miss Fair a good place; tell her who's who and see that she has lots of partners for the dance."

"Count me one of them, please, Miss Fair," begged Danvers, her little hand in his for a moment before Carl, regarding his charge with much approval, led her away.

She was looking very pretty in her dainty white evening gown with a strand of pearls about her neck and an unwonted color in her cheeks. Mr. Jordansen gave her a look of fatherly pride as she and Carl slipped into some seats, half screened by a curtain, where the young man proceeded to make himself useful as well as very amusing. He knew everybody; told her who were the notables; helped jot down descriptions of costumes and kept a running fire of whispered comment which Henrietta would have thoroughly enjoyed if she could have kept her thoughts and glance from straying toward the beautiful mistress of the mansion and the lover bending his fair head to whisper in her ear.

When the curtain was drawn on the last pose, Carl took Henrietta upstairs and Miss Vinsen's maid showed her into Miss Vinsen's boudoir; asked if she could do anything more then rejoined the other maids, in the hall, where they were peeping at the company. Henrietta, settling herself in a big easy chair, began her task but had written only a few lines when a sound in the bedroom beyond startled her. Looking up, she saw in the mirror before her, a dark, rough-looking, black bearded man, with ragged hat drawn down over his brows, picking up something from the dressing table. She tried to slip out without attracting his attention but he saw her and, with a smothered oath, caught her as she reached the door. Her scream was half stifled by a blow from the butt of a revolver which, in the struggle, was discharged, the bullet entering the breast of the burglar. Immediately the room was filled with shocked and startled people. The man was dead and Henrietta only just alive. Miss Vinsen, with tears streaming down her cheeks and heedless of her rich gown, took the poor little head, with its blood matted curls, on her lap.

"Poor mamma," murmured the girl, faintly, "what will become of her?"

"I will care for her, my darling," promised Mr. Jordansen, kneeling beside her. "But, don't give up, dear child. Live for her and for us."

A shadowy smile flitted across her lips and they thought that she had ceased to breathe, but, once more, she opened her eyes, and with her whole heart in them, looked at Tom Danvers.

"Kiss me," she whispered. "She won't mind, just once," and, as he pressed his lips reverently to hers, sighed and passed away.

As the burglar was carried out, Mr. Jordansen saw his face.

"My God," he muttered, "it is George Warren! Her father!"

A CAT ON THE STAIRS.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT BY AUBERTINE W. MOORE.

Copyright, 1899, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher.

DOROTHY Barbour had a great desire for an adventure. When she was bidden to the home of her forefathers to visit her mother's maiden sister, Miss Constance Pringle, who lived there alone with the household servants, she hoped that one might at last be hers.

The Pringle mansion was known as the Castle on the Heights, because of its palatial size and appearance and of its situation on a hill commanding a view of an exceedingly picturesque landscape. This ancestral home, scene of many adventures, would surely be an appropriate place for an adventure worth having.

But Dorothy did not feel very much like a heroine of romance or adventure, when she first set foot on the stairs leading from the lower hall to the drawing-room. There must have been a warp in the brain of the architect who planned them. A narrow passage off the extreme end of the broad hall in the center of the house led to the first flight, which could only gain a glimmer of light when the back-hall door was open.

On either side of the stairs there were balusters, and at the top of the narrow flight was a narrow landing. The second flight began a little to the left of the first and led upward between two walls. On the upper landing the drawing-room door opened.

As Dorothy was ushered upstairs, on her arrival, the dismal darkness appalled her. She screamed outright as she stumbled on something soft near the top. The drawing-room door was flung open and Aunt Constance appeared.

"My poor kitten," exclaimed the good lady, hastening forward and gathering up the furry ball against which Dorothy had stumbled. "And my dear Dorothy," she added, throwing her disengaged arm about the shrinking girl.

On the threshold of the large, high-ceiled drawing-room Dorothy was met by quite a family of cats and kittens. The young girl concealed her aversion to them as best she could on learning how fond her aunt was of them.

Cats and kittens were forgotten when Dorothy looked out of the window in front of her, and caught sight of the blue dancing waters of a charming lake. A rolling lawn, dotted by handsome trees led to it, and on the shore was an ornamental boat house which promised stores of pleasure.

She was not disappointed. The young people in the neighborhood had soon drawn her into all their sports, and Dorothy would thoroughly have enjoyed the days that followed but for those stairs and her Aunt Constance's pets. The entire house and especially the dark stairway seemed fairly to swarm with feline monsters.

One afternoon Dorothy returned from a boating expedition to find the mansion apparently deserted. She remembered that her aunt had spoken of driving and that there had been some talk of an outing among the servants.

To her astonishment the front door stood wide open. Usually the great brass knocker must be sounded before admission could be gained. The back door was closed. Darkness reigned supreme on the stairs. As Dorothy ascended, hideous possibilities suggested themselves to her.

Suddenly she heard something stir on the first landing. Pausing she listened. A stealthy cat-like footfall was plainly audible. Elastic though it was, it seemed heavier than that of an ordinary cat. It must be an uncommonly large animal. The next stair creaked as Dorothy put her foot on it, and the creature above sprang upward with lightning speed.

Dorothy was provoked with herself for feeling so alarmed. Gathering up her courage she resolved that a cat should not bar her out of the drawing-room. Having reached the first landing she drew from her pocket a match safe which, girl though she was, she always carried about with her, and struck a light.

A blood-curdling sound smote upon her ear. Dorothy staggered against the balluster protecting the outer side of the landing, while the match fell and was extinguished. What she heard was a hideous roar, followed by a long continued snarling growl. It was like a seething, bubbling cauldron of rage. Dorothy shivered with terror. Absolute helplessness overcame her.

She knew that the beast from which no barrier whatever separated her, was a creature far more to be dreaded than a cat. Her approach had goaded it to a frenzy that increased its strength in the same proportion that fright decreased hers. At any moment a monstrous, hairy mass might be precipitated against her, and cruel claws might tear her flesh.

Dorothy was in the midst of a thrilling adventure, but she was not in a condition to realize it. Not to be able to see in moments of supreme dread is horrible. Instinctively Dorothy struck another light. The same demoniacal roar as before woke the echoes of the deserted mansion. Although quivering like an aspen Dorothy clung to her match. Its flickering rays cast a glimmer on the upper landing. A sight was revealed that made Dorothy's flesh creep with horror.

Crouched against the far corner of the wall, the back arched, the hair bristling, the eyes like balls of fire, was an object resembling a black cat of gigantic proportions. It was a black panther. As in a dream, Dorothy remembered hearing of a circus, about a mile distant. It was there all the servants, except the coachman who was driving Aunt Constance, must have gone. Their excitement would account for the neglect of the front door. The panther had unquestionably escaped from the menagerie.

Dorothy remained pressed against the balluster. The only motion she made was to strike match after match, in view of keeping the dread foe in sight. Soon her safe would be empty. What should she then do? She dared not move. All at once, she became conscious of a faint step. A strong young voice, in a peculiar, purring tone, was heard saying:

"Keep still, you who are alone. I am coming."

Not until the new-comer had reached the first landing did Dorothy dare turn her head. In spite of the ghastly situation in which she found herself, her attention was at once riveted on the figure, with lighted lantern in hand, that approached her. It was that of a boy of about her own age—that is not more than sixteen—clad in the motley garb of a beast-tamer. He was a powerfully built lad, with the form of a gladiator and the face of an inspired hero. His cheeks were flushed, his dark eyes shone with wonderful brilliancy, and a wealth of curly hair tumbled over his noble forehead.

"The panther got away from us. I tracked him here. I saw you enter," said the youth, in the same soft, purring tones Dorothy had at first noticed.

"Take you the lantern," he continued, not varying the peculiar mode of speech, which is one of the beast-tamer's weapons. "But wait a moment," and he pushed a slide in front of the flame so that but a slender streak of light, sharp as a dagger, escaped from the lantern, which he gave Dorothy. "Aim the light directly at his eye," said the boy.

Dorothy did as she was bid. The object of the command was at once apparent. The panther closed his eyes as though hurt, and his roar gave place to a snarling moan. Prostrating himself on the landing so that the upper portion of his body touched the first step of the second flight, the young beast-tamer glided snake-like toward the panther.

In his left hand he grasped a huge piece of meat, which he held far in front of him. His right hand clutched a noose of leather and wire. His movements were accompanied by the monotonous, murmuring, gurgling sound heard from the first.

"Push back the slide," said the beast-tamer, as soon as his face was on a level with the upper landing. "Throw the full light above, and be on your guard when I begin to come down with him."

His eyes were fixed on the panther. The monster had stretched out his long neck, and was sniffing the air. Evidently he had scented the meat. Noiselessly the beast-tamer's right hand was drawing nearer and nearer the panther until it touched the beast's head.

Once more there rang out the deafening roar that had at first paralyzed Dorothy. This time it was more infuriated than before. Now the youth sprang to his feet, holding with outstretched arm a struggling palpitating load, suspended from a leather strap. Panting, with wide-open, glittering eyes, and exhibiting marvelous strength, the young beast-tamer looked like a hero of light who had overcome and was bearing away captive a demon of darkness.

"Give me plenty of light as you go down," said he to Dorothy. "Keep your distance."

Dorothy began the descent backwards, casting the lantern's glow on the boy's pathway. The panther dangling from the noose was wildly clawing the air. Soon it grew quiet, and the boy attempted to support it from behind with his left hand. He did not wish wholly to strangle this costly possession of his employers. Perhaps too, the weight was overtaxing even for his muscular arm. As he touched the panther's hide, the beast struck out violently with its right fore paw. A sharp cry escaped the boy's lips, sounding all the more piteous from the evident effort to suppress it.

"You are wounded!" exclaimed Dorothy.

"Go on," gasped the boy, hoarsely. "Go on—but quickly—quickly."

By this time the ground floor hall was reached, and through the open front door a keeper from the circus was seen. At the end of the long gravel walk was a menagerie cage on wheels, drawn by horses.

"Thank God!" fervently ejaculated the boy.

A crowd had assembled, and in the midst were the servants. There was a general scattering as the beast-tamer appeared with his burden.

This was soon deposited in the cage. As the keeper closed the door the young hero sank exhausted to the ground. In an instant he looked up, his lips white as marble, and murmured:

"Remove the noose. Pour water over him. He is not dead. And see to the cage door. I told you it was not safe."

The keeper to whom these words were addressed mumbled something to the effect that he had missed the panther, discovered its whereabouts and brought the cage forthwith. He took to himself the glory of the capture, and paid no heed to the young beast-tamer. But Dorothy saw that the boy had swooned away, and that the blood was flowing fast from his arm.

She promptly sent for water and for a doctor, and tied her handkerchief about the wound until help should come. As the keeper moved off with the cage Miss Constance Pringle appeared on the scene. Flinging herself into her aunt's arms Dorothy then gave way.

The situation was soon made clear to Miss Constance who felt that enough could not be done for the young hero who had rescued her niece from a horrible fate. She visited him in the hospital where he was carried as soon as he could be moved, and speedily discovered that by birth and breeding he was above the position in which circumstances had placed him.

On his recovery the good lady obtained for the grateful youth a subordinate place on the railroad, with a salary far beyond what he was earning in his hazardous calling. It was a position that afforded ample opportunity for advancement, and Miss Constance and Dorothy had the satisfaction of seeing the former beast-tamer work his way to a post of trust.

When the war with Spain broke out the youth—then nineteen—enlisted in the navy. After peace was declared Miss Constance was the recipient of a Spanish flag, captured by her protege from a lighthouse near Santiago. He sent her, he wrote, his first prize, in token of his undying gratitude to her for lifting him out of a hateful life.

So Dorothy had her adventure and she will always watch with interest the career of its hero.

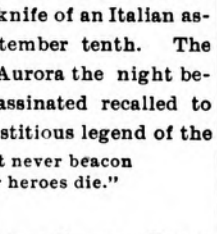
Men, Women and Things.

CONDUCTED BY JENNIE MELVENE DAVIS.

The Mayor of the greatest city in the world is a most important person with almost the state and circumstance of a European monarch. He holds his office for one year and during that time has the rank and precedence of an English earl. The present Lord Mayor is Sir John Moore, who was installed in his office in November. In 1894, he was Sheriff of London and at the expiration of his term in that year the honor of knighthood was conferred on him. He comes of a sturdy old English family of the Lancashire town of Stockport. Here his father was closely identified with the great institution, The Stockport Sunday School, which is the largest and most perfect of its kind in the world. The Lord Mayor is an active business man who has made himself widely known through his sustained fight against food adulteration. He is a merchant prince but has also a retail business in tea and coffee. He has several shops and one may purchase from the Lord Mayor a quarter of a pound of tea or a thousand chests of a hundred pounds each. His principal shop is in King William's street and is like the queer old places which the pen of Dickens has made famous. The window is filled with tea chests and tea canisters. The dingy shop behind is filled by a long counter and a line of salesmen busy weighing out tea. In a small office back of this busy scene sits the man with care-worn face who is busy with the civic duties of the old city of London. Sir John is a widower. His only daughter, Mrs. King Farlow will discharge the onerous social duties that devolve upon a Lady Mayoress. There are eight sons in the Moore family. The office of Lord Mayor is a very difficult one to fill but Sir John Moore is more the type of an old time Mayor than any one who has filled the chair in recent years.



When we officially acquire the Philippines one of our nearest neighbors will be the Mikado Mutsuhito. Thus the latest civilization in the world will extend its power side by side with the oldest—for the oldest political dynasty in the world is that of Japan, the Emperor being the one hundred and twenty-first of his line. The present Emperor, whose name means "gentleman," was born in 1852, at about the time that Perry opened the way for our first treaty with the Japanese. He was born in the sacred city of Kioto, the second son of the Emperor Komei. His mother's family had for years furnished the leading statesmen of Japan. The young "Son of Heaven" was brought up in all the fantastic luxury and time-honored observances of ancient Japan. In 1860 he was declared heir to the throne and in that time he has seen Japan leap from the Orient to the Occident in its ideas of government and political economy. To-day his subjects are burning with restless patriotism. Enterprising, ambitious, progressive, they hope to make the island empire one of the first powers of the world. The united empire of Japan extends from the northern fogs to the tropics and comprises the Loo-Choo islands, once claimed by China, the Bonin Archipelago, Formosa and the Pescadores, ceded from China, and the Kurile islands. In 1867 Mutsuhito ascended the throne. The official designation of his reign was the word Meiji, which means "enlightened peace or civilization." A new government was formed and the Mikado came from behind the screen and in person attended the meetings of the new council. By the new constitution it was agreed that a Diet should be convoked, that the actions of the new government should be decided by public opinion, that the old customs of seclusion should be abolished and that educated and trained men from other nations should be invited to come to Japan. These sweeping reforms were gradually made although it was not for twenty-one years that the promise of a representative government was fulfilled. The Constitution of Japan was promulgated in 1889 and to-day the government follows very closely the model of Great Britain. The Emperor, reared in all the seclusion and tradition of the old regime, is the leading spirit in the new. Forty-six years of age, in sound mental and physical condition, with strong common sense and a spirit devoted to his people's welfare, Mikado Mutsuhito is the ruler of an enlightened people. Monogamy is not yet an institution in Japan although the increased sense of moral responsibility among the Japanese must bring the condition in time. The Empress Haruko is childless. Ten of the Emperor's children have lived. The Prince Imperial Yoshito is the third son of the Emperor, his mother being Yanagiwara Aiko. He was proclaimed heir to the throne in 1887.

Maud Powell is one of the great women violinists of the world. She is an American girl whose home was in Aurora, Ill. After hearing Camillo Urso play she resolved to master the violin. She studied four years in Chicago and then came some years of successful study in Leipzig. From there she went to Paris, where she succeeded in entering the class of the great master, Dancla. Eighty pupils applied and but twelve could be accepted. Maud Powell was unanimously given first place. Two years of study and she made her London debut to be at once given a foremost place. Miss Powell, after a successful season in America has returned to Europe where she will spend two more years in study.

Two great queens have passed from the fierce light that beats upon a throne during the last year. Their characters furnished as marked a contrast as did their different fates. The story of Empress Elizabeth of Austria is one of romance and tragedy while that of Queen Louise of Denmark is the story of a quiet, domestic German life. Queen Louise was born in 1817 and was nearing her eighty-second birthday at the time of her death. She was the daughter of a petty German Prince, the Landgrave of Hesse-Cassel. In 1841 she married the fourth son of another German duke. It was not an ambitious marriage but rather one of love. The two young people were often in severe financial difficulties in spite of their modest manner of living. In 1863 by a turn of Fortune's wheel the penniless German duke became the almost equally penniless King of Denmark with the title of Christian IX. Six children were born of the marriage and Queen Louise was literally mother-in-law to half the crowned heads of Europe. Princess Marie Dagmar married Alexander III. the late Czar of Russia, and is now Empress Dowager of that great empire. Alexandra "Sea King's daughter from over the sea" is the much beloved Princess of Wales, some day to be Queen of England. The third son is George I. of Greece, having been elected to that throne by the people of Greece. Another son, the Crown Prince of Denmark will succeed his father on the throne. All in all, Queen Louise had had a most pleasant and successful life journey. She was literally a mother of queens. Gifted to an unusual degree with good, plain every day commonsense, simple yet dignified, her influence was wide spread and always for good. Her influence with the late Czar of Russia was known to be great and many affairs of state were discussed at the family gatherings in Denmark. The death of Queen Louise throws half of Europe into mourning as sincere as it is respectful.

Mrs. Virginia Reynolds is a young American woman who has been elected to membership in the Society of Fine Art of France as the result of one exhibition of her work. This exhibition was her first public one and consisted of a case of fine miniatures shown in 1897 at the Champs de Mars Salon. The unprecedented honor of an immediate election to the Societe Nationale des Beaux Arts followed this demonstration of the unusual talent of the young American woman. This seemed to be success at one bound, but years and years of painstaking work preceded the success. Mrs. Reynolds was born in Chicago, but on the death of her father moved with her mother into a small Illinois town. Her mother was a musician and Mrs. Reynolds was taught to play almost before she could read. At the age of thirteen she was playing the church organ and copying portraits from photographs. She studied for a year in the Chicago Art Institute and then with her mother went abroad to study music and painting. Over practice brought on a serious trouble with the muscles of the hand and Mrs. Reynolds was forced to give up her music. Then came her marriage and it was at her husband's suggestion that she turned her attention to the delicate art of miniature painting. She has made a great success as a teacher of this art. Eleven from her class of thirteen girls succeeded in having miniatures accepted at the Paris Salon. Last summer in Holland Mrs. Reynolds worked out of doors selecting the peasants as her models. Mrs. Reynolds is now in America where she will paint many miniatures of leading society women.

The late Empress of Austria has been one of the most romantic figures among the crowned heads of Europe. January first finds the Austrian Court still in mourning for its Empress, although for years she had been rarely seen at any court functions. Empress Elizabeth was one of the most celebrated beauties of her time, but she had refused to allow any picture of her to be made during the later years of her life so it is as she stirred the fancy of an older generation that we show her to the readers of COMFORT. Elizabeth Amelia Eugenie was the daughter of Duke Maximilian of Bavaria and the most beautiful princess in Christendom. To the petty court of her father came her cousin Francis Joseph, Emperor of Austria, as a suitor for the hand of her elder sister. He saw the young Princess Elizabeth, fell deeply in love with her and would have no other for his bride and Empress. "It is too good to be true, I am such an insignificant little thing" said Elizabeth when the news was conveyed to her. Eight months later she became Empress of Austria. Her life at the Court of Vienna was not altogether a happy one even in her young days. A strong court faction was formed against the young Bavarian Princess. Three children, two daughters and a son were born to her. The self-inflicted death of the Crown Prince Rudolph was one of the many dramatic tragedies that have filled her years with sorrow and trouble. Her later years were passed in wandering over Europe and in living her life as best pleased her until the tragic end came from the knife of an Italian assassin at Geneva on September tenth. The wonderful display of the Aurora the night before the Empress was assassinated recalled to many minds the old superstitious legend of the "Fearful lights that never beacon

Save when kings or heroes die."

Jotura Komura, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of Japan to the United States is an exponent of the liberal culture that marks a new Japan. A graduate of the best universities of the island empire, he came to the United States in 1875 and entered Harvard. He graduated from that university in 1880. His five years' residence in America has made him thoroughly conversant with the affairs of this great nation. For the past eighteen years he has been closely identified with the diplomatic service of Japan. He was minister to China at the outbreak of the Chinese-Japanese war. When the Emperor chose him to succeed Toru Hoshi as Minister to the United States he was serving as assistant secretary of state. He has all the qualifications for a markedly successful service. He is highly educated, no stranger to the ideas, manners and customs of this country, and thoroughly identified with the government and thought of new Japan. Personally he is calm, dignified and self-contained. He unites the calm of the Orient with the quick thought of the average Yankee.

Sir Julian Pauncefote, G. C. B., G. C. M. G., Ambassador Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of her British Majesty to the United States, is a typical Britisher of whom American people are decidedly fond. He has quietly won his way to a general liking during the ten years that he has represented Great Britain in this country. He came when we were not feeling particularly friendly to his country but during three administrations he has demonstrated his diplomatic ability. This ability has been gained by the slow steps by which England trains her men for service. Sir Julian began diplomatic life as the Secretary to the Secretary of State for the colonies. Then followed several years of practice as a lawyer in Hong Kong and then eight years as Attorney General of that Chinese Metropolis. In 1874, he was made Chief Justice of the Leeward Islands and in that same year he was knighted. Then he was called back to England as assistant under Secretary of Foreign Affairs. From that time promotion was rapid and honor after honor was heaped upon him. When we provided by law to raise our ministers to the rank of ambassadors, Great Britain was the first nation to take advantage of the change and Sir Julian, who was already Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary, was raised to the rank of Ambassador. In 1894, he was made a Privy Councillor and in 1897 he received the Jubilee Medal. Sir Julian Pauncefote is a typical Englishman and his face bears a family resemblance to the John Bull of the cartoonist. He has personally managed most of the correspondence on the Behring Sea question and on arbitration, and it is his great regret that the principle of arbitration was not accepted by the United States and Great Britain. The British Embassy in Washington is the property of the British Government and bears the royal arms over its entrance. Sir Julian is fond of music and of the theater and like all Englishmen he is devoted to out-of-door sports. There have been rumors of his recall and it is but fair to say that when that event does take place it will be regretted by the nation at large.

DEAR NIECES AND NEPHEWS:

And now we are at the opening of another year. 1898, with its joys and its sorrows, its horrors of war, and the sickness and suffering attendant thereon, are all things of the past, and the pages of the new year—of the last year of the century—lie before us, fair and spotless. What shall be their record? How will they appear as we turn them backward for examination when 1900 comes peeping in upon us? Written all over they must be, with good deeds or bad; with efforts of helpfulness to others; of kind words fitly spoken; with honesty, sobriety, manliness and womanliness; or with the reverse. Which shall it be?

Our first letter this month is from Alabama, and those of us who are familiar with the "Sunny South" will recognize the truthfulness of this description of the colored dwellers there. Our correspondent says:

FORMING as they do a large part of the population in many of the Southern States it may be of interest to note a few of the traits and peculiarities of the colored people as found at the present time. One of the most noticeable traits is their cheerful and happy disposition. At work or play they are always in the singing mood. Given enough to satisfy to-day's wants they do not worry themselves about to-morrow. They have no ambition to become property owners. Land suitable for cultivation is cheap and can be bought on favorable terms, building material is not high, and in this climate it does not require any large outlay to secure comfortable and tidy homes, and yet we find them, with few exceptions, squatters on some wild tract of land, living in dilapidated cabins that hardly afford them shelter from the storm. Another trait that attracts attention is their devotion and attendance on public worship and prayer meeting. Every Sabbath day they fill their little churches, and it is often well toward midnight before they finish up the services. They are as well dressed and well behaved as any similar gathering of the white folks. On a week day evening the negro and his family will walk for miles through the woods to attend prayer meeting, no matter how dark and stormy the night. The service consists mainly of singing and prayer. The singing is very enthusiastic and sometimes quite melodious. The precepts and admonitions they receive from their pastors and teachers are all of that character that should lead them to a higher and better way of living. Now we should expect some good results from all this and no doubt it has a restraining influence, but some of these people cannot be made to understand that the ten commandments apply to them in any way. The Psalmist who said in his haste that 'all men are liars,' would not have qualified his assertion very much if he had been intimate with these people. Another trait that is observed in the colored people is their politeness and courtesy to every one, and more especially among themselves. Their use of the English language in conversation is often amusing. They appear to select the longest and most unthought-of words to express their meaning, and often they get sadly mixed up.

"One of the bright sayings of Mark Twain that 'a cauliflower is a cabbage with a college education,' might be applied to the negro race. It is evident, however, that it will require more than one generation of education and culture to transform them into intelligent and progressive citizens. The vices and irregularities acquired by the race during long years of servitude still cling to them. But there are influences at work, bidding them to 'Leave their low-vaulted past,' and giving them nobler views and higher aims in life. There are educated and talented young colored men scattered through the South who are making it their life work to improve their race and fit them better to perform their duties as citizens."

GEO. H. JORDAN, Citronelle, Ala.

Now here is a letter from Annette Rosamond Muller, of South Amboy, N. J.; a very pleasant letter it is too, full of praises of our brave soldier boys in the late war with Spain, but it is crowded out, to my great regret.

Our next letter is upon the old Muller House in New York State. I wonder, by the way, if our cousin Anuette Muller claims relationship there.

"On the top of a high hill, about two and a half miles west of Georgetown, N. Y., stands an old house known as the 'Muller House.' It was built nearly a hundred years ago, by a wealthy Frenchman named Muller, who was obliged to fly from France for political reasons. On coming to this country he obtained a large tract of land from the Indians, a part of which is now known as the 'Muller farm.' This house, which is built of hewn black cherry timbers, is the only building now remaining of those erected by Muller, and is still in a good state of preservation. The timbers of which it is made are each twelve inches thick and eleven feet in length. They are placed upright, side by side, and dovetailed closely together, thus forming a solid wall. This was lathed and plastered within, and most carefully and elaborately finished. There were seven open fireplaces in the house, all finished in black marble. The house was beautifully finished and furnished with the richest of furniture in mahogany and other costly woods. But the most peculiar thing about it is that the cellar walls are seven feet thick. It is supposed that there is a secret passage entirely around the house within these cellar walls, but no one has ever been able to find the entrance to it.

"The surrounding grounds still show traces of their former beauty. The trout ponds and deer parks here once had no equal in the State. In the park are still to be seen immense maple trees growing in fantastic shapes, showing that they had once received great care and training. In the center of the park is a large open space across which the deer were driven while the hunters waited to get a shot at them. Muller never allowed his deer to be shot unless they were running across this opening.

"A little back of the house and within the woods is a swamp where grow a great variety of wild flowers, some of which are so rare as to be found nowhere else in the state.

"Not a member of the Muller family now remains here, and it is not known what became of them. Muller, himself, went back to France, leaving his wife and children in New York, and never sent for them. It is said that the wife resumed her maiden name, both for herself and her children, and hence the name of Muller became obliterated."

F. E. HALBERT, Cortland, N. Y.

Alice Heffenfinges must try again. This letter which she sends me is very pleasant, but I am sorry to say that I cannot give it a prize. Thank you for it, all the same, my dear.

George Johnson, with his account of a walnutting party, carries me back to my own youthful frolics, but his letter is far too long, and not of sufficient interest to all the cousins for me to publish. Send me a short one, George, on some really interesting subject, and see how quickly I will use it.

Now we have an account of a most curious amphibious animal, called the mud fish.

"A very curious link between fish and reptile, is the creature known as the mud fish. Although he partakes of the characteristics of both animals, he is classified as a fish on account of his scaly covering and rudimentary fins, which are in reality more like feet than fins, as they are used both to support the fish and direct his movements. Ordinarily sluggish, he can be very swift when occasion requires; moving rapidly backward and forward by means of his tail.

"In form, this strange fellow is long and narrow, mixed olive green and brown in color—a little lighter in some places—with dark irregular spots near the tail. There seems to be no trace of an ear, and the eyes are small and flat to the head, with a golden iris. He breathes both by lungs and gills, and comes to the surface of the water for air occasionally. During the eight months of the dry season in the tropical countries where the mud fish lives he lies at the bottom of deep morasses and half dried rivers, rolled in a kind of mud cocoon, in a state of torpidity. He leaves a hole at one end of the cocoon through which to breathe. Upon emerging from his cocoon, the animal is simply ravenous; and as he is a great fighter when aroused he will frequently attack, and even eat up a companion. Under ordinary circumstances his diet consists of small frogs, fish, worms, and vegetable matter.

"In the river Amazon in Brazil, where the mud fish was first discovered, he grows sometimes three feet long, but in other localities he only averages about two feet.

"Rice fields, which are in a quivering state of jellylike mud during the greater part of the year, contain quantities of mud fish, which at the end of the dry season the natives dig up and eat as a great delicacy.

"The mud fish is somo times called the 'Paradox,' and is considered by scientific men to be the nearest approach known to a perfectly amphibious animal. Some specimens have been taken to Europe to raise, but with very little success."

MARY E. MARTIN, New York.

Mrs. George C. Goodyear, of Saginaw, Michigan, sends me a very interesting account of the reception tendered to the returning soldiers of Saginaw in September last, but it reaches me far too late for use.

Here is a letter from North Carolina, but election riots do not seem to disturb the busy life of this little place.

"Our beautiful little village, Faith, is situated six miles from the county-seat of Rowan County, on the granite belt, and it is very interesting to watch the men at work in the granite quarries, some drilling by hand, others by steam drills; here is a group of men making millstones, there others cutting curbing for street purposes, and still further on they are engaged in making paving blocks and sills for windows and doors; while near us men are feeding a large and excessively noisy stone crusher, which grinds up the granite as if it were loaves of bread, or something equally soft. One hundred car-loads of granite curbing are frequently shipped at one time from here to Raleigh.

"We have in our yard a beautiful grove which is often visited by Sunday School picnics and religious bodies needing a place for meetings. A large gospel tent has lately been erected there, and for a week a revival meeting has been going on in it. Crowds of people come from far and near both to these meetings and to the frequent picnics that come here, and all seem to enjoy their visit."

MRS. CHARLOTTE E. WYATT, Faith, N. C.

Jennie Purviance, of Perrysville, Ark., sends me a cheering word of appreciation of our page which is very welcome; she also gives me a half promise of a letter later, on some subject of interest. I am sorry not to publish her letter to shut-ins, on the subject of healing, but I receive so many letters of that kind that my space would be filled with them were I to give them room; so, as this is not a "Shut-in" page, I am obliged to refuse them all.

By the way, will my nephews and nieces please remember that, as this page is "made up" at least two months before it is published, it is therefore necessary that matters intended for any particular issue should be in my hands three months before it is to come out.

Now we have another bit of Virginia scenery laid before us. Truly, this proud old state is rich in itself aside from the remarkable men whom she has sent out into the world.

"Fifteen miles east of Lynchburg, Va., is a rock on the James river called Holcomb's Rock. It is one hundred and fifty feet high, and twenty-five feet in width. On the top it is composed of two large rocks and many small ones, and at the bottom it is at least sixty feet from the river; on top there is space of land one hundred yards long and four yards wide, that leads right on the rock. You can ride a horse so as to jump from the horse on the rock. It is a very pleasant place to visit on a summer day; there are several springs and many shady trees around it. Among the trees that grow around it are spruce, pine and others. Most of the rock is covered with moss and around the edge there are many pretty wild flowers. It was a very famous place in ancient times, and is now. I have heard that it derived its name from an old slave man named Holcomb, who jumped over it."

ALMA E. HARVEY, Clifford, Va.

Here is a new Virginia cousin whom we are glad to welcome among us. He gives us a pleasant description of his home surroundings.

"I am just becoming a reader of COMFORT and would like to be admitted to your social circle. Our valley is known as 'Falling Spring Valley,' and derived its name from a large stream of water which falls over a precipice one hundred and ninety feet high. The big cliffs at these falls are grand. The rocks look as if they had been cut and built one upon another. Another picturesque spot is the 'Cress Lakes' where cress is gathered all winter and shipped to northern markets. These lakes are beautiful in winter when the earth is hidden by snow. Their water is warm, and ice was never known to form on them, though it is bitterly cold here. Our valley is somewhat hilly, but rich and fertile. It is about three miles wide and eighteen long, situated in the northwestern part of Virginia. The celebrated 'Hot Springs,' one of the most beautiful summer resorts in the State, are here. The 'Natural Well,' three and a half miles from Falling Springs, is a curiosity. I live on a farm one and a half miles from Falling Springs and the lovely cascades."

S. E. ROBINSON, Savannah, Va.

Now let us visit Luray Cave with another Virginia cousin.

"The Luray Cavern is nestled among the hills of Page County, Virginia. In the year of 1878 Mr. B. G. Stebbins of Luray wished to explore an old cave which was known to have existed there for years immemorial, and invited two friends to accompany him. They would not consent to this, but were willing to go in search of a new cave. So they went roaming over the hills for several weeks, without any result. One day they crossed the hill where the old cave was situated, and a short distance from its mouth they came upon a hole filled with bushes, weeds and stones, from whence issued a cool current of air. After much labor in clearing out the place one of the men was let down into the hole by a rope and proceeded some distance on foot until stopped by water.

"This was the discovery of the marvelous Luray cave, which has since been gradually revealed. Luray is now considered one of the most beautiful caverns in the world. Come into it with me and behold its wonders for yourselves. After a considerable descent we enter an immense room, and passing through it we come to the Vegetable Garden, so called from the strong resemblance of the rock formations within it to vegetables. Then comes the theatre and the gallery, and, passing over Muddy lake on a plank walk, we reach the Fish Market; then on to Pluto's Chasm, the depth of whose black abyss has never been ascertained. Then there is the Bridge of Sighs, Titania's Veil, and Diana's Baths; also the Wet Blanket, which hangs high and always dripping water. The massive columns here and there are grand and imposing, notably so the Fallen Column. The Cathedral is a study in itself; its lofty dome and Gothic arches are an inspiration. The immense organ in one corner is another wonder, and when the guide strikes the pipes beautiful, deep, musical sounds reach the ear. Adjoining the organ are the chimes, the sweetest ever heard. Passing through the Bridal Chamber we enter the Giants' Hall and the Ballroom. A beautiful white formation in the last named room shows the symmetrical figure of a young woman which is called Cinderella leaving the ball-room. Very near, hanging against the wall, is a lady's riding whip. Close by is the Cemetery, and beyond that the Fowl Market, where the formations bear a striking resemblance to fowls.

"Beautiful, crystal springs and lakes dot the cave here and there, while the limestone formations among which they are, assume such a variety of forms and coloring that one might easily imagine himself in a forest with tall trees, shrubbery, fallen logs and sparkling, limpid water everywhere about."

M. C.

A letter from our Montreal cousin shows us a pathetic bit of life in a convalescent Home for children. She says:

"Let me tell your readers about a small convalescent Home, situated on the banks of the St. Lawrence river. Eighteen is the greatest number that can be accommodated here at once, but as only non-contagious diseases are allowed there is rarely the full number here in winter; but in summer the beds are always full, and it is gratifying to see the color come into the pale, pinched faces of poor sickly little children, and to watch how, after a few days, they begin to run about and enjoy themselves.

"Let me tell you about a few of these little patients. E. M. was a dear little boy of three years, his mother dead, and his father a stoker in some large factory. Having no one to look after his boy the father took him with him to the factory. From the bad, confined atmosphere the poor child soon became ill, and so drifted into our Home. He was white as wax the day he was carried in and laid on his little cot, but fresh air, regular food and proper care soon told, and E. became the pet of the Home. Another boy had never slept in a properly made bed, and the poor fellow undressed and lay on the outside, gathering up the quilt as a covering. A little French boy cried when he first saw the bath, for he was afraid of being drowned in it. Another was a very funny little fellow, very careful of his clothes, and very much afraid that when taken away to the wash they would never be brought back again. One day he sat nearly an hour watching the clean clothes on the line for fear that some one would take away his stockings which he recognized hanging there."

M. S. B., Montreal, Canada.

Below are extracts from letters written home last winter by a Texas boy who joined the army of seekers for gold in the far off land of Alaska. His sister sent them to us, thinking we would find them of interest.

"I sailed from Seattle, February, 1898, on the steamer Queen. We arrived at Victoria, B. C., on the 20th, and after two days there we began our trip on the ocean. We made one or two stops before reaching Juneau, but the weather was so cold that I did not venture ashore, the mercury standing at thirty degrees below zero. The scenery we passed was romantic and beautiful. Mountains covered with snow, huge icebergs and glaciers along the coast on one side of us and the deep blue sea on the other.

"Juneau, Alaska, is an old Esquimaux village and I was much interested in watching the Esquimaux with their dogs and reindeer pulling their sleds. It is too cold for cattle and horses here as they have snow and ice the year round, and in winter the days are only a few hours long. Our voyage ended at Skaguay and when I saw all the snow and ice I began to wish I were at home.

"Skaguay is situated in a deep canyon between two hills eight or ten thousand feet high. The sun only shines two hours a day now and I am told that in summer it is dark only two hours. Skaguay is fifteen months old and has a population of eight thousand and very nearly half live in tents, as all the lumber used must be shipped from the United States.

"How I long to see dear old Texas again! To hear the birds singing and see flowers blooming instead of the bleak snow-covered mountains. The only timber here is the birch and cotton-wood and not much of either. Prices are very high and wages are good but there are more people here than there is work."

And now my space is filled, so with sincere wishes for a happy New Year to you all I will say good-by until next month.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

ADAME La Mode is taking one of her much needed holidays, leaving me, as her faithful chronicler, somewhat at a loss for startling news. Still, having my COMFORT readers constantly in mind, and my eyes and ears always open for the noting of trifles light as air, but in the end important, I have enough news to keep mi lady employed and interested until my next budget, when things will have adjusted themselves more certainly, as far as modes go.

So it is that I can confide in you that among new goods are exquisite dress materials in lighter stuffs, where endless encircling tucks are simulated by interwoven lines of satin or silk, or a silk and wool mixture looking like braid. Apropos of which statement, it may be well to remark that all the stripes and tucks will be arranged to go round, and not down the skirt, though, perhaps, it is hardly kind to make short and stout folks unhappy in anticipation, for the reality will be bad enough when it arrives; however, there are always plain materials for them to fall back on.

Lace is as lavishly used as ever, both for the purpose of trimming and for the making of entire gowns, while perhaps the most notable innovation in the line of smart mid-winter costumes for dressy functions is the lace bodice having basques reaching almost to the knees and curving upward in a manner which has by this time become a familiar sight, inasmuch as it has distinguished all the fashionable capes and wraps of the past few months. A fetching new costume carrying out this idea has its skirt built of the finest and most supple cloth, in a tender shade of grey, the skirt distinguished by a deep flounce, which, instead of sweeping upwards at the back, as was the habit of the flounce for so long, has its highest point in the front, and then curves downward till, at the back, it is only about five inches deep. The effect is curious and is apt at first to be pronounced unbecoming, but it is really a most graceful arrangement and a most decided improvement.

This particular flounce of which I speak is arranged in deep pleats, opening outwards at the hem, an idea which is repeated in the rounded basques of the lace bodice. In fact the coat is all softly pleated, and held in at the waist by a folded band of white satin, which passes underneath the bordering pleats in the front, leaving them to hang loosely in something of fichu fashion from the pleated collar which falls over the shoulders. The concluding items of a vest and cravat of white mousseline de soie go to make up a distinctly novel dress. Smarter still is another gown, where the skirt of Parma mauve cloth has a curved flounce in white cloth, where many rows of gathered satin ribbon, in a delicate mauve coloring, are arranged in a particularly clever fashion. They appear again to decorate the open-fronted coat of white cloth, which has long, plain basques, with rounded fronts outlined with a double frill of mauve mousseline de soie. Then there are revers of white satin, edged with soft frills, and a vest of white lawn and lace crossed by two bands and rosettes of black velvet ribbon, while black velvet at the waist and a rosette to finish the high collar make a distinctly chic contrast to the delicate coloring of the gown. This style of long basque with its upward curve in front is becoming and not likely to make one's figure look short or stumpy; still there is some danger for those at all inclined to stoutness, unless they are tall. All such will be wise to pin their affections to another new style, where bodice and skirt open with a scalloped edge, piped with velvet, over a vest and petticoat, where tiny pleats are arranged to form a series of V's. The Princess effect is broken by a narrow band of velvet at the waist finished by long sash ends, and there is a collar to match, which, however, is so narrow that it does not disguise the unrelieved tightness of the tucked sleeves. It is, on the whole, a graceful gown, and the continued lines of bodice and skirt give length to the figure.

The winter season has formally installed the Newmarket as a feature not to be overlooked by the woman who aims to be considered well-dressed. But it is an idealized garment, with little resemblance to the shapeless Newmarket of old. We have secured a sketch of an up-to-date garment, embodying all the new points, which consist chiefly of the circular flounce beginning with the revers and encircling the entire skirt, growing deeper and fuller at the back. The material is a soft, rich shade of tan Melton, with collar and cuff facings of black velvet. At the back, heading the two enormous pleats, are big velvet-covered buttons. Stitched straps are the decoration. This same style of coat is employed for evening and the opera, the back lengthening into an ample train and the entire thing fitted a trifle looser than for street wear.

And now, here is a frock which I am persuaded should be of practical use to you at the moment, being simple, yet sufficiently dressy for all occasions. The material is one of the fine, soft cloths in a beautiful shade of grey (grey you will observe is ultra-smart), the skirt nicely cut but perfectly devoid of trimming. The bodice has a jaunty little basque, shorter at the sides than at the back or front, and an arrangement of velvet ribbon running over the shoulders which is most becoming to the figure. The velvet is repeated at the shoulder, outlining the tiny cap of the sleeve, and at the waist where a cluster of handsome buttons in cut steel hold it in place. The guimpe is of yellow string lace over white satin, the tiny collar points and cuffs being of the same stuff. The vest is the goods in rather broad tucks.

For evening wear there are all sorts of dainty bodices, one of which I have chosen, as being among the smartest. The material is yellow crepe de chine over orange satin, the frills embroidered with orange and picked out with tiny jet sequins. Shirred bands decorate sleeves and waist alike.

Grey castor gloves are among the season's novelties and are the correct hand-covering of the moment. Pearl grey suede have superseded white gloves for smart functions. Elastic belts of jet, mock jewels, or cut steels are both becoming and smart. They may be had to match any costume.

THE only parrot academy on this side of the Atlantic is in New York, and the method of teaching is worth looking into. The birds to be taught are let loose in a room, and with them a bird that can say words of one syllable, such as "cat," "dog," "yes," "no;" he soon teaches them what he knows; then a bird that can say longer words and simple sentences is put in, and when they have learned all he knows, a still more accomplished one is put in. Then the smart ones are finished off by the proprietor; they are taught their letters, figures, how to add and subtract and to spell simple words, by the aid of the blackboard. They are also taught to sing, tell the time, and often to dance. The most stupid parrot will learn to swear—but of course swearing is not one of the branches taught them in their liberal education.

Schools have been established by the British government in India, for the instruction in reading, writing and manners of apes, to judge of their capabilities; one school in Bombay reports that the chances seem good to make reputable beings out of the Simian stock.

THE preservation of cut flowers is worth a little study, and the following method will be found a very good one. Before removing the flowers from the box, sprinkle them thoroughly with fresh, cold water; then make a strong soap-suds and put into a large vase and stand the flowers in it. Each morning the flowers must be taken out of the suds, their stems clipped, and laid sideways in clear, cool water. Sprinkle with fresh water and return to the suds. Change the suds every three days and at the end of three weeks compare the flowers with those a day or two old which have been crammed into a vase in the usual way, and you will prefer your own. The strong soap-suds take the place of roots.

A GOOD PRACTICE.

If You Want a Good Appetite and Perfect Digestion.

After each meal dissolve one or two of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets in the mouth and, mingling with the food, they constitute a perfect digestive, absolutely safe for the most sensitive stomach.

They digest the food before it has time to ferment, thus preventing the formation of gas and keeping the blood pure and free from the poisonous products of fermented, half-digested food.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets make the complexion clear by keeping the blood pure.

They increase flesh by digesting flesh-forming foods.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the only remedy designed especially for the cure of stomach troubles and nothing else.

One disease, one remedy, the successful physician of today is the specialist, the successful medicine is the medicine prepared especially for one disease.

A whole package taken at one time would not hurt you, but would simply be a waste of good material.

Over six thousand men and women in the state of Michigan alone have been cured of indigestion and dyspepsia by the use of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

Sold by all druggists at 50 cents per package.

A Pig Hunt in the Dark.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

I SLEEP soundly, but how am I to convey to any one the smallest end of a notion how soundly? The concentrated slumber of an army of tops would be wakefulness itself compared to the deep sleep I go in for. I scorn exaggeration, and merely mention my somnolent powers to enable my readers to realize, at least faintly, what that noise must have been which woke me as I lay, one wet night, snugly unconscious of all sublunary matters beneath the roof of my bungalow in Malaya. "What the duce is up?" I exclaim, as struggling into wakefulness, I observe my friend H, hastily putting on his nether garments by the light of a tallow dip, stuck with a graceful slant into the neck of a black bottle.

"Pigs; that's all," is his laconic reply. "Come, jump up, old man; we'll have fresh pork for breakfast, or my name isn't what it is."

Meanwhile the din outside the window continues with unabated fury, and I am by this time sufficiently awake to know that it is the aggregate product of manifold canine throats possessing vocal powers of Pandemoniacal variety of expression.

Besides ourselves there were two other inmates of the bungalow on this night, viz; our regular servant, an excitable but trustworthy Hibernian, and a Malay whom we employed now and then to do odd jobs about the place. The head of the latter now appeared at our door, and ejaculating, "Porker, peeg!" immediately disappeared again. On rushing into the next room, we found Dennis, the aforesaid Hibernian, lighting up our great perforated tin lantern, his dark eyes gleaming with delight and excitement.

"What are you going to do with the lantern, Dennis?" asks H., who rightly thinks that in the pig hunt a lantern will be more picturesque than useful.

"Faix, sorr," says Dennis, with a grin, "Amn't I goin' to light the gintleman that's outside this teemin' night into our bungalow. Daggo's gone to keep his honor in sight."

"Daggo" is the cognomen which Dennis bestowed on the Malay, and one which the latter at first strongly resented; but, overcome at last by Dennis's good-humored persistency, he had come to answer to it, under protest as it were, and sullenly exercising his right to repudiate the name on those arbitrary occasions whensoever his dignity might deem it necessary.

Whilst H. and I had been drawing on our boots, we had heard a violent scuffle in the verandah, then a fierce grunt, a rush, a dismal howl, and then the noise of the dogs had died away over the hill in front of the house. It is a stormy night; the rain had ceased, and the wind has got up and is driving thick masses of clouds across the sky, rendering the waning moon almost useless to us. H., as the best marksman, is armed with our only rifle; I carry a light American axe; and Dennis, over and above the lantern, has armed himself with an instrument something like a stout reaping-hook, with a long, straight handle. Of course, in our belts are stuck the sheath-knives we always carry, and thus accoutred, we go slipping and splashing down the slope on which our residence is situated, across the small gully at the bottom, and are pushing our way through the wet grass, up the hill on the other side, beyond which we can hear the dogs giving tongue as wildly as ever, when we are suddenly aware, by "the straggling moon-beans' misty light," of a gesticulating apparition which bears swiftly down upon us. It is "Daggo," who, with rapid and excited gestures, describes the position of the enemy, intimating that he is very large and likely to prove dangerous, and generally recommending caution in our plan of attack. Here we are all agreed, for we have long since acquired that deferential respect for the wild boar that every one does who has had anything to do with the hunting of him. When Daggo, therefore, silently signs for us to follow him, with the confident air of a man who has a defined plan in his head, we immediately accept his guidance. The natives glide away to the left, closely followed by H. with the rifle; I came next and Dennis brings up in the rear with his cherished lantern.

A CHANCE OF GETTING A BLOW AT THE ENEMY.

The boar, appears, is sullenly standing bay beside a waterhole in the next gully, protected on his right flank and rear by a tangled thicket, and a kind of thorny bramble. This thicket, though it certainly enabled his porcine majesty to bid defiance to the dogs, was the very thing that Daggo had perceived to be the weakness of his position. Numerous cattle tracks lead down to the waterhole, and guided unerringly by the Malay, though there is only a glimmer of moonlight now and then, we cross the gully higher up, and are soon stealing along in Indian file down one of these narrow, slippery tracks, keeping the thicket as a screen between ourselves and our prey. By this means, while the animal's attention was occupied by the dogs, we hoped to get close enough for H. to get a shot at him in a moment of moonlight.

I confess to feeling anything but confident that he was not making a mistake in the darkness, and leading us down a track up which at any moment the victim of our anticipations might make a sudden charge, a possibility that, hemmed in as we were on either side by tangled brushwood, it was not pleasant to dwell upon. In fact I freely admit that the nearer we approached that pig the less jovial I felt, and that proximity to the possible pork chops of to-morrow morning, while still in a state of fierce vitality to-night, tended considerably to lessen my enthusiasm concerning those delicacies. However, by some mysterious law of the nervous system which I will not attempt to explain, I enjoyed the very danger which produced my funk.

When about two hundred yards from the spot we wished to reach, Daggo suddenly stopped and pointing back to Dennis's lantern, made signs that it should be put out. To this Dennis strongly objected and only reluctantly complied—as we thought—when H. ordered him to do so. "Huh! petter he go pack to ped," was the native's contemptuous observation as he jogged on again.

A few minutes more we had got close enough to the scene of action to hear the savage champ, champ of the boar as he whetted his tusks—those terrible tusks, with which with an almost imperceptible jerk of his snout he could lay the strongest dog in the agonies of death. H., guided by Daggo, now creeps up to the thicket before alluded to, and Dennis and I separate, each to station ourselves where we have a chance of getting a blow at the enemy as he runs, should H's shot prove ineffectual. I was careful not to place myself directly in a track. To do so would have probably resulted, had the boar chosen that line of retreat, in finding myself knocked a considerable distance into the midst of the approaching week, after having aimed a wild and futile blow at no precise object and reclining on mother earth, with perhaps a gash in the leg and many little stars before my eyes, I should, no doubt, have felt that I had made a mistake.

I had been waiting some five or six minutes, axe in hand, anxiously listening for H's expected shot. I knew it would take some time to get a chance of firing without the risk of hurting the dogs, and besides, unluckily, the moon was just now obscured by clouds, and so I stood eagerly watching for them to pass over, when with startling suddenness, a few paces from me there streamed forth a red and flickering light, not the momentary flash of a rifle; and besides, there followed no report. But I had no time for conjectures, for the next moment I saw the boar, followed by the madly excited dogs, rushing straight in the direction of the light. There was a roar of anger in H's voice and a roar of fright in Dennis's, a canine howl or two, a crash, a groan, a clatter of tin, then sudden darkness again, the boar and dogs having disappeared into the night, as it were, in a sort of wild apotheosis of confusion. H. and I both ran to where the light had been, feeling anything but comfortable about poor Dennis's fate. We found him sitting in a cattle-track, and the moon shining out showed one side of his face thickly coated with mud as he looked up at us with a dazed expression of countenance and a sheepish air of a man who knows he has put his foot in it.

To the inquiry, "Much hurt, Dennis?" he ruefully replied, in a gasping sort of way:

"Och, the saints presarve us!—I—don't right-ly know—but I—b'lieve I'm alive, though there's more wind—been knocked out—of my body this blessed night—than I ever thought I had in it. There isn't a breath left in me big enough—to fill the lungs of a good-sized moskittey, so there isn't."

"No bones broken then?" said H.

"Faix, sorr, I hope not; but they're that shook up and mixed like, that I feel for all the world like a bundle of sticks tied up loose."

"Well, but what the devil did you do it for?" said H., who, seeing the culprit wasn't much hurt, thought it time to haul him over the coals a bit.

"Shure, wasn't I showing your honor a light to shute the baste by!" was poor Dennis's apologetic answer.

The fact was that, instead of having extinguished the lantern as we thought he had done, he had merely put it under his loose smock, and by flashing its light onto the boar at the moment he did he had thought, by thus assisting H. in his aim, to cover himself with glory, and to triumph over Daggo, between whom and himself a jealousy always existed. It was a luminous idea, but the result was a failure.

Annoyed and worried by the dogs—of which we had six of all breeds and sizes—the boar had not gone far when he again turned and stood at bay, this time close to a shallow creek, from which we drew our water for household purposes. When, guided by the barking of the dogs, we reached the place—though the sky had cleared we could see no pig, for he had ensconsed himself in a clump of fern against the trunk of a fallen tree. This fact was evident enough from the behavior of "Lockjaw," an animal half mastiff and half bulldog, whose terrible tenacity of grip had earned him his name. He was walking round and round the clump of fern, on which he kept a watchful eye, every now and then sniffing towards it with a faint whine of impatience. Even he, pluck to the backbone as he was, knew better than to make an attack on such an enemy in his present position. No, get the beast on the move so as to give the dog "half a slant," and with a word of encouragement Lockjaw would unhesitatingly pin by the ear or jowl the biggest pig that ever munched fern root.

The question now was how to dislodge the game. We might set on the dogs, but that course would probably result in getting one, and most likely the best of them, disabled, we therefore decided on the only other plan there was, namely that of firing into his hiding-place

ARE YOUR LUNGS WEAK?

To Every Sufferer from Catarrh, Coughs, Grippe, Consumption and Similar Signs of Lung Weakness a Great Specialist Offers His New Scientific FREE TREATMENT.

Nearly everybody you meet will feel insulted if you say they have weak lungs. All seem to have a solid faith in the soundness of their own breathing machine. They may admit they have a "heavy cold," "a touch of bronchitis," or even "a spell of asthma," but as to weak lungs, NEVER. Even the poor consumptive, who scarcely speaks without coughing, whose cheeks are wasted, hollow, and bear the hectic flush of doom, will assure you that he will be all right when the weather changes.

How many a poor bread-earner there is who keeps on and on at his daily toil, taking cough medicines by fits and starts, but never quite curing his cough, while this same cough is but a symptom of decay that is eating into his lungs, and will in time cause their destruction.

Thus does a wife observe her husband, or parents witness the struggle of a darling child, while no steps are taken to battle with the evil until consumption has seized on one more victim. It is terrible to think how far we may be guilty by our indifference to the lung troubles of those near and dear to us. It is also terrible to think that we may possibly hug a similar dangerous delusion as to our own health until too late to obtain a remedy.

Let us leave the distressing subject to come to what is practical.

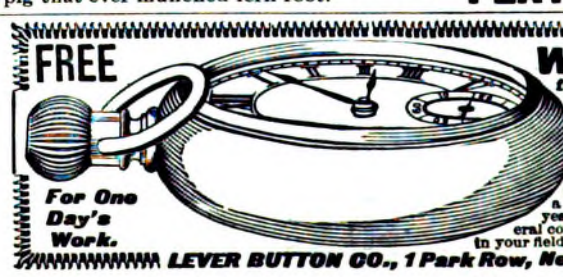
Lung troubles don't move backward. Weak lungs must be healed and strengthened and rid of the very earliest germs of disease or you are simply committing a form of suicide. Either you must cure your lung troubles or THEY WILL KILL YOU. That's the whole situation in a nutshell.

CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED.

Never was there any positive cure for lung troubles until Dr. Slocum made the discovery which is now embodied in his new system of treatment. It cures weak lungs, bronchitis, asthma, coughs, consumption, catarrh and every other ailment of the pulmonary region. It destroys every germ that can affect the respiratory system, and even in advanced stages of lung trouble positively arrests the tubercular growth, while it also builds up the patient so that his system is enabled to throw off scrofula, rheumatism and other diseases. Thousands of cured cases already prove these statements. Thousands of grateful people bless the discoverer.

The system consists of three remedies which act simultaneously and supplement each other's curative action.

Every first-class druggist dispenses the Slocum System of Treatment in large, original packages, with full directions for use.



The Doctor wants everybody to know the merits of his system. He has arranged to give a free treatment (three bottles of medicine) to all who will apply to him in person or by letter. Full instructions for use accompany each treatment. Surely, if you have delicate lungs you will be glad to take advantage of a scientific treatment that is offered in such a generous spirit.

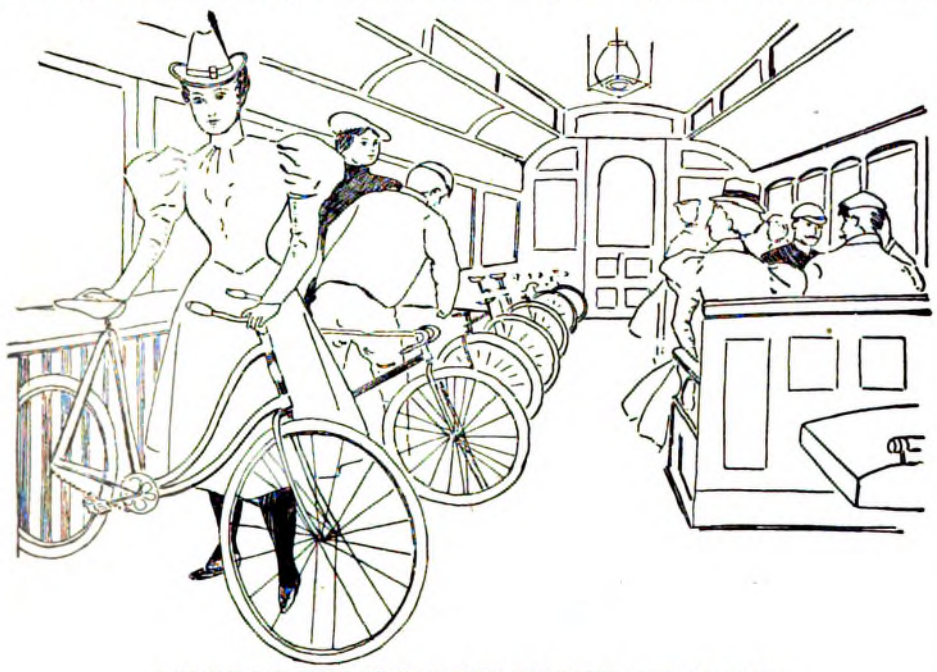
CONDUCTED BY EVERETT G. WHEELMAN.



ALTHOUGH it is yet early in the season, manufacturers have already begun their models for the year. The various improvements which have been effected in the wheel during the past two seasons have not left very wide room for improvement in the product of 1899. Although the bevel gear has attained limited popularity, the old style of crank, sprocket and chain will still characterize the wheel. The general frame lines of last year's models will be maintained, although there may be reaction on the part of certain makers against the excessively short head. The short head, it is claimed by some, has been the cause of many frames getting twisted out of alignment because the lower tube running up from the bottom brackets at such a sharp angle there is more sway in the rear section of the machine. The rear wheel does not follow so quickly, and in turning corners sharply or steering through sand the twist on the frame is apt to be serious. This proposition, though, is not generally considered to be of much importance, and, as a rule, the dropped crank hangers and low heads will be retained.

The complaint on the part of some riders against the increased weight of roadsters and their efforts to bring wheels back to a pound or two nearer the scale of 1895 will pass unheeded, for the reason that, with the reduced prices prevailing, manufacturers cannot afford to take such risks on their guarantee as formerly. Lowering the weight of bicycles would mean a slightly increased cost of production and a decrease in the factor of safety. The lighter the wheels, the more liability to breakage, and necessarily an increase in the claims upon the producers for renewals of parts. As a matter of fact, the 1899 product is liable to be a half to one pound heavier than last year's. D-shaped rear forks and back stays will be retained.

Half a dozen makers, it is now known, will make up part of their stock with thirty-inch wheels, which annoys a few of the others, because with wheels thirty inches in diameter frame lines would have to be so altered that it means a complete change of patterns, with the consequent expense of new tools. This annoyance is felt because of the bare possibility of the thirty-inch man creating a demand and will not feel that he is carrying unnecessary weight. One who rides for pleasure will need a strong wheel, yet he is the rider who wants a light one. One of the most important questions to be settled, then, is the weight. As I have said, the wheels this year weigh more than they did last season, and are two or three pounds heavier than the wheels of the year before last; and it has been found by the experience of two seasons, that about twenty-five pounds is the lightest weight that is desirable in a road wheel.

A wheel should be selected with reference to what will be required of it at critical moments, instead of what it can do on an average, for no one cares to risk a long walk home with a broken machine on his shoulder. There is a tendency toward lower frames this year, the crank hanger being below a line drawn between the hubs of the two wheels. It is claimed that this is a gain in power, and certainly the beginner hasn't so far to fall from the saddle. Probably the most satisfactory saddle will be of the anatomical pattern, of which the Christy is the pioneer. In tires there are several good makes, but the single tube is now the favorite. When it comes to accessories, the purchaser finds any number of good things, new and old. In the matter of accessories it can be said that they should be selected with the same care as the wheel itself. Of lamps it may be said that a new thing at the show this year, and one which shows an improvement over all others, is one that has a swinging bracket and stands perpendicular, even when the wheel is laid on one side.

The new cushion frame device is totally unlike former so-called spring frames. There is no teetering or rebounding. It is a comfortable seat on the saddle at all times. There is no losing of pedals, no loss of power, and it is claimed to be a much faster frame than the rigid frame. Those who have ridden over rough roads and cobblestones will appreciate this new invention, because it permits them to ride on any kind of a road without jolting or jarring. In jumping car tracks and any kind of reasonable obstructions there is no loss of speed. In construction the new cushion frame is simple and effective. No change whatever is made in the general lines of the frame, the cushion action being entirely concealed in the tubing over the rear wheel. The device proper is composed of pneumatic telescoping tubes, finding a market not open to the rest. As cycles with thirty-inch wheels are necessarily bigger and heavier, and, being more costly to make, are held at higher prices, they are not likely to appeal to the scorching element or to the great middle class of buyers who want medium prices. Large-sized riders who have large purses and exclusive ideas are apt to furnish the chief market for this type of cycle, and it is in recognition of these conditions that the majority of makers are holding aloof from the experiment. The fact that the larger the wheel the less vibration there is for the frame and the rider is about the strongest virtue in the thirty-inch wheels, although it is true, also, that the increased size of the frame permits of a greater drop at the crank hanger.

It is worth noting that there seems to be an increase in the number of those who ride the bicycle for pleasure and recreation—in other words, tourist riders. That manufacturers are recognizing the claims of this class of riders is apparent from the number of designs of "road wheels" which are shown in their catalogues. It is recognized by all the manufacturers that there is no one "best" bicycle. The sensible rider will no more seek a road wheel on which he can ride track races than he would of buying a dray horse which should also be a racer. While each manufacturer may claim that the wheels which he makes are the best in their class, he has found it necessary to make different classes according to the needs of the rider. The prospective purchaser, therefore, must first decide for what purpose he wishes a bicycle, and having settled that point, he can spend half a day profitably in examining models at different places.

To begin with, it is presumed that the buyer is looking for a wheel which will be generally serviceable; that is to say, one that will be firm and heavy enough to stand the wear and tear of country roads and rough city pavements, and yet will be light enough so that he working one within another. The innermost tube contains a graduated spiral steel spring within the telescoping tubes, sustaining the thrust of the rider when crossing obstructions. The air also serves to assist the spring and return the rider to a normal position without any tendency to an upward throw, no sudden jolt; a nice, easy motion that makes riding a pleasure. The air used in the tubes is always normal. Its action is absolutely automatic, and no pumping is required as with the pneumatic tire.

As to prices, it may be said that one can get a bicycle at almost any price, and as a rule, will get what he pays for. There is a tendency among the manufacturers to bring the price nearer the cost of production, and recognizing that inevitably the law of supply and demand must govern, manufacturers of chainless wheels have lowered the prices to $75, from $125 of last year. In doing this the manufacturers claim they have not cheapened their wheels, but believe that the reduced price for a "standard, high-grade" wheel will increase their sales enough to make up the difference, and have accepted the verdict of the people who declare that "$100 is too much for a bicycle."

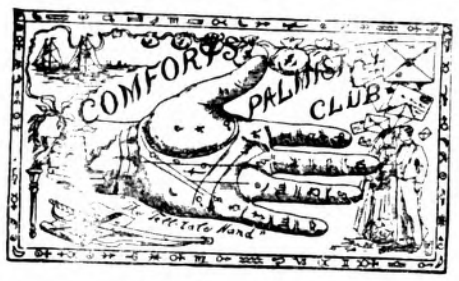
"THAT NOBLE ANIMAL, THE HORSE." YOU WANT IT.



THE GREATEST and BEST BOOK EVER WRITTEN on HORSES.

A Gold Mine of Interest and Information by Which You Save Dollars.

Prof. Oscar Gleason, the greatest horse owner, trainer and breaker that ever lived in America has at last consented to write a book on the Horse. We have made arrangement to furnish copies of this valuable work to all lovers of horses, and we call your attention to the great value of this unparalleled work which should be in every home and stable in the land. Gleason's Horse Book is a large handsomely bound book of over 400 pages, printed on pure white paper in large, clear type, bound in colored covers and richly and elegantly illustrated with 186 full plates and illustrations drawn by special artists. It is the most complete horse book ever published, produced under the direction of the United States Government Veterinary Surgeon. In this book Prof. Gleason has given to the world for the first time his wonderful methods of training and treating horses. It contains chapters on History, Education, Teaching Tricks, How to Buy, Feeding, Breeding, Breaking and Taming, How to Detect Unsoundness, Care, Complete Instructions in Proper Horse shoeing and one Invaluable Study of the Diseases and Treatment of the animal. This part alone is worth many times the value of the book and will save horse owners hundreds of dollars every year. It is a colossal compendium of facts every person ought to know who is in any way interested in horses. Nothing left out. Clear, Concise and Captivating. Order one to-day and you will never regret it; it is a whole Library on Horses in itself. Gleason's Horse Book is found in the libraries of the wealthy and has always been sold as high as $3.00 a volume until now.

SEE HOW TO GET IT. To introduce our monthly paper into homes where an interest is taken in horses we will send a copy of Prof. Gleason's Horse Book, described above, to every person who will send thirty-three cents to pay all shipping charges and for a trial six months' subscription to our paper. Great Club Premium. If you will get up a club of only two yearly serbeibers to this paper at the special trial subscription price of 25 cents each we will send you the book as a free premium.

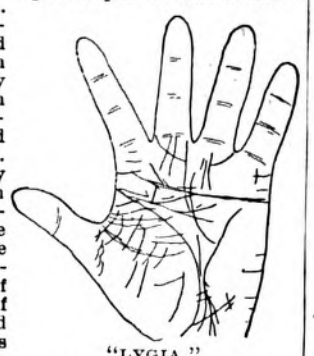
CONDUCTED BY DIGITUS.

IT seems necessary to call attention again to the rules that govern this department; especially the conditions for obtaining a reading here. Please remember that all applicants must send in four new subscribers with the price of the yearly subscription in every case. Also, the name of the sender must be given in the same package as the impressions, for purposes of identification; otherwise they will not be read at all.

The first hand to be read this month belongs to "May S," and a very complicated hand, having many broken and fine lines. It denotes a very nervous and highly sensitive person, one who will see many changes in life. Most of these, however, will be for the better, as there is a steady advance throughout life, which will be long and successful. This person has great tact and strong will power. She can gain great power over the masses, and if she adopts a public career will be remarkably successful in it. She is fond of music and of art, but if she adopts the stage or the lecture platform will find she has made no mistake, although she will meet with some obstacles at first. She will meet with opposition from her own people during the earlier part of her career, but she will persevere and will end with both fame and money. She will be popular with the opposite sex, but her mind is really set on something more than love and matrimony, and she will not make these her first object in life. These good things will come, however, in their own good time. She will receive the most admiration from men from thirty to forty and her most serious love affairs will come then. She is a very ambitious woman, and her "dreams will all come true." That is, she will be successful and by the time she is forty-five will be a very distinguished woman. If she is young now this may seem a long time to wait, but remember that no one has ever yet achieved distinction without working a long time for it, and that honors cheaply won are not prized at all. There is a great deal of good in this hand and a highly artistic temperament. If anything "May S." lacks in courage to go ahead on her own lines. She is bound down too much to the opinions of others. Perseverance and the courage of her own convictions are what she needs to cultivate. Do not be easily discouraged, for there is every indication of success; so whatever you make up your mind that you want to do or to be in life, that go to work at with a will. With such a hand as this there is no such word as "fail."

"MAY S."

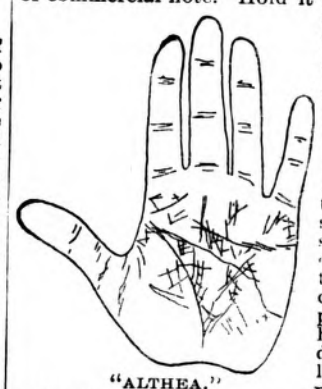


"Inventor" is the next to come under our inspection this month. This hand shows wonderful inventive genius. This is a straightforward nature, one that makes many friends and few enemies. In early life she was bound down by the rules of some one else older than she, and she has felt the lack of self confidence ever since; but she has found her own footing now and loves to study up new improvements for the good of her kind. She will turn this to good account and will succeed as an inventor. She ought to patent all her inventions and so protect her own ideas and reap the benefits of them herself; otherwise she will be liable to encounter infringements and troubles of that nature. She will marry but once and that about the age of thirty. I cannot tell by the impression before me whether she will have children or not. I should judge not, however. She will be successful for the most part, but will not live to a very great age, that is not beyond the age of sixty or so. She has great tact and will always make herself useful to the community where she lives. Her life will be spent in the same vicinity, although she will travel somewhat during the earlier part. Her inventions will prove lucrative in some degree, though she will never be very wealthy.

"INVENTOR."

"Lygia's" hand is of a very different type. She will marry young and be quite happy for ten or twelve years. Then she will be left a widow and will marry again when she is about the age of thirty-five. I think her second husband will outlive her. She has a very amiable, sweet disposition and has hosts of friends. She is imaginative, fond of reading, of music and pictures. The opposite sex are quite devoted to her and always will be, as this is the sort of women that men adore. She is fascinating in her manners and witty in conversation, understanding the art of making each hearer feel that she listens with the deepest interest to what he has to say. In short, she is sympathetic with every one who comes into her circle. She will have one or two children who will love her devotedly. On the whole this hand indicates a happy and beloved person if not a great career.

"Althea" has a hand indicating a great deal of character and promise for the future. It is a hand with exceptionally good lines in many respects; strongly marked and indicative of success. She is a person of great tact, good judgment, and is well fitted to get along with other people. In whatever dealings she has with others she will be gracious, tactful and helpful. She is of a philosophical turn of mind and scientific. She is fond of scientific studies and will succeed in any that she may undertake. In medicine especially she will find her vocation. There are many lines rising from the life line, especially up to the age of fifty. These all indicate success, and some of them success of the most marked character. She is very ambitious, and the star on Jupiter indicates that she will succeed in her ambitions. She will have some hard battles to fight, however, before she wins success, and these will all come between the ages of twenty-five and forty-five. She is, however, fitted to fight all the battles that are necessary to win success, as she has perseverance, courage and energy and she will not give up when she undertakes a thing. On this account she will succeed, and will become distinguished even in some branches which she undertakes. There will be one journey in her life, about middle life, which will contribute to her success and will probably extend into foreign lands. She will go abroad to study, or in some way connected with her business or profession. It will be a very successful trip, as in fact all that she undertakes contributes in the end to her success; although there may be some fighting of obstacles to do before she wins success. I think she will marry twice, and the last marriage will be more successful and perhaps happier than the first, although there are no indications of serious unhappiness which she does not overcome. I am much pleased with this hand and would encourage the owner of it to go forward in her scientific studies and to carry them on as far as possible as she has the qualities for success in a marked degree.



"LYGIA."

Several hands come to me in plaster of paris which is apt to crack and break up, and in putty which almost invariably peels off. Smoked paper impressions are far preferable to any other if properly treated with fixatif. The latter is a preparation of diluted gum arabic, which can be obtained at any druggist's or wherever artists' materials are sold. It is to be sprayed over the fresh impressions with an atomizer.

I will start off the new year by repeating the directions for taking impressions, and I wish you would all pay close heed to them.

Take a large sheet of white paper, legal cap or commercial note. Hold it carefully over an oil or spirit lamp, or better yet, a lighted candle. Hold it near enough the flame so that the smoke will leave a fine black deposit without burning the paper. When the paper is well smoked, lay it, smoked-side up on a flat board or table (without a cloth). Then place the right hand, palm downward, firmly on the paper, pressing hard without moving it a hair's breadth. Hold it so a minute, then take up quickly without disturbing in the least the impressions made. Have ready some artists' fixatif (procurable at any store where artists' materials are kept) in an atomizer. With the latter squeeze sufficient of the fixatif over the impression made to keep it from rubbing. This gives an indelible impression.

"ALTHEA."

Strange New Shrub that Cures Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc.—Free.

We have previously described the new botanic discovery, Alkavis, which proves a specific cure for diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or disorder of the Kidneys or urinary organs. It is now stated that Alkavis is a product of the well-known Kava-Kava Shrub, and is a specific cure for these diseases, just as quinine is for malaria. Hon. R. C. Wood of Lowell, Ind., writes that in four weeks Alkavis cured him of Rheumatism and Kidney and bladder disease of ten years' standing, and Rev. Thomas M. Owen, of West Pawlet, Vt., gives similar testimony. Many ladies also testify to its wonderful curative powers in disorders peculiar to womanhood. The only importers of Alkavis so far are the Church Kidney Cure Co., of 409 Fourth Avenue, New York, and they are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free treatment of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of COMFORT, who is a sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disorder, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, difficult or too frequent passing water, or other affliction due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all sufferers to send their names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavis free. It is sent to you entirely free, to prove its wonderful curative power.

Now that we have actually reached "fin-de-siecle" we hear nothing of the phrase that answered for every situation in life a year ago. Worn out before it actually had the right to live! 1899 is "close of the century" but no one says it in French.

"A Happy New Year!" The phrase seems stereotyped but a mental review of the situation at the opening of 1899 warrants the reality of the fulfillment. Peace within our borders, prosperity at our gates and the last year of the century suggesting a promise for the future. A "Happy New Year" in very truth.

One of the most popular plays for some years was a farcical affair named "Too Much Johnson." A glance at some curios in the line of statistics would incline a whimsical observer to the idea that the title might have originated in a knowledge of Chicago statistics. The prevalence of certain names is indicated in this table and Chicago enjoys the proud distinction of being the only large city that has not an excess of Smiths over every other name in the calendar. Chicago has more Johnsons than citizens of any other name.

France furnishes entertainment to the other nations of Europe of the continuous variety order. From rapid changes in her form of government she has grown to rapid changes in the parties administrating government. Volatile, fickle, easily excited, passionate and willful has been the France of the last twenty-five years. The close student of affairs can however discern signs of growing moral steadiness in the attitude of France during the last few months. It was the saner part of the French people who insisted and forced a revision of the famous Dreyfus affair. With the press and people of Europe clamoring and seemingly endeavoring to bring on a conflict, France possessed a calm course in the Fashoda matter. Whether a republican form of government can be a success with the Latin races is an open question. France has not yet answered it in the affirmative, but a growing strength in the moral fiber of her people has been noted in the last two points of difficulty that the government has been obliged to settle.

Sometimes an almost forgotten voice from the past sounds like a prophecy when heard through the medium of the present. In 1584, Richard Hakluyt wrote one of the first English books concerning America. The object was to interest Queen Elizabeth in the new lands. Spain and England were then on the verge of war. The treasure that made Spain the leading nation of the world came largely from America. Hakluyt pointed out to the queen that the wisest move was to deprive Philip of his West Indian possessions. He says: "If you touch him in the Indies, you touch the apple of his eyes, for to take away his treasure which he hath at most out of his West Indies, his olde bandes of souldiers well soone be dissolved, his purpose defeated, his pride abated and his tyranne utterly suppressed. He shall be left bare as Esop's crawe." Three hundred and fourteen years have passed since those meaning words were uttered. During all that time the West Indies have continued to pour riches into the coffers of Spain. It was not England but England's great daughter that at last has left Spain "bare as Esop's crawe". In this same connection the comment of an early traveler upon the national and inevitable commercial relations between the United States and the Philippines is another seeming prediction that has come true.

Cornell University has inaugurated a movement commendable in its purpose and far reaching in its results. The College of Agriculture has noted with regret the growing tendency of the young people to leave farm or country life and to flock to the cities. It has been thought that this was not altogether due to the desire to escape the hard struggle of country life. The average boy upon the farm has hours of leisure when the lad employed in the city has minutes. It is a harder mental and physical task to sustain existence in the city than in the country. The attraction of the city lies in the many interests and amusements that it furnishes so liberally to its citizens. Cornell University wishes to make country life as interesting to the people living there as city life is to the town dwellers. There is a living, breathing world about the dweller in the country but he has not been trained to observe it. Plants, birds, flowers, insects, all tell a story of wonderful interest but even the alphabet of this thrilling story is unknown to the people best placed to read it. With the purpose of making "Nature Study" a part of the everyday life of the people, Cornell has sent a bright young woman familiar with every detail of national science into each meeting of teachers in the state. She carries specimens with her and in a simple, direct, forcible manner she interests the teachers in the subject matter that God has placed all around them. Through the 30,000 teachers of the state it is believed the children can be trained to an observation that will add a new interest to their lives and a new element of beauty and kindness to their development into men and women. Cornell also sends out free printed matter to all interested in Nature Study. More than a thousand teachers a month are sending in requests for this material. The movement is one of great educational and popular interest. Aside from the immediate effect upon the individual child whose senses are trained by this observation of reality, is this element of making country life attractive.

Each year brings some new development in altruistic movements. People are struggling to solve the problem not alone of how to live but of how to live well. The man who has any plan or idea that looks towards the better use of life finds eager listeners. One of the latest developments of this line of work is the People's Institute of New York City. It numbers among its incorporators and advisory, names that have long been prominent in all the philosophical and philanthropical work of the last decade. A series of free lectures are planned to continue from November until May. The larger number of these are to be held in the great hall of Cooper Union. Those in all lines of work who have attained prominence are in the list of speakers, leading members of the faculty of universities, men prominent in labor or social reform or any one who has a message to give to man. The Monday lectures are upon Nineteenth Century History and include a discussion of the place of each of the Great Powers in the history of the century. The Friday programme is upon Present Problems and the list of lectures indicate the idea of the directors as to what the problems of the day are. Among the lectures are: "Our New Territories and the Problems They Offer;" Lyman Abbott speaks upon "Our New Responsibilities" and Titus Coan speaks upon Hawaii as he is the author of several books on the subject; "Bolivar and the Spanish American War of Independence," "Cuba and Porto Rico," "The Philippines," "The Philippines and a Colonial Policy," and "What We May Learn from Spain" are among other topics. Booker Washington speaks upon "Race Problem in the United States." Samuel Gompero speaks upon "The Rough Struggle and the Noble Aspirations of Labor." Edward Everett Hale speaks upon "Emerson as an Interpreter of Life Problems." These lectures are followed by discussion. They are designed for the people. No man is too elevated in station or rich in purse or advanced intellectually to be beyond the helpful influence of these vivid presentations of the life of the century. On the other hand no laborer or even wanderer in the streets of the city is excluded. The Institute aims to show first "the brotherhood of man" and the unity of human life and effort. It is a great work and an interesting development of the helpful hopeful spirit of the century. Long life to the People's Institute.

The year just closing has been one of the greatest moment to the United States. The turning point of the roads seems to have been reached but we have not yet gone far enough in the new path to determine with what success or ill we shall tread it or where its end may lie. One year ago the man who should have predicted that the United States within a year would acquire possessions on the opposite side of the world would have been considered a madman. Many of the most conservative of our thinkers and students do not favor the new doctrine of colonial expansion. They point to the fact that we as a nation have not made a brilliant success of our treatment of the Indian and neither have we yet solved the race problem presented in the South. Incidentally both those alien races are within the government of the national or state laws. The great mass of the American people are however cheerfully optimistic. In spite of the fact that the Anglo Saxon race from the time of its earliest contact with "Indians" and throughout its varied experiences with "lesser breeds without the law" has not been particularly successful with savage races, they anticipate few difficulties with the savage millions that will be dependent upon them. It is a problem too deep to solve by surmise or plausible probabilities. It is a problem that will tax the powers of the nation for years to come. It will not be successfully solved in this generation or the next. We may feel joy at our magnificent territorial expansion but we must feel solemn and weighty obligation. Theories must become acts when the Philippines are ours. The men at the head of affairs will have responsibilities greater even than those of the founders of this republic. We can only reassure ourselves by turning from the heavy responsibility and the puzzling new questions and realizing that the great nation that has assumed them is honest, earnest, progressive and buoyant with a belief in itself. Many people have urged that in order to be consistent this country could not avail itself of the territory it had conquered. We entered the war to force Spain to a right course in Cuban matters and we leave it with a new doctrine of imperialism and of territorial expansion contrary to all precedents of our government. In regard to this last claim it might be considered that the United States is too young a nation to have set all the precedents that will influence its history. We are only ten years past the century mark as a nation, and the precedents of Washington's administration are yet new in the face of the lengthy history of other nations. We have a precedent for a change of motive in our wars. Our great war of independence was not entered for that purpose. For over a year the Continental Army was fighting for the principle "no taxation without representation." It was only after over a year of fighting that we determined to change the battle to a war for independence. Patrick Henry and even Washington himself were not convinced of the wisdom of that change of motive but both lived to heartily endorse it. The Civil War was entered upon solely to demonstrate the principle "No Secession" but it ended in "No Slavery." We have been able to meet the war issues that were unexpected and unpremeditated—and we can do so again.

THE SEASON OF MUSIC.

Entertainments in the Cities in Full Swing.

How the Art has Grown in the Country Through Popular Methods.

There has never been a year when the musical city organizations have been doing so much and planning so many of the popular musical evenings as the present one. All kinds of evening entertainments as well as afternoon gatherings are being held to cultivate and encourage the growing taste for musical pleasure. The growth of popular concerts of mixed vocal and instrumental music is something phenomenal, and almost every city or town that boasts of an orchestra, a musical club or even a Brass band has arranged a series of popular evening concerts.

Nothing pleases more at all of these entertainments than the productions written in march time. We have pointed out frequently how outward affairs have always influenced the character of popular music and just now when our country is emerging from a great war the hearts of our people more readily respond to anything having the martial air. For this reason every march having what is called a "military swing" to it catches instantly the popular favor, and this same favor is extended to all songs on the stage in the same military tenor.

The military spirit which comes to every country once every generation is in full flood in America and the whole popular taste trends in that direction in every popular fancy or fad. Throughout the autumn the various meetings of semi-military organizations such as the Knights Templar, Knights of Pythias and many other large bodies have given ample opportunity for the display of military enthusiasm in marching, parading etc. Probably no finer sight could be imagined than the great parade of Knights Templar at Pittsburg last October on the occasion of their triennial conclave. As usual the musical composers were alive to the occasion with many creditable compositions; but only one had that great merit which will make it permanently popular.

We refer to the Red Cross March published in this number by permission of S. Hamilton, Pittsburg, Pa., and written by William C. Hamilton of the same city. On this grand occasion when nearly twenty thousand knights marched in the parade, and when fully four hundred thousand people visited the city no one air received such honor and attention as the march now published on this page. Its success was instantaneous and the first edition of 5000, much to the surprise of its owners, was sold with phenomenal rapidity.

The march was written in honor of the Tancred Commandery of Pittsburg and was the official march of the escort of the Grand Commander of the United States and was played by many of the other bands, along almost the entire route of the parade, eight miles. It also headed every official program at the different headquarters wherever dances were in order or orchestras and bands were used and its resulting sale in sheet form was a surprise to all who know the difficulties of introducing a new musical gem.

It is pleasant to remember that as the musical art is becoming more generally known and appreciated among the people, modern methods advanced as in any other field are taking the place of the old-fashioned ways that seem to have always prevailed in the publication of music. The demand makes competition in production; and that in turn leads to lower prices. This is why the old high prices are gradually disappearing; it is this that places the best sheet music in the hands of the poor as well as the rich; it is this that allows any person with a natural taste for music to be no longer debarred from its pleasures on account of excessive cost. The old day of high prices is slowly passing and the new one of good material at reasonable rates is with us.

Nothing has more helped in this great advance of musical culture among the masses than the course that COMFORT has adopted in putting out the very best music in sheet form at the lowest possible price. Instead of paying a dollar or a half dollar for a single sheet of music, under COMFORT'S great mutual benefit plan the music lover receives the very best in full size words, notes and sheet for a trifle above the cost of postage. Often people who have not taken advantage of the wonderful offer doubt what is promised. We can only say we will gladly refund the money should the music not prove on examination exactly what we promise. "Think I have a bargain," says Frank H. Camp, 1110 Madison St., St. Louis, a man living right in one of the largest cities of the Union, and right where great city bargains offer temptations.

"It is perfectly satisfactory. I am very much obliged to you for the prompt delivery," writes Mrs. W. C. Davis, Richmond, Va. Another city inhabitant that knows what a music bargain means. So you see it is appreciated everywhere. "The music is much better than I expected and is gotten up much better than some I have paid 40 cents to 75 cents for," writes Will S. Catlin, Blairsville, Pa., after testing the offer. "I got music that was cheap but I never struck such a sale as this," is the testimony of Lucia Robbins, Box 44, Waverly, Mo. And so we might go on indefinitely copying the words of delighted people who have tried our plan.

On another page will be found a long list of varied music which forms as a whole the choicest and best collection of music ever offered the public. Every piece is a selected gem and as a whole they form a grand lot. The most wonderful feature is the almost ridiculously low price you get the music at under the offer. Even if you do not want it yourself, you have hundreds of friends who would appreciate your kindness if you would use the offer and give them the music; or, if you cannot do that, at least oblige them by showing them this copy of COMFORT and asking them to read the list and the offer. Remember we guarantee satisfaction.

Our previous offers have had many pieces but in this one are a lot of new ones of great beauty and undoubted merit, among which we mention: 69, Flirting in the Starlight, a beautiful waltz; 185, Her Bright Smile Haunts Me Still, ever popular; 74, In Sweet September; 188, In the Starlight. Both of which are gems. These and any of the others will please those who are looking for a bargain in music, such as was never before heard of.

AUSTRALIA.

AUSTRALIA has been called a "fossil continent" because it presents types of life which have perished or become insignificant elsewhere. About the beginning of the Tartary period of geology a convulsion of nature severed the connection which at one time existed between Australia and Asia, and from that time the former has been left to develop herself. Wallace's Line, a belt of deep sea that cuts through the Malay Archipelago, and all the fauna south of this line, except many of the birds and a few animals that have been carried there recently, are of a special and characteristic type. At the time of the severance small creatures of the marsupial or kangaroo type prevailed all over the world. In Australia these have developed slowly and undisturbed. In the rest of the world they were obliged to give way before stronger animals, till at length no advanced marsupial is left, with the exception of the opossum. The hairy birds such as the apteryx, belonging to a type extinct elsewhere, and finally much of the vegetation—the gum trees, the casuarinas and the wiry undergrowth—is a survival from the floras of past geological ages.

HOW many women realize that not less than ten million birds are killed every year that their hats may be decorated? Not only is this cruel, and many million nestlings thus left to starve,—but it also leaves destructive insects without an enemy, to destroy whole crops and annoy farmers, cattle and horses. The aigrette is taken from the female heron, and grows only when she has young,—therefore when this is taken a whole family of young are left without a protector and thus perish. Much has been done to decrease this needless slaughter of innocents, but much more might be done if every woman in the land would content herself with ribbons, flowers, velvets, ostrich plumes and all the long array of beautiful trimmings, instead of buying birds and their wings.

PEACE WITH SPAIN.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

AT last the long considered treaty of peace between America and Spain has actually been signed by the Commissioners of the two countries holding the conference in Paris. As our readers will remember, COMFORT a short time ago described the method by which the protocol of peace was signed at Washington by our Secretary of State, W. H. Day, and by M. Cambon, the French Ambassador, acting for Spain. This protocol, or preliminary articles of peace provided for the meeting of the joint Commissioners at Paris to settle definitely the formal and final terms of the treaty. This now comes before the United States Senate for ratification and will need a two-thirds vote for acceptance, which it will undoubtedly have, as no party will seriously oppose its acceptance and so discredit the country's representation.

Until the administration shall make public the terms of the treaty its exact contents cannot be given, but there is no reasonable doubt for believing that the reports sent by the great news-gathering unions to the newspapers are spoken by card; and, that the terms there appearing are reasonably accurate. On Saturday December 10th, the Commission met for the last time at half-past three in the afternoon. At that hour the treaty had not been entirely engrossed and was brought into the session in sections as rapidly as copied.

At this historic meeting, which signalled the end of Spanish rule in the New World, the Americans appeared first, and, half an hour later were followed by the Spaniards, with whom they shook hands; but this did not relieve the Spaniards of the look of excessive solemnity and care that gave a funereal appearance to the occasion. After a careful reading of the treaty and a recess, the signatures were affixed to the important document at quarter to nine o'clock in the evening.

A slightly amusing fact came from the great contest among friends and relatives of the Americans for the possession of the pens with which the signatures to the treaty were written. It is told that some of the Americans provided themselves with very handsome ones for this purpose; but the Spaniards, who appeared unaffected by the souvenir craze and were absolutely indifferent contented themselves with the ordinary quill pens which were strewn upon the table. No sooner had Senor Montero Rios, the Chairman of the Spanish Commissioners affixed his signature than an American interpreter requested him for the pen, saying:

"Have you any desire to preserve the pen with which you will sign?"

"Not in the slightest," said the Spaniard, with a courtly salute to the interpreter, at the same time handing him the quill, with which he had signed the famous document which had been prepared by Secretary Moore for the Americans and Secretary Senor Villarutia for the Spaniards, and which appeared in parallel columns in the two languages in every copy.

The treaty which was finally signed as given to the representatives of the press, although not in accurate form, is as follows: Article 1 provides for the relinquishment of Cuba; article 2, provides for the cession of Porto Rico; article 3, provides for the cession of the Philippines for $20,000,000 as a compensation; article 4, embraces the plans for the cession of the Philippines, including the return of Spanish prisoners in the parts of Tagalos; article 5, deals with the cession of the barracks, war material, arms, stores, buildings and all property appertaining to the Spanish administration in the Philippines; article 6, is a renunciation by both nations of their respective claims against each other and the citizens of others; article 7, grants to Spanish trade and shipping in the Philippines the same treatment as American trade for a period of 10 years. Article 8, provides for the release of all prisoners of war held by Spain and of all prisoners held by her for political offenses committed in the colonies acquired by the United States; article 9, guarantees the legal rights of Spaniards remaining in Cuba; article 10, establishes religious freedom in the Philippines and guarantees to all churches equal rights; article 11, provides for the composition of courts and other tribunals in Porto Rico and Cuba; article 12, provides for the administration of justice in Porto Rico and Cuba; article 13, provides for the continuance for five years of Spanish copyrights in the ceded territories; article 15, grants to Spanish commerce in Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines, the same treatment as to American for 10 years. Spanish shipping to be treated as coasting vessels; article 16, stipulates that the obligation of the United States to Spanish citizens and property in Cuba shall terminate with the withdrawal of the United States authorities from the island; article 17, provides that the treaty must be ratified and within six months from date of signing by the respective governments in order to be binding.

This war between the United States and Spain began April 21, 1898, the date being named in the act of Congress as April 25, declaring state of war existed. The protocol of of peace was signed August 12. Actual fighting lasted 114 days, while from the beginning of the war to the signing of peace, December 10, the entire period was 233 days. The results of the war in transfer of valuable colonies and territory are probably unequaled in history.

The possession of the Philippines is something that was never considered in the list of possibilities a year ago. At that time our readers will remember that the entire talk was of the sufferings of the Cubans through the misrule of the Spaniards. If war must come it was to be entirely on the ground of humanity, and not of conquest. It is doubtful if outside a few persons, then called "Jingoes" in derision, there were a handful of Americans who had the slightest wish or desire for colonial possessions. The whole course of the nation for more than a century had been founded on the Monroe Doctrine which was simply an announcement that while we would not meddle with the affairs of European nations, American governments were to be left to themselves without European intervention in their affairs.

Admiral Dewey's wonderful victory in reality captured for us Manila and it became evident from that time that the whole archipelago would come to us through force of conquest. Americans at first paid little attention and it was only on the apparent display of the intention of Germany to take a hand in the disposition of the islands that it became evident that the Union did not intend to let go what it had captured. It seems evident to COMFORT that the feelings of the Americans have undergone a most remarkable change relative to expansion, and that a people who a year ago would not have dreamed of territorial acquisition are now looking on eagerly in foreign questions, and so far as the great East is concerned have now a personal interest in affairs. The pleasant feeling resulting from England's marked position taken in our favor throughout the war has caused us to read with deeper interest the affairs of the world in which she is interested. There will always be croakers and conservatives who would prevent the onward march of events. In the Revolution we had Tories; in the war of 1812, Anti-war party men; in the Mexican War, non-expansionists; in the Civil War, "Copperheads;" in the present war we find the same element again appearing in a new form and "agin the government." Having no responsibility it is unnecessary for this element to point out what should be done, but merely criticism of passing events. Trusting in God and His infinite wisdom, this great American Republic, standing as it always has for freedom and the rights of man, will go forward carrying to the heathen nations of the sea the sweet gospel of liberty for every man.

What the final effect on Spain will be, no person can at present prophesy. Throughout the war there has been discontent and rioting in every part of the kingdom; and only the feeling that there was hope to win against the United States has caused any united action on the part of the Spaniards. When the overwhelming success of the United States showed that there was no longer any hope for a successful issue for the kingdom, the spirit of the people gave way to a state of sullenness and despair. One thing was made certain, and that was that no faction or person would rob Sagasta of the discredit of the settlement of peace; and notwithstanding the frequent threats of the overthrow of the ministry nothing has been done, but all have awaited what is to them humiliating peace.

The entire kingdom is a hotbed of sedition, conspiracy and rebellion. The Carlists, who desire the monarchy continued but under the head of Don Carlos, are very active and have been found secreting arms and ammunition in all parts of the kingdom. Another and almost more formidable faction are the discontented army people, who feel that the treaty is signed without giving the army a chance to show its power. Such men as General Weyler and his followers have been preaching sedition and disloyalty ever since Weyler's return from Cuba. There is still another faction who desire the establishment of a republic, but a Spanish republic is so only in name. Aside from these warring factions is a very large majority of the people who desire nothing but peaceful methods to gain a livelihood and to improve trade. The merchants believe that the country is well enough off without colonies, and that being assured of a chance to trade in their late possessions, where the language used is entirely Spanish, gives them all the privileges needed, while the Government itself will have no expense to maintain the colonies.

It will be read with much interest by all Americans that already three of the fleet which were sent to the bottom by the guns of Admiral Dewey's fleet on the first of May, have been raised and proceeded to Hong Kong under their own steam, where they will be repaired and become part of the effective force of American ships in Eastern waters. The conditions for raising these ships were much more favorable than those surrounding the sunken ships of Admiral Cervera's fleet. In the former case, the ships were sunk in the waters of a bay where storms had no effect, and where it was only easy work to raise them to the top; but on the coast of Cuba there are high tides, severe storms and a tremendous surf so that it is almost impossible to raise the ships. The raising of the Infanta Maria Teresa by Hobson was a wonderful work, and had she not met a storm on her way to Norfolk from Cuba she would have been rebuilt and been an object lesson to millions of Americans. Unfortunately she met a violent hurricane on her way, and to save their lives her crew was taken off by the accompanying tugs. It was believed at the time she sunk at once; but in her water-logged condition she was driven some forty or fifty miles to Cat Island and there beached herself. The examinations both by the Government and the wrecking parties show that she cannot be saved or even removed from where she is, and the wreckers on Bahama Keys have looted her of every available thing.

But a short time ago we related the enthusiasm of the West over President McKinley, during his visit to that section of the country. His recent Southern trip and the opening of the Peace Jubilee in Atlanta, have been the most significant ovations of modern times. The wild enthusiasm over himself, the soldiers and all pertaining to the Government, give most convincing proof of his popularity and the endorsement of his policy; but, what is better, the fuller proof that this is again a united nation and that all differences of the past have been blotted out by the present war. In the midst of this Col. Bryan resigned and again appears in the arena of National politics as a pronounced opponent of the administration and of any policy looking toward National expansion. It is believed that the silver issue being practically out of mind, Col. Bryan intends to lead his party against President McKinley with the expectation that the verdict of the American voters given in 1896 will be reversed in the election of 1900; and that in that campaign both he and President McKinley will again lead their respective parties.

Drunkenness Cured.

It is now Within the Reach of Every Woman to Save the Drunkard.

MR. JOHN M. HATTON.

Mrs. John M. Hatton of Lebanon, Ohio, said to our reporter a short time ago "I rescued my husband from the terrible liquor habit by a remedy known as Golden Specific. I used it without his knowing anything about it and cured him against his will. It is a marvelous result and only goes to show that drunkenness, when considered as a disease can be cured but when it is handled as an immoral craving susceptible to sentiment it cannot be cured. The remedy is put up by Dr. J. W. Haines, 863 Glenn Building, Cincinnati, O., and to every woman who writes him he will send a free trial package of Golden Specific so she can see what it is and how easily it can be used in tea, coffee, milk, chocolate or food, without the knowledge of the patient. I sent for the free trial of Golden Specific because it suggested that I might use it secretly in my husband's food. He had been a hard drinker for years. I tried all sorts of schemes and made every effort I could to reform him but he seemed to be entirely lost to the influence of liquor and I turned to Golden Specific more out of hope than anything else. The results were all I could have prayed for and I honestly believe this remedy will cure any drunkard no matter how depraved he may be. I am firmly convinced that if other women will send to Dr. Haines for a free trial of this noble remedy they will succeed in their efforts just as I did and thus have the dollars for the home, food, clothing and the children's education instead of their going into the till of the saloon keeper. It's certainly enough to interest every woman who in any way suffers by this horrible liquor curse to write for the free trial package and give it a test."

ELECTRICITY IS LIFE.

THE GREAT HOME HEALER.

Pain Vanishes, Blooming Health Returns at the Touch of Science.

Read of this Modern Scientific Machine that Heals, Teaches and Amuses.

Electricity no longer the master but the servant of man, represents to us light, heat and force. By these three great powers everything on earth lives and electricity means life. This grand machine is a combined motor and dynamo and gives a perfect electric organization. Most interesting and instructive of the recent products of electrical science; teaches and instructs while it amuses; young and old alike. Scientific in construction and no student or ingenious boy should be without it. Perfectly harmless, but produces no end of fun, by giving shocks to circles and many harmless tricks. FOR A HOME CURER. Doctors know almost every known disease and pain yields readily to electrical currents. The cost of electric batteries as generally sold places them far beyond reach of any but the wealthy. This Electrical Machine has been produced by the latest and most improved machinery and at nominal cost as compared with the expensive batteries formerly sold at $8, $10 or $20 each. The great improvements in machinery enables us to produce this and to offer it to you for a mere trifle. See What Electricity is Used For. There is no disease of the nerves or any bodily pain which will not yield readily to electric currents. This wonderful machine utilizes the forces of nature; drives out Rheumatic Pains, Neuralgia and every species of blood and nerve disease; Cures Weakness of every kind and nature and restores youthful health and vigor. Works like a miracle for that worn out feeling and languor and despondency and strengthening nervous system with a direct (not alternating) current, large in volume but pleasant to take, no shock or irritation. Patent switch adjusts current to weakest child or strongest man. A valuable treatise accompanies every machine shipped. We now place nature's great restorative agent, Electricity, within the reach of every sufferer rich or poor.

A Wonderful Offer to All. This Electrical Machine is needed in every home and family. We will send one to any person who will send us $1.00, and 25 cents to pay all shipping charges besides sending our great home paper, COMFORT, subscription paid for one year. ($1.25 for everything.)

The White Land of the North.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

WRAPPED in an eternal mantle of ice and snow lies the great white land of the North. Since the days when the Vikings ventured in their open boats to the edge of the ice, man has sought to go farther, and know more of the mystery which encircles the pole. To-day science leads her followers thither and no danger and privation is too great to be undertaken in her cause. He who has lately added to our knowledge of the northern zone and who now holds the record of "farthest north" is Dr. Fridtjof Nansen.

On the coast of Greenland, driftwood, tiny plants and soil are often found which have been proved to come from the coast of Asia. Some years ago relics were found on this shore which most conclusively were part of the Jeanette, De Long's vessel, which foundered off the north coast of Asia three years before. All these things pointed to the fact that the ice from the eastern part of the Arctic ocean drifted across or near the pole and down the coast of Greenland. It was these facts that first suggested to Dr. Nansen the novel and untried experiment of using the ice, the enemy and destroyer of all previous expeditions, as his motive power. In spite of the unpopularity of this scheme among Arctic explorers (who prophesied a sad failure), Nansen determined to make the experiment.

The Fram was built with special regard to the work it was to do, broad and solid, with smooth sides rounding out and downward so that the ice would slip down and under, and the vessel be raised instead of "nipped" in the ice. Everything was arranged for safety and comfort. An electric plant worked by a windmill gave them light. In the saloon was an excellent library, pictures and musical instruments.

In July, 1893, the Fram sailed from Norway, around North Cape, along the northern coast of Europe and Asia to the New Siberian islands, when she turned toward the north and in September came to the edge of the ice pack and anchored to a floe. The ice piled up about her and ground against her sides, but she stood firm and rose steadily until she lay in a bed of ice thirty feet thick and listing a little to one side.

The long, monotonous night now settled down upon the little colony in the Fram. The occasional visit of a bear and the constant attention to the scientific investigations made the only excitement. Grand and beautiful was that winter night. The heavens were brilliant with stars and flashing with the long streamers of the aurora borealis, now pink fading to lilac and yellow, or blue, and every moment changing shape like the glass in a kaleidoscope. At length came the sun again, bringing light and a small degree of warmth, but not the green luxuriance and flowery beauty of the temperate clime. Yet, even there the bright sun cheers as it sparkles on the great ridges of ice and makes miniature lakes in the ice where sailing with small boats is possible. By autumn Nansen had decided to leave the ship in the spring and with one companion penetrate as far into the north as possible with sledges, while the Fram and the rest of the expedition drifted according to the original plan. All the second winter was spent in preparation for this journey. Kayaks, or Esquimau canoes, were built, and trial trips were made with the dogs, and food was carefully prepared. In March 1895, Nansen and Johansen left the ship and their companions. Their outfit consisted of three sledges, two kayaks, twenty-eight dogs, and provisions for one hundred days.

Over vast expanses of ice pressed into ridges and uneven folds they journeyed. Constantly the sledges were overturned, or the skis caught in the rough ice and were broken. Day by day they neared the pole until on April 7, 1895, they paused in latitude 86 degrees, 14 minutes N. only 224 miles from the pole. They were now 174 miles nearer the end of the earth's axis than any white man had ever been. Here, however, was their limit. What a temptation to go on! To prove that the whole great polar area was an ice-covered sea, that no land existed there, for no trace of land had they found thus far. But good judgment told them to turn back and use the good weather and the light in reaching Franz Joseph Land. Now the ice opened in long lanes and they must use their kayaks. Day after day they worked their way south over and through the ice. One by one the dogs gave out and were killed. Provisions were scanty and they subsisted on walrus flesh, which was abundant. Night and day differed little and the great red sun rolled around the horizon scarcely disappearing in the twenty-four hours. Day after day they watched in vain for land until in July a few dark cliffs were sighted far away.

Imagine the feelings of the two men as they looked upon land for the first time in two years. Behind them was the vast desert of ice and snow where year after year it would be ever the same, and before them that arching white land with black rocks emerging from the snowfields. Land at last! The emblem to them of the world of men. Thirteen days more of rough going and they reached the shore of this northern coast of Franz Joseph Land. It was now too late in the year to think of reaching civilization before darkness came again, so they built a small hut of stones, roofed with walrus hide. Here all winter Nansen and Johansen lived, sleeping at night in their one long sleeping bag on the rough ground of the hut. Their provisions were now exhausted and they lived on bear's meat. For months they were unable to change their clothing or bathe their bodies, and the soot from their oil lamp (which gave but little heat) blackened their faces and their long hair and beards. When the spring came again they started off to the south. Six weeks they traveled on, when at last they were startled by the sound of the barking of dogs. Nansen pressed forward rapidly, and discovered the figure of a man—a strange man—the first he had seen in three years. It was Jackson of the Jackson-Harmsworth expedition which had wintered at Cape Flora. A hearty welcome was waiting at the little station when it was discovered who the wanderers were, and strange it must have seemed to Nansen and Johansen to step from the desert of ice and snow, from privation and hardship into the comfort of the well-kept camp at Cape Flora.

In August the Windward bore them to Norway, and great was the rejoicing at their arrival. One week latter the Fram arrived, having drifted as Nansen had expected, across the Polar Sea to the west of Spitzbergen, where it cleared the ice and steamed home.

NANSEN'S SLEDGE JOURNEY_____

Probably the most important outcome of the expedition is the proof that there is no land near the pole and that the Polar Sea is not a shallow basin, free of ice, as has been supposed, but an ice-covered ocean of unusual depth.

A $5.00 SHAVING SET FOR ONLY $1.49.

TEN MILLION MEN WILL SAVE $250,000,000.

The average man saves about twenty-five dollars a year by shaving himself and by having a good outfit, you can take comfort enough and save dollars enough to carry you over many rough places in life. We have tried to get up a practical shaving outfit for many years, but the expense of fitting out a suitable case of bang-up A No. one tools has been so great that not until a visit to Norway and Sweden revealed the fact that Swedish Razors were now the best in the world and the makers were anxious to prove it to the American people could we do so. Thus we bargained for a large lot of the best quality at very low figures. By getting the goods from different countries and buying in large lots, we have made up a case of great value at very small cost. These outfits come packed in cases eight inches long, six inches wide and five inches high. The combination consists of 1 Royal Steel Swedish Razor, single value $3.00; 1 Genuine, Horseshide, Double, Reversible, Canvass-back, Nickle-hung, Ebonized Handle Razor Strop, value $1.00; 1 Real China Shaving Mug; 1 Cake Star Shaving Soap; 1 Best Bristle, large handle Lather Brush; 1 Cake Perfumed Lump Magnesia; 1 Stick rich perfumed Cosmetic—making a grand $5.00 combination, all packed in a compact case ready for shipment. We estimated that nearly every man in the country out of necessity shaves himself at some time or other during each month and one long wait in a barber shop sometimes costs more than this whole outfit is valued at. Every man should have an outfit in the house for emergency's use at all events and we have thus got it together at a low cost so as to be able to offer the best articles at the lowest cost. Every woman should see to it that either her Father, her Husband, her Brother or her Sweetheart has one of these outfits. They make the best presents one can give to a gentleman, and you can get one free as follows: Send a club of six yearly subscribers to Illustrated Family Herald, at 25c each and we will send an outfit all charges paid, or send $1.49 in cash and we deliver it free—extending your subscription one year.

A Pig Hunt in the Dark.

until we drove him out of it, when wounded perhaps by the shot, and held by Lockjaw, we might rush in and finish him off at close quarters. As the bunch of fern in which the animal lay was small, by firing into it, H. was almost certain to hit him before long; and the event quickly verified our anticipations, for scarcely had the sharp crack of the second shot rattled away into the hills, when out shambled the great beast, evidently hit hard. The glimmer of daylight was now in the sky, and in the half light an ugly customer looked the shaggy, grizzled, high-shouldered brute. The moment he appeared a little bull terrier, near whom he emerged, rushed at him. Alas! alas! poor little "Grip." One quick jerk sideways and upwards of the powerful snout and the wretched little dog is pitched aside, and lies howling with mingling rage and agony. "Hold him, Lockjaw!" No need for the order; Grip's diversion has given him a splendid chance. In a moment his iron jaws have closed like a rat trap on the ear of his prey, and every sinew in his muscular body is tense as wire rope as he sets his feet forward and tugs backward to hold the boar. But despite all his efforts the pig is surely and steadily dragging him into the creek, where, half choked with water, the dog will be forced to relinquish his hold. There is no time to be lost; the Malay and I rush forward, and about two feet from the edge of the water I get a swinging blow with my axe at the rough monster. Impeded by the dogs, who, though all useless in such a tussle except Lockjaw, are prancing and barking round the two real combatants—I miss my aim at the animal's skull, but the keen axe striking him just behind the shoulders, goes through to his backbone with a shock that staggers him. The next minute dogs and pig are struggling in the shallow water of the creek, Lockjaw still hanging on to his deadly grip. Daggo quickly plunges in after them; the water is only up to his knees and soon the boar, faint with loss of blood and half drowned, receives the coup de grace from the Malay's keen and dexterous knife. With some difficulty Lockjaw is persuaded to loose his hold, and the huge carcass dragged out of the brook that is stained with its blood, H. and I drew a long breath as we gaze on our lifeless prize, on which prize, on which Daggo calmly sits as he recovers his wind. Poor Dennis, whose knee, it turns out, is badly sprained, limps up, and vindictively shakes his fist at his unconscious and prostrate foe; while the native, as he surveys his fellow servant, grins evidently with an unholy joy at his rival's recent discomfiture, and his present lugubrious aspect. The beast is soon skinned and cleaned, the hide on some parts of his body being nearly an inch thick. As the sun rises we carry our dismembered victim up to the house, and the pork chops have soon become a reality instead of an expectation, and so ended "A pig hunt in the dark."

I may as well add that the poor little bull terrier, though we did all that experience had taught us for him, lingered but a few hours. The sharp tusk had ripped him up like a knife, from the beginning of the flank up to the hip joint, and nothing could probably have saved him. Lockjaw, too, received a nasty wound in the shoulder, which made him limp for many a day, and added another scar to the many similar decorations he already sported as evidence of his prowess.

Petroleum as a Fuel.

IS said that petroleum is fast coming into use as a fuel in the war-ships of the great naval Powers. In 1893 Italian warships carried a supply of astaki in addition to their ordinary fuel, while many of their torpedo boats were fitted to use it exclusively. England has made great strides in the use of petroleum as a fuel, while Russia comes in as a close second. The latter country, with its enormous supplies of petroleum, finds it an exceedingly cheap and convenient fuel.

The advantages of its use as a fuel are, first—a reduction in the weight and volume of combustible material required for a given horsepower in the engines; second, the oil can be stored, at least partially, below water out of the reach of the shells; third, there is no fear of spontaneous combustion of the oil, such as occasionally occurs with coal, and being free from sulphur the oil is not likely to deteriorate the boiler shells or tubes; fourth, the operation of "firing," so difficult with coal, is extremely easy with petroleum, and once the draught is properly adjusted there is no belching of flame from the funnel of the boat to warn the enemy of its whereabouts in a night attack. The furnace doors can be kept closed also, thus avoiding the rush of cold air on the boilers, and their consequent cooling off at a critical moment.

WOMEN OF NOTE.

The wife of Li Hung Chang is said to have two thousand gowns. She has a thousand ladies in waiting.

Duse, the famous actress, was born in a railway carriage between Padua and Venice—therefore cannot know the place of her birth.

Patti has a unique fan, upon which nearly all of the European sovereigns have written their autographs, and sometimes their sentiments in addition. The Czar wrote: "Nothing brings peace like your song."

Queen Victoria has had nine children, and has lost two; she has had forty-one grandchildren and twenty-five great-grandchildren. This makes sixty-three descendents living, as eight of her grandchildren have died and two great-grandchildren.

The receipts of Queen Victoria from the government, yearly, amount to nearly $3,000,000. Of this about $600,000 goes for salaries to her household, $60,000 for charities and bounties, $96,000 for pensions and annuities and $750,000 for miscellaneous expenses. She also receives $450,000 a year from the duchy of Lancaster.

Queen Victoria's good health is without doubt due to her careful diet. She takes a light breakfast, a hearty luncheon and a substantial tea, and at nine in the evening has dinner, of which she eats very sparingly and only of the most nutritious food. When she is transacting business, Her Majesty takes a cup of beef tea between her breakfast and lunch, or a glass of milk with a beaten egg and a little sherry.

It is stated on good authority that of all the money earned by Bernhardt during her stage career, nothing remains to her but a modest dwelling on the Breton island. There she spends her days in crab-catching, fishing and shooting and forgets the words for a few months in each year. The chateau is a very primitive affair, having been at one time a fort guarded by forty men. Enormous boulders surround the house and the waves rage about them; no habitation is near, and yet the divine Sarah spends much of her time here, miles from her beloved Paris.

The personal attendants of the Czarina must be clever with the needle, to be of use when needed. The life of a lady about a court is not that of a butterfly, as some may imagine. She has to be able to read aloud well, and also to be proficient in cooking—as the every-day dinner menu is usually composed by a lady in waiting. The costume is of oriental magnificence, consisting of a white satin robe falling from the shoulders to the feet and fastened in front by buttons studded with gems. Over this a cloak of red velvet heavily embroidered with gold, is worn, and on the head rests the national Russian cap, which is called "kakochnik," made of crimson velvet thickly studded with jewels, and from the crown of which hangs a veil of white tulle. The Czarina allows no smoking among her ladies in waiting.

A White Baboon.

MOST of us are familiar with polar bears and Arctic foxes, and such as saw the sacred, so-called "white" elephant of Burmah remember how sadly disappointed they were when in the presence of this mud-colored idol. Here, however, is another animal, a baboon, that justly may be called white. Both the skin and hair of this creature are absolutely white. It does not hale from the Arctic regions but from the Transvaal where it was captured, after an exciting chase, by some Trek Boers near the Murchisa Range, Johannesburg, South Africa. The specimen is of the male species, and stands just four feet high; it is particularly restless and savage. Our picture is from a photograph taken at feeding-time.

Can you use three dollars every day? If so, see back page of this paper.

Half-past six is an excellent hour for a morning walk in Cuba.

FREED FROM FITS

SERENE MIND, HEALTHY BODY AND A JOYOUS FUTURE ASSURED.

How often a young life, bright with promise of happiness and usefulness, has been shattered and despoiled by a tendency to Fits! Early in childhood—the attacks begin. At first they take the form of convulsions; then grow more frequent, with distorted features, frothing at the mouth, convulsive movements of limbs, finally complete unconsciousness followed by physical prostration. Through years the fits continue, till at the critical age of young womanhood the attacks occur so often and with such violence that it seems human endurance must have reached its limit.

But there is HOPE—there is RELIEF—there is CURE! EPILEPTICIDE is the remedy—a great medical discovery, new enough to embody the principles of an advanced science, yet abundantly tested and proved, under widely varying circumstances, to be a POSITIVE CURE. I have had perfect success in cases as peculiar or difficult as can be imagined. All the sufferer has to do is to write for and fairly try the FREE bottle I send on request. Send me your full address.

WE GIVE THIS WATCH

FOR A CLUB OF 4.

Thirty Minutes is a short time, but many have earned one of these watches in less time than that. It is one of the very best watches for time ever offered to our readers at no matter what the price asked for it. We know, of course, there are watches that cost more money, because they are in gold or silver cases, but they will not keep any better time, simply because they cannot. This watch keeps not perfect time, we never saw the watch that did, but it keeps as near perfect time as watches usually do. We have such faith in this watch as a timekeeper that we send with every one a guarantee just as binding as that given with any watch, no matter what make. We are willing to give you this watch if you will do us a slight service, which you can easily do in an hour. We wish to increase our subscription list, and we want the assistance of every reader of this paper to that end. We do not want you to do it for nothing, we will reward you for it. You can easily secure this valuable watch if you get four subscribers to this paper, at our special subscription price of 25 cents a year each. Do this, sending us $1.00, with the names of four subscribers to this paper, and we will send our paper to each subscriber for one year, and we will send you the watch to reward you for your efforts in our behalf. Start out now and see what you can do. Remember we guarantee every watch. If you get five subscribers and send us $1.25 for the same we will also send you a nice chain. WE ARE

Searching for Sufferers

YOU MAY NOT FEEL SICK

BUT ALL HANDS POINT TO THE FACT YOU ARE NOT WELL AND WHETHER YOU BE MAN OR WOMAN YOU WILL SOON TAKE ON THIS AGONIZED LOOK.

WE CAN HELP YOU.

YOU DON'T NEED MEDICINE.

But you say you feel generally miserable or suffer with a thousand and one indescribable bad feelings, both mental and physical? Among them low spirits, nervousness, weariness, lifelessness, weakness, dizziness, feelings of fullness or bloating after eating, or sense of "goneness" or emptiness of stomach in morning, flesh soft and lacking firmness, headache, blurring of eyesight, specks floating before the eyes, nervous irritability, poor memory, chilliness, alternating with hot flushes, lassitude, throbbing, gurgling, or rumbling sensations in bowels, with heat and nipping pains occasionally, palpitation of heart, short breath on exertion, slow circulation of blood. Don't your hands and feet become cold and clammy, do you HAWK AND SPIT and expectorate greenish colored matter? IS your urine scanty or high colored and does it deposit a sediment after standing? You have pain and oppression in chest and back, pain around the loins, aching and weariness of the lower limbs, drowsiness after meals, but nervous wakefulness at night, languor in the morning and a constant feeling of dread as if something awful was about to happen.

There Is Help for You. You Can Yet Be Happy.

I have an appliance. The only way to introduce it is to let you try it FREE. You will tell others if it helps you. It is perfectly harmless. Send us your name we are looking for real sufferers and knowing it will do you good you can cure yourself without trouble or expense. This article is perfectly safe and reliable, can be worn day and night, all of the time or part of the time and in any place or spot on the body that feels sick or shows pain—it is most marvelous acting and is the greatest God-send you ever heard of. After you use it and you feel its power you will say $25 would not have prevented me from sending for it. It acts just as well on man or woman.

THE ONLY CONDITIONS.

We send one all charges paid. It is Medical and we are obliged to put on Revenue stamps. Therefore as we furnish them entirely free we simply ask you to send us TEN CENTS for mailing, etc. We trust to your honor to tell others about the cure and know many will be sold thereby. We do not ask you to send any more money unless you want others to sell at a profit after you try it. Address,

A NARROW ESCAPE.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT BY JESSIE JORDAN.

THE following truthful story, related to me by the principal actor, will serve to illustrate some of the dangers to which those brave and determined spirits, who pave the way where others may live in peace and safety, are exposed.

"About twenty years ago, a party of ex-mormons settled in one of those fertile valleys in the region of Denver. Much of the government land was unoccupied at that time, and a cattle company sent about five thousand head of cattle into this valley in charge of several cowboys.

"The lawless gang who had settled the region did not like to share the pasturage with any others, and they trumped up an accusation of horse-stealing against the cowboys, and a gang of them seized three of the boys and took them to a place where a Justice's office occupied one end of a building, and a saloon the other, upon pretence of giving them a trial.

"Previous to taking their prisoners to the Justice, they rode up to the tent occupied by the boys, filled it with bullet holes and stampeded the cattle, which scattered in every direction over the mountains and through the valleys and canyons.

"I had been invited to join in the pursuit of the alleged horse thieves, but knowing the character of the men engaged in it, I declined, saying I wanted nothing to do with vigilance committees; but when I heard that they had captured the boys, I requested them to do nothing rash or unjust, but to give them a fair trial.

"My entreaties were received with derision, and before morning the three prisoners were no more, and those remaining fled from the country and never returned. For several months the herds were allowed to remain where they were, but at the end of that time the men who had been so active in punishing the alleged crime, started out and gathered up the stock, and men who had never owned a hoof in their lives from this time became cattle men.

"I had knowledge of all these circumstances, but I was no party to the illegal proceedings and had protested against them. These facts, aided perhaps by the memory of "Mountain Meadows," made them feel unsafe while I lived and ominous threats and accusations frequently reached me.

"At length I sent word that upon a certain day I would appear at the office of the Justice, and requested that the accusation be put in legal form and a fair trial given me. At the appointed time I went there, taking five trusty companions with me. We waited till nearly dark, but not one of my accusers appeared.

"We were about ten miles from home and concluded to stay where we were till morning. Some of the boys began to patronize the bar pretty freely, and at length a young fellow employed about the establishment beckoned me to come out. I followed him a short distance from the house and he said excitedly:

"'Hardy, don't let those boys drink another drop. That whiskey is drugged, and just as sure as you come under the influence of it, you are all dead men! I was right here when those other boys were executed, and they were all in a helpless state of unconsciousness when it was done.'

"Thanking him for his timely warning, I called the boys out and cautioned them, and they all quit drinking to the apparent displeasure of the bar-tender.

"We retired to the other room and prepared to pass the night together. Four of our party lay down upon the floor to sleep, while with a trusty comrade I prepared to keep a vigilant watch.

"It must have been about three o'clock in the morning when all was silent save the regular breathing of the sleepers, that I heard the sound of stealthy footsteps outside. The light had been purposely turned low, and I cautiously approached the window and looked out into the darkness. By the dim light of the stars I saw a number of men step from the shelter of the trees and stealthily approach the house.

"They paused in the shadow of the building and held a suppressed conversation.

"'They've come,' I whispered to my companion.

"'I know it,' he answered. 'Shall I wake the boys?'

"'No,' I replied, 'they will make a noise and I want to let them think they are coming upon us unawares. Are you ready?'

"'Yes,' he answered hoarsely, but although I could detect the tremor of excitement in his voice, I knew that he was no coward.

"I could tell by the steady shuffling of muffled feet that the villains had removed their boots and were fast filling the adjoining room. There was neither lock nor bar upon the intervening door, and its only fastening, beside an ordinary latch, was a bench, which we had placed against it.

"I heard a whispered consultation, followed by the uncoiling of a rope, and our hearts beat audibly, as with every nerve strung to the utmost tension we listened to the ominous preparation, and knew that every second brought us nearer to a desperate encounter against fearful odds.

"At length some one lifted the latch and cautiously pushed against the door.

"The time had come, and in an instant I had emptied my six-shooters into it, and a scene of the wildest excitement and confusion followed.

"Suddenly startled from their slumbers, the boys sprang to their feet with excited exclamations, demanding the cause of the uproar in the adjoining room, where the cowardly mob were struggling to reach the outside door, tumbling over one another, uttering loud and angry curses in their fear and confusion, and blocking the way in their disorderly retreat, while their excitement was every instant increased by the bullets which we sent whizzing through the door.

"'Open the door and let us out among you, you cowardly pack of midnight assassins! Show your faces and let us see who you are!' shouted my companion, emphasizing every sentence with a revolver shot in the direction of the retreating desperadoes.

"In less than five minutes from the firing of the first bullet, all was silent save the excited breathing of our own men; the villains had fled from the house and sought refuge in the darkness, but with what further intentions we did not know.

"'Boys, we've had a visit from Judge Lynch and his jury; what they'll do next is impossible to tell,' I said as the last sound died away.

"'We know what we'll do if they return,' was the decisive reply, and with weapons ready for instant use, we waited for the dawn.

"But our enemies came not to fight; they expected to find defenseless men, and they made no further demonstration.

"'When are you going to try it again?' I asked the bar-keeper after daylight appeared and we stepped from the room where we had passed the night.

"The face of the man was pale with fear and guilt, but in trembling tones, he protested his innocence.

"'Don't stand there and lie! you mean, despicable sneaking cowardly coyote,' said one of the boys indignantly, 'but tell us the truth. What did they agree to give you to drug us past all power of resistance, when they came with their murderous intentions?'

"The man shook like a leaf, and still protested his innocence.

"'Are you willing that we should serve you to a dish of the same sauce that you intended for us?' asked his questioner.

"The villain sank upon his knees and begged for mercy.

"'Get up! you contemptible wretch!' I said. 'We are no cowards to murder a man when we are six to one—even if he does deserve it. But I tell you to be careful hereafter,' and we left him to reflect upon his own situation.

"This was only the beginning of my persecution. Members of that gang were upon my track for years, and may be yet for all that I know."

"I had indigestion and dyspepsia, the doctors said, but I do not know what was the matter. I only know that I almost suffered death, especially when at a delicate period, my bowels were bad, and I had such pains in my back of a morning I could hardly get out of bed. When I had taken Ripans Tabules for two weeks, as directed, I was a new person. These are facts, and my friends can say the same."

The above words are from a letter written by a young lady of Holton, La., whose cousin recommended the Tabules.

A new style packet containing TEN RIPANS TABULES in a paper carton (without glass) is now for sale at some drug stores—FOR FIVE CENTS. This low-priced sort is intended for the poor and the economical. One dozen of the five-cent cartons (120 tabules) can be had by mail by sending forty-eight cents to the RIPANS CHEMICAL COMPANY, No. 10 Spruce Street, New York—or a single carton (TEN TABULES) will be sent for five cents.

HA! HA! HA! FUN ALIVE!
The Comical Mirror.

A handsome convex mirror in a case suitable for carrying in the pocket. For many years the funniest and most laughable attraction in nearly every museum has been the large convex mirrors in which a person appears drawn out as long and narrow as a bean pole, or flattened down like a gridiron with a face as broad as a cellar door. This mirror produces the same effect as the large and expensive mirrors in the museums. By holding the mirror in an upright position stout people look thin and in a horizontal position thin people look stout; anyone can recognize themselves at once, but their features are so distorted and their general appearance so changed that they cannot fail to have a good laugh over it. If you have a friend (lady or gentleman) who think they are a little better looking than anyone else, let them take a peep into the mirror and it will take them down a peg or two—either the "short and fat" view or the "long and slim" view are stunners and will cure the blues every time. Send for one it will afford you lots of fun.

GRAND OFFER TO YOU. Send us 12 cents and we will send this splendid literary monthly for the Home, three whole months on a trial subscription and one Comical Mirror, postpaid; for 27 cents we will send you the paper 3 months and three mirrors all paid; or, for only 76 cents we will send the paper a whole year and one dozen mirrors by express. Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

THE holiday season being now a thing of the past for a twelvemonth, we can turn our attention to our own needs, which have been somewhat neglected in trying to show our goodwill toward our friends.

There are many people who do not know that they can buy perfumed silks, which may be used in numberless ways. For the lining of bureau drawers this is especially desirable, as it takes up none of the space and yet imparts to the contents a delicate odor. Glove and handkerchief cases may be made of this silk much more easily than when interlined with batting upon which powdered sachet is used. All of the desirable odors may be obtained, and usually the lavender, violet, rose and heliotrope silks are scented with the flower of the same name; the white silks have either the white rose or white lilac odor.

Pincushions this season are very peculiar in shape, reminding one somewhat of a sausage. We have for sometime had the long and narrow cushion, but to have one narrow and as long as the dresser is wide, is something new, and, it must be admitted, not as attractive as those of smaller shape; however, it is one of the fads. These cushions are made of satin and trimmed with a full ruffle of lace or gauze ribbon, finished by a narrow beading of lace into which is run baby ribbon which finishes off at each corner in a rosette made of numberless loops of the ribbon. When one is expert at water color painting, or, if not expert can do ordinary work, the flowers on the lace used may be colored and so add greatly to the beauty of the article. Gauze ribbons in all the delicate tones may be used for the ruffles instead of lace, and are particularly pretty on the square cushions. This ribbon comes in five-inch depth, and when pleated fully around the edge of the cushion makes a very pretty finish, as it stands out pertly, being a little stiffer than lace. A yellow gauze ribbon covered with yellow or white polka dots and having a satin edge is one of the prettiest used, and the top of the cushion may be covered with a piece of the same, put on before the ruffle, or the top of cushion may be left plain and a small lace mat used. This latter plan is perhaps the better, as the mat can be laundered without disturbing the ruffle.

We illustrate herewith a scrap basket, particularly appropriate for chamber, nursery or sewing room. The one here shown is covered with china silk in pink morning glory pattern, and is lined with light blue paper—but denim could be used equally well. The silk, however, being thin and soft, is pliable and more easily kept in place with paste than the heavier material, and when four baskets can be covered with fifty-two inches of thirty-inch silk, it cannot be called expensive.

To make one of these baskets get cardboard an eighth of an inch thick. Cut with a sharp knife four pieces to measure eleven inches on each side, nine inches across the top and seven inches across the bottom. Cut one piece seven inches square. This is for the bottom.

Cut four pieces of silk of same shape as the four pieces of cardboard, but one inch larger all around. Lay a piece of silk on a table, and a piece of the cardboard onto it, and turn over and paste down all four edges. Flour paste is the best to use. Have some good, heavy, unglazed paper, of color to harmonize with the material used on the outside, and cut four pieces one-half inch smaller all round than the cardboard. After the silk is firmly pasted onto each piece, paste one of the pieces of paper onto the inside. Treat the square of cardboard in same manner, but use paper for both sides of it. Make three holes through each side of four pieces, and tie the pieces together with narrow ribbon. The bottom of the basket is fastened only on one side.

After the sides are tied together, stand the basket up and lay the bottom into it, about one-half inch from the lowest edge, and on one side of the bottom paste a strip of the heavy paper, a continuation of the same piece extending for a couple of inches up one of the sides of the basket. This will hold it in place, and will also act as a hinge,—for the basket may be closed flat by shutting the bottom up against the side to which it is hinged, and then the sides will flatten together and so condense into the size of one of the sides. This makes it convenient for laying away in a drawer, or for packing to send away.

Here are a few suggestions from a reader who is interested in our corner:

"Don't hermetically seal all the sunny windows in your house, with outside and inside shutters, shades, sash curtains, lace draperies, and heavy, silk-lined over draperies, and then wonder why your children are so pale, feeble and fretful.

"Don't, little woman, scold because your father cannot afford to have your bedroom "done over" for you, and new furniture put in. Buy a quart of paint, a brush and a little turpentine, put on a big sleeved apron and an old pair of gloves, and paint the woodwork yourself. Scrape the paint from the dingy old furniture, buy another pot of white paint, and still another of white enamel, and transform the old bedroom set. For window draperies get white muslin flowered with chrysanthemums woven through it. Embroider the chrysanthemums in pink, line your curtains with pink silkoline and tie them back with pink satin ribbons. Use more of the same material for covers for dressing-case, table and washstand, and for spread and pillow shams for the bed. Paper the walls with an inexpensive white and gold paper, cover the floor with Japanese matting with a bit of a rug here and there, and you have a room fit for a queen."

You can easily make three dollars a day working for us. See the back page of this paper.

A GIFT OF EMBROIDERY SILK.

Embroidery silk will cost you a lot of money bought at the store. We have a great jobbing-house lot of rich silk bought at wholesale. No high retail price with a lot of middle profits; but we get actual cost price. We want to give the whole benefit to our lady readers. We have prepared a lot of assorted packages containing a liberal supply of bright, rich, new silk in a variety of tones and shades, which would cost a heap of money bought at the stores. We will send our illustrated bargain list and full assorted, large sized silk package for the ridiculously low price of ten cents; or, three packages for twenty cents. Write to-day before the rush. $50.00 GOLD GIVEN AWAY!

HERE IS A PUZZLE. We will give Fifty Dollars in Gold to any person who will cut out the black pieces shown in this advertisement and paste them on a blank piece of paper so as to form a square. Try it! The money will be paid April 15th, 1899; if more than one successful contestant the money will be equally divided.

The only condition is that every person sending in their name must sell for us 24 of our Arc-Light Electric Lamp Wicks at Five Cents each and return to us $1.20 for same, and as a premium for selling the wicks we will give a beautiful Gold Filled Ring, set with an imported stone, which will puzzle an expert to distinguish from a genuine diamond which would sell for $100.00; if a different premium is desired a selection can be made from our large premium list sent you with the wicks.

No money required in advance, send for wicks, sell them and return $1.20, and any premium selected will be promptly sent; we will take the wicks back if you cannot sell them.

Our wicks are something entirely new, they give a light nearly equal to the Electric Light, being chemically treated with carbon by means of which the white electric light is attained.

Burns one year, no trimming required, no smoke, making kerosene light equal to electricity. Do not confound our wicks with any of the so-called everlasting or indestructible wicks now on the market, which are simply fakes. If you sell the first lot more will be sent if desired, and we will allow you a handsome cash commission for selling them. If you do not wish to contest for the prize, we should be pleased to have you order wicks and sell them to secure the premium. Write to-day and we will send the first lot promptly.

RHEUMATISM IS DEAD!

Long Live OXIEN, the King of Remedies that Killed it.

No more infernal tortures, no more roastings of the flesh with red hot irons, no more lightning shocks from the electric battery or dosings with dangerous drugs.

RHEUMATISM HAS BEEN CONQUERED by Oxien the triumph of medicine, the Godsend of the age. Absolute cures are now certain, and Oxien is making them every day. In this connection

WE HAVE A WORD TO SAY.

Oxien was last year put to the test as a remedy for Rheumatism and it made a record of absolute cures in Acute Rheumatism, frequently called rheumatic fever, Pericarditis (inflammation of the investing membrane of the heart), Endocarditis (inflammation of the living membrane of the heart), subacute rheumatism, sometimes applied to the less severe attacks of the disease, chronic rheumatism, which swells and twists the joints and sciatica, or neuralgia of the sciatic nerve. In fact Oxien is guaranteed to cure Rheumatism in any form. Thousands jump for joy and many write as follows:

Received OXIEN O. K. Found it far superior to what you represent. Have tried everything I could hear of for rheumatism. For ten years I have been crippled up with this terrible disease. Laid in bed one whole year. Could not turn or feed myself and when I was able to walk on crutches (which I did for four years) was crooked and unable to straighten up, but Oxien did it and you can imagine how happy I am now. Yours sincerely, Geo. F. Lawton, Olympia, Wash., Feby. 9th, 1898.

FREE 200,000 BOXES OF RHEUMATISM CURE. FREE.

This momentous offer we make in order to more thoroughly introduce this amazing rheumatism remedy in the United States and Canada. None but those who will give us their word that they either suffer from rheumatism, or are afraid of it through hereditary tendencies will be considered entitled to free treatment. Therefore, if you want a box free send at once, yes to-day. Write plainly as our clerks are badly rushed.

A MARRIAGE CERTIFICATE AND

A FAMILY BIBLE FOR $1.89.

DELIVERED AT YOUR HOME.

This edition excels all others in the excellence of paper and exquisite topography, being printed from an entirely new set of plates costing $20,000. The size of page is 12x9 inches, the print large and clear, and there are TEN BEAUTIFUL FULL-PAGE PHOTOGRAVURE PICTURES of rare artistic excellence and some of the most superb masterpieces of Modern Paintings, being in harmony with the justly celebrated OXFORD TEACHERS' BIBLES. They are bound in fine Morocco Buckram Paneled Sides, and contain the Old and New Testaments, authorized version, the best concordance extant, and the following helpful features: A table of the passages in the Old Testament quoted in the New; a Chronological Index; an analysis of the Old and New Testaments; an account of the date of writing the books of the New Testament; an index of the Holy Bible; a short description of the Holy Land; a table of kindred forbidden to marry; table of Scripture weights and measures; an alphabetical table of proper names; also a very neat, plain Marriage Certificate and Family Record. Our New Bible is just what the people want; excellent paper, handsome illustrations, good, clear print, handsome and durable bindings, and last but not least, an EXTRAORDINARY FAMILY RECORD, entirely different from that contained in any other Bibles in the country. The print is of large size, clear and distinct, just right for grandfather and grandmother to read without their glasses, while the full-page engravings will interest and instruct the little children. It is the book for every member of the family.

Our price by mail or express, charges fully paid to your post-office, is only $1.89. Only think of it! A Bible, 12x9 inches, weighing more than four pounds, for $1.89! In addition to the Bible we will give a year's subscription to this paper; or raise a club of eight subscribers at our special subscription price of 25 cents a year each, or a club of 16 at our special club rate of 15 cents a year each, and we will send it free as a premium. CONDUCTED BY AUNT SARAH.

THE old adage 'fingers were made before forks,'" says a reader of this department, "receives apt illustration in the table manners of the Neapolitan lazzarani, or beggars. While in Naples some years ago, I paid a visit to a restaurant frequented by these gentry.

"Plunging down a steep flight of stone steps, I found myself in a long low cellar. It was dimly lighted by a few small bracket lamps burning rancid olive oil. Running almost the entire length of the apartment was a wide board, nailed to stanchions set in the bare earth. This board was quite innocent of covering, and around it, seated on little tripod stools, was gathered a motley horde of men. Before each person stood a wooden bowl, and these bowls constituted the entire table furniture. At the farther end of the room a very dirty curtain screened the mysteries of the kitchen from vulgar gaze.

"As I was interestedly noting these details, and listening to the Babel of sounds arising from around the board, a momentary hush fell upon the assemblage. From behind the curtain appeared a greasy, perspiring Italian, bearing in his arms a huge wooden vessel, resembling, as much as anything, an overgrown chopping tray. This individual was naked from the waist up, and was not the most savory looking attendant one could wish. He marched down one side of the table, and deposited his tray in the center of it. I then saw that it was filled with yards of steaming macaroni. Taking a long wooden fork, the man speared out great bunches of the slippery viand, and distributed them impartially among the score and more of bowls eagerly extended to him.

BUTTER BALLS.

"A scene at once ensued that was unique, amusing and repulsive. As soon as each person received his allotted portion he inserted the fingers of both hands in the bowl, and clutching a tangled mass of macaroni, held it aloft till the longest ends hovered just above his mouth. Then arrived the moment of his enjoyment. Opening his mouth to its utmost capacity, he lowered the ends of the macaroni into the yawning chasm, and with grunts of deepest satisfaction, slowly sucked in the glutinous mass until his fingers were empty.

"This peculiar operation was repeated again and again until the contents of the bowls were exhausted. Then, licking their fingers and chops in the most unctuous manner, the customers arose, one after the other, and crept lazily up into the street to look for some sunny nook in which to sleep away the afternoon. The meal had cost them each but two cents, and their slumbers certainly could not have been haunted by dreams of undue extravagance."

Now while this isn't the way in which we enjoy macaroni and spaghetti, we do enjoy it, and we give herewith some recipes for cooking this healthful and much liked food. We will use the word macaroni, but spaghetti may be used in exactly the same way, being made of the same ingredients—the only difference being in the size of the sticks.

BAKED MACARONI WITH CHEESE.

Boil three-fourths of a cup of macaroni in two quarts of boiling water and one teaspoonful salt, for twenty minutes, or until soft; drain in a strainer, pour over it cold water to prevent the pieces from adhering. Put a layer of the boiled macaroni into a buttered baking dish, sprinkle with grated cheese; repeat until dish is full; then pour over white sauce, cover with buttered crumbs, and bake until crumbs are brown.

WHITE SAUCE.

Melt two tablespoons butter, add two tablespoons flour with one-half teaspoon salt, and pour on slowly one and one-half cups scalded milk.

MACARONI WITH TOMATO SAUCE.

Reheat boiled macaroni in one and one-half cups tomato sauce, sprinkle with grated cheese and serve; or prepare as baked with cheese, using tomato sauce in place of white sauce.

TOMATO SAUCE.

One-half can tomatoes, one slice onion, three tablespoons butter, two and one-half tablespoons flour, one-fourth teaspoon salt, one-eighth teaspoon pepper. Cook onion with tomato fifteen minutes, rub through a strainer and add butter and flour, to which seasonings have been added; cook all together.

BUTTER PADDLES.

MACARONI ITALIENNE.

Three-fourths cup of macaroni; two quarts boiling water; one-half onion; two cloves; one and one-half cups tomato sauce; one-half cup grated cheese; two tablespoons wine and one-half tablespoon butter.

Cook macaroni in boiling salted water, with onion stuck with the cloves; drain, remove onion, reheat in tomato sauce, add butter, cheese and wine.

MACARONI a la MILANAISE.

Cook macaroni as above, reheat in tomato sauce, add six sliced mushrooms, two slices cooked smoked beef tongue cut in strips, and one-half cup grated cheese.

Macaroni is usually broken into short pieces, before cooking. Spaghetti is cooked in long strips; to accomplish this, hold the quantity to be cooked in the hand and dip the ends into the boiling water; as it softens it will bend, and may be coiled under the water.

So much for macaroni and spaghetti.

Now we want to speak of the daintiest and easiest way of serving butter at the table. So many people have a large piece of butter put on the table, and then some one has to neatly (or otherwise) cut this into small pieces for each individual. Avoid this trouble and at the same time add to the appearance of your table by having butter balls or pats made before the meal is served. Get a first-class pair of wooden paddles, costing fifty cents a pair; cheaper ones may be had, as cheap as ten cents, but they are not at all satisfactory, and as a pair of paddles lasts for years, fifty cents is not an extravagant price to pay for them.

To make the balls, put the paddles into a bowl of ice water until thoroughly chilled; then a piece of butter about the size of a walnut should be taken up on one paddle, and rolled with the other until it forms a dainty ball, all criss-crossed with dents from the indentations on the paddles. Drop the balls as fast as made into a bowl of ice water, and make a dozen or two at a time; if the family is small these will last two or three days and if kept in a bowl of ice water all the time will be as crisp and fresh as though made fresh for each meal.

A CASE OF PERFUMERY FOR YOU.

Placed in a bureau drawer will impart delicious odor to all clothing, kerchiefs, etc. Sweeter than the mignonette. TALKS WITH GIRLS.

CONDUCTED BY COUSIN MARION.

Happy New Year to you all, my dears, this new year of 1899, with the next one the last of the nineteenth century; and Father Time keeps pushing along until he too shall have gone over the border into eternity to meet the millions who have preceded him. None of us can know what this New Year may bring to us in smiles or tears, but I know this, that to each and all of you who read these lines I wish all the good that may come to mortals, and pray earnestly that you may all hold yourselves worthy.

The first one to be answered in the new year is from an "Interested Reader" in the pleasant little town of Wellsville, Ohio, and she wants to know if she should give up a young man, whom she likes and who is all right except his lack of money, because her father wants her to get a richer man. I do not wish to counsel disobedience to parents, but in a case like this, I would risk a parent's displeasure rather than a life of unhappiness.

A Questioner, Greenleaf, Kans.—You ask more questions than I have room to answer, dear. I will say though that you can do very much towards conquering your bad temper if you will think for a minute, just one minute, before you speak, and then speak very slowly. That is the way to make people "love and admire" you, too, for if you speak carefully you will only say pleasant things of people.

Rosebud, Kempton, Ills.—Don't accept the young man you like very much when he is away, but don't when he is around. As it happens, a husband is around a good deal, and your married life would scarcely be a rhapsody under such circumstances.

Kathryn, Brownstown, Ind.—It does not make any difference how long the young fellow has been going with you, he ought to call you "Miss Kathryn." It is so much more like the old time politeness.

Backwoods, Squirrel Creek, Va.—A wedding breakfast is breakfast chiefly in name. It is really a luncheon, and the giver may use her own taste and judgment in serving it.

A Reader, Waynesburg, Ga.—The words of the song "Only Just to Say Farewell," which you submit, are in no sense poetry, as verse goes, but they are quite up to the modern sentimental song standard, and if you have good music, there is no reason why your song will not be fairly successful.

Dorothy, Ernestine and Carrie, Sylvan Center, Mich.—It is quite proper to accompany an older unmarried lady and her "gentleman friend"—but don't for goodness' sake say "gentleman friend"—to an entertainment if they are willing. (2) It is just as well for girls of sixteen not to accept presents from men. (3) Put off the buggy riding and the boat riding and the smiling at young men until you are older and out of school. Kids of sixteen are not the wisest creatures in the world.

S. D. J. Dana.—There is really no use for you to waste postage on writing about money awaiting American heirs in England, but if you will do it, send your inquiry to Secretary, Embassy of the United States, London, Eng.

Peach Blossom, Starfield, Mo.—If the young man is a "sport" as you say, which of course cannot be nice, you had better let him pass. If he is in love with you he ought to say so, whether he is a "sport" or not. (2) The sentences you quote are common cheap slang, that don't mean anything much better.

S. R. M., Hansonville, Va.—It is customary and correct, when an engagement is broken, to return all letters. And do not follow them with a "saucy" letter. (2) It is not correct with a young man you never saw.

Green Eye, San Bernadino, Cal.—You will never be happy on earth if you let yourself be foolishly jealous. Let the young man call on other girls if he wants to. If you cannot trust him how can you possibly love him? And why shouldn't other young men call on you? You will have a lovely married life if you begin in this way.

M. F., St. Paul, Minn.—When a man squeezes a lady's hand in a dance, it means that he is ready for a flirtation and should be frowned down at once. I believe most men do it, whenever they get a chance.

Sweet Marie, Rockville, Ind.—A suitable present for a young man at Christmas or any time is an umbrella, a scarf pin, some little silver match safe or other pocket utensil, or something to meet any especial taste he may have.

Detroit Girl, Detroit, Mich.—Step-children cannot marry, even though they have not been brought up together. The daughter of a widower, who marries a widow with a son, might marry the son, but not nearer than that.

M. E. D., Wilmington, N. C.—I know nothing of the companies you mention, but it is just as well to be sure you are going to get something for your money before you give it up. Everybody is after money, and if you have any, hold on to it until you see its equivalent coming.

Clementine, Tyler, Mich.—It is a beautiful thing to wait for the one you love until he is ready to marry, but it is not so beautiful to be fooled. Your own sense and knowledge must teach you something in such a case. (2) No, I would not advise a girl to marry a man who tells her he will be affectionate enough after he is married. Marriage doesn't always make people affectionate.

Miss Zoe, Independence, Iowa.—An escort may be invited into your house if it is still early in the evening. (2) He should not stop at the gate, but go to the door with you. (3) There is no set form of speech to be used in asking to extend any courtesy. (4) Reds are more becoming to brunettes, but nearly any color is becoming if not too pronounced. (5) Ask any druggist for a good hair tonic. One is about as good as another. (6) There is no cure for a "spooney" young man. Marriage sometimes helps to change him for the better, but he will nearly always be silly. And usually it isn't his wife who is the object of it. (7) If you can't talk to your company and he is stupid, I can't tell you what to do. (8) Yes, your girl friend's "beau" may bring a friend of his to call on you, if she comes with him, seeing that you do not know him. (9) As a rule the man should precede the woman, unless she knows the way better, as for instance going to her pew in church. (10) Yes, a lady may accept the escort of a gentleman home whom she has never met more than once, if he is the proper person for her to know.

Delia, Ottumwa, Iowa.—Consult a physician. (2) To reach an author write a letter to him or her in care of the periodical in which you saw the name. It will be forwarded.

Music, Paris, Ills.—You might be of great assistance to your mother if you left school; and if you read carefully, you might not miss the school so much. Home employment, that will pay anything, is hard to get, and as for finding a millionaire who will give you a musical education, I fear that is utterly hopeless.

Lackie, Marksville, La.—You are of the brunette type, judging from the hair. (2) As to the young man, nothing can be done unless his own heart directs him to you. I believe in the efficacy of prayer, but not in making a man love where he doesn't want to. A heart is not to be won, though it—or the person in which it is located—is frequently bought. Are you poor? (3) Mourning is usually worn two years.

Annie and Bell, St. Paul, Minn.—Yes, it is proper to accept the attentions of one man and correspond with another, provided no engagement exists. (2) Simply accept the offer of his company and no more. Use a little common sense. (3) It is not quite the best form for a man to walk between two ladies, though if they both want to take his arms, he will have to. (4) It is quite proper to accept a present from a man to whom you are not engaged.

P. D. F., Zanesville, Ohio.—As I have said a thousand times I repeat, there is no way to win a man's love. What do you want with it if it is not yours from the heart, freely? (2) No, it is not correct to skate with any man who may ask you? It is all right if you know him—if he is all right. (3) Dear, dear, so you think a girl's life is a life of trouble, do you? And you want to be a man? Well, do you think it is all of life to be a man? When you have lived to be fifty and have met a hundred or more men, you will begin to find out that they are not much happier than the women are. The only people who don't complain are the dead ones.

Maud and Mary, Charlotte, Ills.—It is proper to ask your "beau" to supper on Sunday evening; he must go home at ten o'clock; you should not kiss him good night; he should not call oftener than once a week.

Gladys and Muriel, Tiskilwa, Ills.—"Tedstrum" sounds as if it were a Scandinavian name. (3) What cousin will tell these two what the National flower of Germany is?

That is all for this time. The new year starts out well among the inquiring minds, and let us hope that in this year much good may come to all concerned in this column. By-by, cousins dear.

MANHOOD—NO DRUGS.

For 30 years I have been showing men the road to strength. I have demonstrated a natural remedy to be the true remedy. I have made a specialty of weaknesses of men which result from youthful indiscretions or later excesses such as Drains, Impotency, Nervous Debility, Varicocele, etc. I could not give you as good service as some doctors in fevers or pneumonia or smallpox. Of course I studied these subjects, but this is a day of specialties.

I know the nervous and glandular system of men. That's my strong card. I treat weak men and weak men only. In the beginning let me say I use no drugs. When I take your money I want to give you value in return. I couldn't do that and give you drugs for weakness, because they never cure, they only stimulate. They give "quick" results but you fall back into the same old condition, maybe a worse one.

I am the inventor of the

with suspensory, now known and used throughout the world. This appliance embodies the best efforts of my 30 years' experience as a specialist, and is protected by U. S. and foreign patents. Beware of imitations. There is no genuine Electric Belt but the Sanden.

You put it on when you go to bed at night and take it off next morning. Keep this up for two or three months. It will make you a sound, strong man. It is applied so a soothing current will flow through kidneys, liver, stomach, prostate gland, bladder and other organs. Electricity instantly felt though under control of user by turning little regulator screw. Over 5000 cures last year. Write for Dogs That Work For a Living.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

NOTHING seems more foreign to the nature of the dog as we know him, than work. To those of us who live in cities indeed, he presents himself at once as a pet, and an important factor in our daily lives. Before the mind's eye rises an army of ribboned and jewelled and blanketed creatures, the occupants of our softest cushions, the playmates of our children, the street escort of our ladies, the beloved and cherished household darling, too often the household tyrant. Not only does he pervade our homes and partake of our joys and sorrows, but he has set up his kingdom in our literature in all varieties of character and of all degrees of social standing, from the cringing monstrosity of the slums, faithfully following Bill Sikes in his criminal career, to the dainty, aristocrat Jip, ruling the Copperfield menage as only a winsome, exacting little beastie can; moreover in our art he is so popular that at least one great painter owed much of his fame to him, and in the drama, Jefferson's "Schneider" has made his name a household word.

Not only is the dog an inseparable companion to civilized man, but the two races sustain close relationship to each other all over the world, so that we can hardly imagine man living without the dog, and we cannot conceive of the dog without man. Not all of this great company however can be called pets. Many and diverse are the uses to which man puts his tractable and faithful fourfooted friend, but most of them are so entirely in the line of the animal's own tastes that they can be characterized only as play. Indeed in most cases he has himself indicated the duties he prefers, selected—as it were—which of the several professions open to canine intelligence he will adopt. A dog, it is true, may be trained in uncongenial ways, but he will never achieve in them the success that awaits him in a self-chosen career.

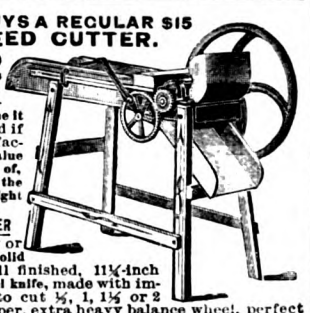
To guard his master's life, and protect his property against all despoilers; to accompany him on the hunt; to point out the game, and collect the spoils of the gun; or to aid with his own savage weapons; who can doubt that these are great pleasures to him, entirely underserving the name of work. The dog of St. Bernard also, who wanders about in the snow and storm, bearing his little barrel of brandy, and seeking the lost and helpless traveler, though he performs most valuable service, still is only doing what he delights in.

Yet dogs who actually labor, who are trained and supported solely to perform certain work, are not rare, though we may not have thought of them as workers. Almost with the beginning of man's own labor, began the labor of the dog in his service. Before the days of historical records, far back of the earliest books, the dog was in common use as shepherd, not only taking care of those singularly weak minded and irresponsible creatures, protecting them from their animal foes and their own foolish indiscretion, but driving or leading them back and forth between their feeding ground and their fold. He is referred to in this way in one of the oldest parts of the Bible, the book of Job. So long and so faithfully has the dog done this work that there is perhaps no country on the globe where sheep are kept in any numbers, that he is not found as their guardian. Yet it is well known that it is his nature to worry and destroy sheep.

Darwin found dogs at nearly the extreme southern point of South America performing this task well, and saving to their masters the cost of several men. These animals were trained by being separated from their kind and placed with the sheep in puppyhood, and thus becoming so attached to them as to have no desire to leave them, feeling indeed much more at home with them than with other dogs. In one respect they were to be pitied, they had no youth. The playfulness of their early months was quickly crushed out, because frolic that is play to a puppy is death to sheep. The four-footed shepherd of Scotland is familiar through a thousand stories of his fidelity, and his more than human sagacity, and the dog of Lapland, though not so well known to us, is none the less faithful and intelligent in his care of the immense herds of reindeer which form his master's possessions.

Not only was the dog made useful in the arts of peace, but he was early impressed into the practices of war congenial to many of his race. In the Conquest of America, the Spaniards introduced as powerful aids to the subjugation of the South Americans, fierce bloodhounds and savage mastiffs trained to fight in ranks, and wherever they appeared the native races were almost exterminated. The bloodhounds accompanying one Spanish Commander are estimated to have killed in one year in Cuba four thousand natives. One of these animals would fly at an Indian, as a terrier flies at a rat, and kill him almost as quickly. One savage beast in particular was so valued for his exploits in this line, that he wore a coat of mail, drew the pay of one of the lower officers, and rode horseback to the battlefield, to be fresh for his terrible work. The death of this animal was a fitting close to such a life, although in justice to the dog we must admit that not he, but his masters were the guilty ones. The natives of course hated him heartily, and a large reward was offered to whoever would kill him. For a long time no one succeeded because of his mail, but at last a good marksman shot an arrow in his eye and ended his career. It is said that the famous and fierce Aragon hounds of Northern Mexico are descendants of this breed.

The fighting of dogs with each other for amusement or for money, has always been a favorite entertainment among the more brutal of men, and is even to this day, though it has now to be enjoyed in secret, for the intelligence and the humanity of the civilized world is severely against it.



An early work to which dogs were trained in England was dancing and performing in shows. Mention is made of dancing dogs in the seventeenth century, and they were nothing new then, and at the beginning of the last century we read of the "Ball of Little Dogs" who danced before Queen Anne. Since that time they have been taught to play a complete drama, one to their taste of course, and even down to our day a troop of canine performers is a common adjunct to a circus or menagerie.

More serious and less agreeable because there was no honor or applause attached to it, was the work of turning the spit by which our ancestors in "Merrie England" roasted their beef, and many an unwilling dog was forced to perform that service. To carry dispatches in times of war, and to follow the track of a robber or criminal, are tasks too congenial to be classed as labor. The same may be said also of the brutal sport of bull baiting, of which our modern bulldog is the product and constant reminder, and of the sickening feats of the terriers of our day in the "rat pit." We occasionally see in our own streets a canine laborer drawing a cart or leading a blind man, and we hear of dogs in the country forced to work a churn, and read of others trained to smuggle laces which are wound closely around their slim bodies, and covered with other dog skins sewed over them. We know also of cases where dogs assist in police duty, and connect themselves with the city fire department; and there is said to be at this moment a dog in New York who regularly works a blacksmith's bellows; but these cases are rare, and the work demanded is not usually regular or severe.

Although this animal has played so important and so varied a part in the history of mankind, though he has been worshipped by some races, and used as a worthy sacrifice by others, though by the ancient Scandinavians he was the appointed executioner of criminals, and by the ancient Hyrcanians kept sacred for the purpose of devouring his master's own remains; though he has ever been man's companion in his sports as well as in his labors,—by the Oriental he has been from the first until now, hated, despised and allowed to serve only the lowest and vilest uses. It is a significant fact that the most dearly loved and cherished pet and companion of the Western World, is the outcast of the Eastern. In the records of the Hebrews, as among the modern Jews, the dog is always associated with repulsive ideas. To the modern Turk he is unclean, and treated as such. Touching stories are told by travelers of the attempts of the unfortunate pariahs of the East to ingratiate themselves into the favor of strangers, whom they seem to recognize as more friendly to them than the natives. It is Mrs Brassey I believe, who gives a pathetic instance of a dog mother who placed her pups

Every family in America is ready to buy "The light that sells on sight"—the wonderful new invention called ARC-LIGHT WICK.

It burns a whole year without trimming. It kills a candle, discounts kerosene, beats gas, and almost equals electricity or sunlight.

It saves 20 per cent. of oil. It's clear, white and brilliant. It's the light that won't go out. It's the light in the window for thee.

The Light That Sells On Sight.

The ARC-LIGHT is something new. All need it, all buy it, all bless it. To show it means to sell it, and it yields from 100 per cent. to 300 per cent. profit to agents.

The same kind of carbon that gives the electric light its brilliancy is woven into the Arc-Light by a patent process. We hold affidavit showing that an Arc-Light burned 1040 hours, giving the last hour the same perfect, brilliant, light it gave the first.

A single lamp manufacturer in New England, who bought over 35,000 writes: "The Arc-Light beats all others. It sells our lamps, and turns night into day. Every home, store, hotel, saloon, hall, church, or car company will buy the Arc-Light Wick on sight. We have made arrangements with the manufacturers to introduce this wonderful discovery, and we offer for 60 days the following wholesale terms to agents:

Medium or A wick, 5-8 inch wide—the size for house lamps—by mail, sample 5 cents; per dozen, 25 cents; per gross, $2.50. Small or I wicks, for hand lamps, lanterns, etc., 3-8 inch wide, sample, 5 cents; per dozen, 25 cents; per gross, $2.50. Large or B wicks, for table, bracket lamps, 1 inch wide, sample, 5 cents; per dozen, 25 cents; per gross, $2.50. D wick, 1 1-2 inches wide, for incubators, store lamps, sample, 8 cents; hall, bracket, or parlor lamps, sample, 33 cents; per dozen, 33 cents; per gross, $3.50. Argand wicks for $3.50 gross. Argand wicks for accompanied by cash, 15 per cent. off. Send sample dozen, giving width desired, and see how they go. We can supply you with any style or sample dozen, giving width desired, and see how they go. We can supply you with any style ARC-LIGHT WICK in any quantities, from a single wick to a thousand dozen.

under her protection while she was living in Constantinople.

The dog, to be the friend and companion that we know, to have his character developed, his intelligence awakened, and become what he is capable of being, must have human sympathy and friendship. Those of his kind who are denied that factor of growth appear like an entirely different race, lacking in individuality of character and far more resembling their relation, the wolf.

The important modern services of the dog to man are three: The protection of life and property, which duty he takes upon himself in all civilized countries; the work of scavenger, which saves the cities of the East from being swept off the face of the earth by pestilence, and that of the draught animal, which is equally indispensable to the life of man in the Polar regions. Of these, the first two offices, though of inestimable value to human life, cannot be classed under the head of working for a living, but in the third named, we see the familiar beast serving strictly as a laborer, with scarcely a pleasure in his hard life, often not even the small satisfaction of feeling that he has pleased his master. For it is a remarkable circumstance, that in the countries where he works the hardest, as well as in those where he is the most useful to man, he is the worst treated; his unvarying wages are kicks, curses and starvation. It is so with the sledge-drawer of the North; it is so with the sheep-herder and the scavenger of the East. The tales brought by travelers of the brutality with which this faithful humble servant is rewarded, are almost beyond belief, and terribly shake one's faith in any superiority of the human race, other than that of strength and cunning to compass its ends.

A Pearl of the Pacific.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

"PACIFIC paradise," Hawaii has been called and it well deserves the name. A land where the climate is almost perfect, warm enough to bring forth tropical fruits and flowers, but moderated by ocean breezes so that the thermometer seldom rises above 80 degrees. Everywhere are the royal palms and banana and cocoanut trees, while every house is covered with blossoming vines, and every garden is overrun with tropical verdure.

About two thousand miles southwest of San Francisco, the great Pacific liners touch at the beautiful harbor of Honolulu. This is the only good harbor in the islands, being well protected from the high surf by a coral reef. The city lies on a level strip of land along the sea, while behind it rise the green slopes of the mountains. Within the city the houses are nearly all modern structures built for comfort and beauty and surrounded by gardens. Here dwell the American and other foreigners, and those natives who have accepted the modern mode of life. Beautiful drives shaded by palms lead from the city in all directions, and street railways and steam trains cross the valleys and touch at the plantations beyond. No modern invention is wanting and the sugar, rice and coffee plantations are carried on under English or American supervision and in the most scientific way. There are good schools, libraries, newspapers and magazines.

The native Hawaiians are a dark-skinned race, with bushy hair, like most of the islanders of the Pacific, and, like them, their habits are simple, and their needs are few. A little raw fish and a dish of "pol" supplies the daily need, and as to clothes, they are happiest when adorned as nature alone adorned them. When first visited by white men they were very numerous, but pure Hawaiians are rapidly decreasing in number owing to the admixture with other races and to their carelessness of health.

The curse of Hawaii is leprosy. This dread disease is absolutely incurable as far as medical science can discover, and the government has set apart a portion of the island of Molokai for a leper settlement. To this place are transported all those afflicted with the disease, and here they spend the rest of their lives, fed and cared for by the brave souls who have gone there, giving their lives to the sufferers. The natives are very superstitious about the leprosy and when anyone whom they love is afflicted they will hide them in the cane rather than allow the authorities to find them.

The Archipelago of Hawaii consists of eight inhabited islands and many smaller ones, all of volcanic origin, with here and there a coral reef built upon the volcanic base. Volcanic cones rise on all sides, some having extinct craters at their summit, some still in constant activity.

The mountains are the wonder and glory of the islands; on the Island of Hawaii, the largest of the group, are two peaks, Mauna Kea and Mauna Loa, being respectively 13,805 feet and 13,675 feet. On the summit of Mauna Loa, far up above the clouds which rest always above it, is the old crater, Monaweweo, a vast hollow 1200 feet deep and having a circuit of twenty miles. Few tourists ever visit this weird spot where the god of fire reigns supreme. There is no path to the summit and the place is sown with the shiny cinders and black and red lavas, which have boiled over from this huge caldron. Half way up on the side of Mauna Loa is its better known crater of Kilavea. This is easily accessible, being only 4000 feet above the sea, and approached by a well-worn path. Kilavea is a great basin nine miles in circumference, surrounded by almost perpendicular walls several hundred feet high. The floor of this crater is composed of blocks of lava, some still soft like liquid mud. In the cracks between the blocks may be seen the red-hot mass of lava under the very feet of the traveler, now and again boiling over and spreading out on the surface. Here and there streams of lava flow down the slopes with a hiss of hot steam, emitting a sulphurous odor. Half way across this lava plain with its serpent like streams, and its openings of fire, one comes upon the new and ever active crater. This is a lake of fire about a mile across, and five or six hundred feet deep. Day after day and hour after hour its lavas boil and bubble, never quiet for a moment. Dashing against the cliffs with a noise like a turbulent ocean its waves of blood red, fiery liquid break into gory spray high in the air, and cooling drop in pebbles upon the surface of the lake. At night this is one of the wonders of the world, terribly grand, sublime beyond description. Columns of smoke rise from below and are illuminated as they hang over the lake; flames and sparks are thrown about, or rise in fountains and fall in cascades.

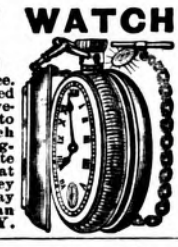
Violent explosions and loud rumblings and groanings add mystery to the weird scene. Standing upon the brink of the precipice that overhangs this strange lake one does not wonder that the superstitious natives sacrifice constantly to Pele, the god of fire, who is imprisoned here. Kilavea is exceedingly interesting to scientists because of its constant activity, as well as its convenience for observation. Unlike Vesuvius and other volcanoes its crater is always accessible. On account of the high walls of the outer crater one may observe an eruption with the utmost safety and gaze upon the marvels of a modern "Inferno" without risk of life.

Almost the whole island is covered with lava which has in recent times overflowed from the crater and covered the slope. Much of this is but little weathered so that the soil is not deep, yet it is so rich that everywhere ferns and flowers spring up and the constant showers, brought by the northeast trade wind, keep the mountain sides in a constant state of verdure. In some places the lava streams have reached the sea and leaped into the waters of the ocean leaving steep cliffs on the shore, contrasting with the white sandy beach and coral reefs. Indeed Hawaii is a land of contrasts; at the sea level tropical heat and vegetation; on the mountains cold winds and bare rocks; in the towns modern buildings and the latest fashions; in the native villages grass huts and primitive clothing. Here is a meeting of the civilization of the West with the simplicity and superstition of the far East. Let us hope that the remnant of the native population may be improved and not degraded by the change, and that our people, who go to Hawaii to make their home, may take as their watchword the salutation of the Hawaiian. "Aloha"—Love to you!

RATS.



"RATS" are in again! Dear me, how the old fashions do come around! Though to be sure, it is a deal more than seven years since the rat had its last day, and they say that fashions come around once in seven years. It is much nearer five times seven years since the furore for a towering and expansive head of hair gave rise to the little cushions of curled hair, jute, or cotton-stuffed velvet, dubbed "rats" from their fancied resemblance to that charming rodent. They were about the size of the animal mentioned, were furnished with strings for tying round the head, and sometimes had a fine wire run through the middle as an aid in fitting them to the head. Sometimes the hair was rolled over them a la Pompadour, and sometimes it was parted on the top and two rolls were made, one on each side of the head, reaching around to the back where the remainder of the hair was gathered in a knot low down on the head. Now all this is in vogue again, and the pretty young girls with their "ratted" coils of hair are more than ever "the images" of the fond mammas.

NO traveler by steam cars of the luxurious pattern need be made wretched by the presence of a noisy infant, if he selects a train with one of the nursery cars. The parent may check an infant and deposit it in the nursery car, where it will be made comfortable and amused, and then betake herself to the drawing-room car and feel that she has made all the other occupants happy, as well as assured for herself a comfortable journey. The nursery cars are furnished with all the necessaries of a home nursery, and supplied with competent attendants, and the mother has access to them during the journey, if she wishes.

HOW TO CURE RUPTURE.
Copyrighted.

It gives us much pleasure and satisfaction to send these words of hope, which are tidings of joy to those who are ruptured. It is not our purpose to go into the cause of rupture. It would not be any satisfaction to you to know exactly what caused your rupture, but how to cure it is what you want to know, and that is what we are going to tell you.

RUPTURED. CURED.

There are several kinds of rupture, or hernia, the following being the most common: Scrotal, Femoral, Umbilical and Ventral. Ruptures are reducible or irreducible. If the hernia can be returned to its proper place, it is reducible; if it cannot be returned, it is irreducible. Irreducible ruptures are caused by wearing a poor truss, or going without one. The SMALL rupture is the MOST dangerous; first from neglect; second from strangulation. Many think "my rupture is small; no need to bother about that little one." This is a dreadful mistake, for every MINUTE of their lives they are in danger of immediate and painful of rupture. In small ruptures the opening is so small that it only allows one intestine to come down. It then requires much greater pressure to move its contents, and in many cases it becomes constricted, and is very likely to prove fatal, or require a painful surgical operation, much suffering and loss of time. The small rupture should have prompt attention; there are no others so dangerous; no others the cause of so many deaths. Attend to it at once, to-morrow may be too late. That you are ruptured, and that we can cure you, is the purpose for which this is written, and this announcement will surely be a blessing, coming unawares to those who follow its teachings.

You have suffered perhaps for years with hernia or rupture. We have no doubt but what you have tried many devices, and expended many dollars, with always the same result—failure. The trusses that have been on the market in the past years are now things of the past. They are not made on the right principles. Some of them were considered good in their day, and in some cases were a great relief. Many thought when the elastic truss was invented, "here is a perfect thing at last" but they soon found out they were mistaken.

It Can Now be Clearly Seen

why they failed. They placed all dependence on elastic webbing or belts which go entirely around the body, and they must be pulled or buckled tight enough so they are a torture, to bring the pads in position to bear on the rupture. Everyone knows that the sweat of the body will soon rot the elastic in the webbing, and so they must be continually stretching and giving out; never two days alike; consequently the intestines are let out of their natural position, and never give the rupture a chance to heal. How can that kind of truss cure a rupture? A rupture to be cured must be held securely in its natural position. It is probably a waste of time to tell you about old style trusses. You know it all. You know how you have suffered in warm weather from sweating and chafing. The belts and straps pulled up so tight over the galled parts that you would think, "I would rather die than suffer this any longer," and many, after repeated trials, unable to bear the torture any longer are risking their lives and living in misery, without a truss.

To effect a cure of hernia, all know that the hernial tumor or intestines must be kept in the easy, comfortable and natural position that they would be in if there was no rupture. It has been our great good fortune to have placed in our possession a new idea in the shape of what we may call a truss. Do not think it is one of those instruments of torture you have seen that has ropes, pulleys, elastics, etc. To compare ours with others would be like comparing the electric light with an old-fashioned lamp. Our truss stands out alone, a new idea, something that to be far ahead of anything now used for the cure of rupture, only to be seen to be placed far in advance of all appliances now in existence. A truly most wonderful invention, a blessing to mankind. An article that will cure you, because it will hold everything just right in its natural position, which gives the rupture a chance to reunite and heal; does not have elastic webbing to hold it in place; has no straps to pass between the legs; can be worn day and night with ease; is as easy as a stocking to wear; no matter what position you are in, it needs no changing; for simplicity, durability, comfort and effectiveness, cannot be equaled; is

Cool and Comfortable in Warm Weather;

has no parts to chafe you; does not absorb the foul odors from the body, always in place, always comfortable, always curing where such a thing is possible; is durable and can NEVER WEAR OUT; needs no repairing; and without a single cent being laid out for repairs.

Will Last a Hundred Years

That rupture can be cured is admitted by all. The greatest obstacle has been imperfect appliances that have slipped or are continually moving out of place. It has remained for us to at last place before sufferers our perfect-fitting appliances that will surely cure where it is possible. Of course there are some cases that have gone too far to be cured by any known process: to those we offer

Comfort and Safety.

The inventor of this truss is the Rev. J. Hayden, an old minister of the gospel, who was chaplain of the 17th Maine Regiment, and who is well remembered by our boys of the blue and gray for his many acts of kindness.

This is what this well-known gentleman says (he is a writer for several magazines and papers:)

"Finding myself ruptured, I sought advice of an older brother who had the same trouble. He said: 'I have been ruptured for forty years, and have spent over $200 for trusses, and the one I have on now is the best I ever had; it cost me $15 (it was an elastic truss), but it is breaking and I must get another.' On examination I found an elastic strap around him, with every stitch of the webbing printed on his body, while the understrap that passed between his legs had chafed him so that he was red and sore. This led me to discover my truss, which is an

and which ended all pain, danger and cost, and never needs repairing. I want to get it into the hands of my fellowmen who are suffering from this dangerous and painful infirmity, for I know it will be worth a hundred times its cost. I am broken down with kidney and heart disease, and I am in constant expectation of death. The thought has been constantly before me. An invention which has the power to relieve so much suffering should not be buried with me. As I am not able, I want you to take measures to introduce it to the world, and if this is accomplished, I shall feel my life has been of value to sufferers. As I have reflected on the miseries of millions without means of relief, and the dismal certainty of their growing worse, and consider that I have in my keeping a comfortable, sure-fitting, never-failing remedy, amply proven and tested in my own and other cases, and which, at a glance, common sense will appreciate, I feel that it would be a giant wrong to mankind to have this invention buried with me: for as

I Value my Honor in This World, and my Soul in the Next,

I unhesitatingly declare that I regard a failure in any instance as impossible.

OUR TERMS: NO CURE, NO PAY.

It is the perfect confidence we have in our method of cure that warrants us in adopting the above terms. Surely we have great faith in our way of treating rupture or we would never make the following proposition to you. It is a fair honest offer that no other firm dare make, because they have not the goods to back it up.

In another column you will find two blanks, which you will carefully fill up with answers to questions asked thereon. Send us these two blanks and ONE dollar with your order for single rupture, and TWO dollars for double rupture.

The reason why we ask you to send $1.00 with your order is, there are so many people who are always writing for anything they can get for nothing. Many would write who are not ruptured. They know some who are and they want to get for nothing something they can sell the afflicted party for $5.00 or $10.00. There are others who have no gratitude in them, their object seems to be to get all they can for nothing, and in no way think of repaying a favor that rightly belongs for them to pay. THIS WE KNOW FROM ACTUAL EXPERIENCE.

To keep such parties from troubling us, we have decided on the following plan: You are to send us $1.00, to be held by us as a small guarantee of good faith. Upon receipt of same, we at once send you a truss, the same to be worn by you. When cured you are to promptly send us $2.00 more, and return us our truss, which we only lend you. Should yours be one of those cases (which are very rare) that cannot be cured, and you wish to keep the truss, because it is so easy and comfortable, we will sell it to you at a fair price, which in no case shall exceed $10.00. Some parties who get cured say they do not want to return the truss, but would rather buy it, so as to keep it handy; so we say we will sell it to all who wish to buy. It takes from two to six months to effect a cure. If you have a double rupture, or you have some member of your family, or friend who is ruptured, and you want two or more trusses, send $1.00 with the order for each truss wanted. Should our appliance or truss not cure, or you are not fitted, we will return the money you sent us, and upon receipt of same you will at once return our truss. The terms we have offered are fair and liberal, no fair-minded person can say they are not, and we will not, under any circumstances, deviate from them.

You Can be Cured Free.

When you send in your order, if you will send us the names of all the ruptured people you know, we will send them our circulars. When we send our truss to six of them, we will refund you all the money you have paid us and cure you free, or give you a truss if yours should be one of those rare cases that cannot be cured. If you will give us permission, we will refer the parties to you, and as you will know it is a great invention, you can truthfully recommend it. There is no doubt but that they will give you an order, or send it direct to us, and we will give you proper credit.

Will you, after these plain, truthful statements, continue to suffer and risk your life by wearing an old-style, imperfect truss? Dare you go without a truss knowing that you are daily growing worse, and that within a short time you will be a physical wreck? Dare you lay this aside before you give us a trial which costs you nothing if you are not satisfied? Do you think it is a humbug? If we were frauds we would not ask the small sum of $1.00 with the order, we would ask $5.00 or $10.00. A fraud never expects a second order, so they get all they can on the first.

Our Truss is for Men, Women and Children.

We can fit an infant, or a man or woman, weighing 300 lbs. Fleshy ladies who have navel ruptures, will find it a great blessing.

No Hot Bands Around You.

It is the only truss that can be worn by women and be clean and comfortable. Ruptured women who are pregnant can wear it and avoid many hours and days of misery. Don't put off sending for it. Do it to-day, to-morrow may be too late. What more need be said to convince you? We warrant A PERFECT FIT IN EVERY CASE.

See the Testimonials.

Be sure and fill out the two blanks.

The truss fits all kinds of ruptures.

It is for the Infant, the Adult, the Fleshy, the Lean, the Short, and the Tall.

Men and women use same blank for measure.

The government has allowed Rev. J. Hayden a patent. Is that not alone sufficient evidence that it is a WONDERFUL NEW INVENTION?

Testimonials, circulars, etc., will be sent free.

In closing we will say we have cured many who have had bad rupture, and we can cure you if you will only let us. We may be the means of doing you much good, and hope to hear from you in the near future.

The Postmaster Says:

I have examined the letters from which these testimonials were taken, and guarantee the same to be genuine. I was also shown a great many other testimonials which speak in the highest terms of the Surehold truss. E. T. Mayberry.

Suffered 16 Years, Now Cured.

Dear Sir:—Accept my many thanks. I think your truss is the only one that is Sure Cure. I consider myself cured by your truss after suffering for sixteen years and trying many different kinds. Yours truly, J. S. Porter, Atlanta, Ga.

Saved from the Knife.

I had tried every kind of a truss I could get hold of, and found none that would hold rupture in place, it being very low down, and the doctors told me that I could get help only by an operation, and which I had decided to have performed. I suffered so much from it and had gone so far as to make arrangements with parties to perform the operation when I happened by chance to get hold of one of your books. I looked it over and decided to try once more and sent you my measure for a truss, which was received in due time. I put it on and it fitted like a charm, and has held me all right, and rupture has not been down since I put it on. I wear it all the time without any inconvenience. I should hardly know I had a truss on without I think of it. I can stoop or bend in any manner without the least inconvenience. I think my rupture is healed and all right, and that I could leave it off all right, but prefer to wear it still longer. Edwin Snow, Snowville, N. H.

Cured in Five Months.

Dear Sirs:—I have worn your truss five months and have taken it off now, and I am cured of rupture. Your truss is the best I ever used; it is better than you recommend it. Other firms praise their ill-constructed, padded trusses very highly, but they are really not good for anything; I have worn them for years and got no better. I would not give one of yours for one hundred of theirs. Andrew Proper, Glenco Mills, N. Y.

A Physician Says:

Dear Sir:—I send you herewith an order for one of your trusses. Please send me some of your order blanks so that I may order from your company from time to time for my patients. I have tried your goods and find them O. K.
Yours truly, S. O. Hutson, M. D., Beaufort, S. C.

Cures Double Rupture.

Dear Sirs:—I had a double rupture, the right side has healed up and the left side is almost well. Yours truly,
William Wilson, Doubs, Md.

Cured in Five Months.

Gentlemen:—I have worn your truss five months. I went to a physician and he said it was healed up. Send me some of your pamphlets so I can distribute them. I cannot say enough in favor of your truss. F. E. Brigg, Bristol, Vt.

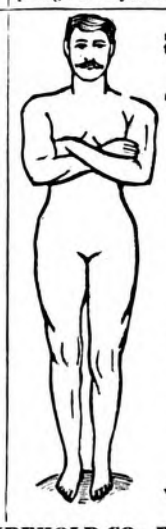
Was in Great Misery—Cured.

Gentlemen:—I have never been troubled any since I put on your truss. I could not say enough in your praise. I can work as hard as I ever could. I do not know that I am cured. I have been afraid to take truss off yet for fear that I am not. I was so poorly before I began to wear your truss, that a whole week would pass and I would not be able to do scarcely anything. I could not ride a mile in a carriage, without great misery, and being in great danger. Now I can ride ten miles with ease. Yours truly, Mrs. Nora Clem, Kent, Iowa.

Cured My Boy.

Gentlemen:—Your truss has cured my boy when no other would, and in the same time you said it would. I am more than thankful to you for it. Every word you said was true. No need of any child suffering when they can be cured so easily. Yours truly, Mrs. Mary Yarnell, Middleton, Ohio.

Cured Boy in Three Months.



Dear Sirs:—My little boy is cured after wearing your truss three months. It is a great truss, and I will do all I can in your favor. Yours truly, Samuel T. Everett, Crumpton, Md.

CONDUCTED BY REGULUS.

AT the Lunation or New Moon which occurs at about 23 minutes past 4 o'clock in the morning of the 10th of February, 1899, the first decanate of the celestial sign Capricorn will be ascending, bearing Venus just on the horizon, while the last degrees of Libra will be on the meridian. The conjunction of the luminaries occurs in the 2nd house, having the benevolent rays of Saturn in the 12th and Neptune in the 6th house. Herschel is in the 11th; Mercury is near the 2nd cusp under the favorable rays of Herschel, his disposer, but poorly aspected by Jupiter; the warlike Mars is in the 7th retrograde and in his fall, while Jupiter, the great benefic, is elevated near the south meridian.

The promises of the figure, on the whole, are much better than usual for this lunation, though there are some adverse features to be noted. Mars indicates some dissensions and enmities with threats of warlike actions in our southwestern possessions in which the naval forces may be called into activity, and there is probability of some bad eruptive disease like small pox in those regions likely to affect our soldiers and sailors. Unusual precaution should be had in this respect by the governing authorities both at home and abroad. There will be some unusual excitement in Congress in discussions involving the finances and the expenditures of the nation. The benefics holding the important angles of the scheme indicate the popularity of the Chief Executive and his administration and the thrift of the government under his rule; also the prosperity of the masses of our people. We will have some extremely cold weather in the lunation, probably in the last days of February and from the 4th to 8th of March. There will be some disorder in some prison from which treacherous conduct aiming at a jail delivery is to be apprehended. Our government should be on the alert against the machinations of secret enemies operating in the interest of Spain. This latter country is still sadly under the ban and is in further danger of disruption and revolution. There will be some very disastrous fires in New York City and some unusual harm from explosions, and fire and steam. Persons born about the 8th of January, 9th of April, 12th of July and 13th of October, of past years, will need to be watchful against attacks from small pox or other eruptive diseases; should carefully avoid indulging in stimulants and pay more than ordinary heed to the digestion.

CELESTIAL CALENDAR FOR FEBRUARY, 1899.

FEBRUARY 1—Wednesday. This month begins with an excellent day for the vigorous prosecution of all general business; it is especially recommended for important transactions as to houses and land and for dealings with farmers and those trading in farm products. The night hours are contentious and prompt caution for the avoidance of quarrels and accidents from fire and explosion; thieves are likely to be unusually active during the hours between sunset of the 1st and the dawn of the 2nd, and many of them come to grief in their misdoings.

2—Thursday. Quite fortunate in the forenoon for transactions with artists and musicians, workers in silk, jewelers, tailors, dressmakers and milliners; and the day generally should be fully employed in pushing all honorable transactions; have money dealings in the afternoon, when also buy merchandise for trade, open new stores and deal with persons of station and wealth.

3—Friday. Attend to financial matters in the morning hours but do not apply to any public officer or any person in authority over thee for any kind of favor during the middle hours of the day; as the noon hours are passed, however, give all thine energies to business; especially such as pertains to manufacture or construction; perform chemical experiments; deal in electrical goods, drugs, machinery and sharp instruments.

4—Saturday. A very fortunate day for the literary pursuits and for dealings with persons engaged in clerical capacities, also teachers, students, surveyors, civil engineers, and mathematicians generally; give preference to the forenoon for business concerned with the mechanical pursuits and trades; travel, trade in cattle and metals and deal with chemists, physicians, military men and cutlers; the noon and the afternoon are the best parts of the day for dealings with printers, publishers, stationers and real estate trades; the mind will be unusually active and ideas clothe themselves readily and tastefully; urge correspondence, make contracts, especially such as affect legal and educational matters, hire help and push all matters of trade and business.

5—Sunday. Specially conducive to mental eccentricities and indulgences in the imaginative and marvelous in literature.

6—Monday. The unpropitious moments of this day occur before the noon hour when business of all kinds should be transacted conservatively, and when real estate dealings are best deferred; as the day advances, however, conditions are much improved and special activity is urged in conducting matters connected with art, music, fancy goods, articles of adornment, apparel and the beautiful and elegant in life; seek audience with ladies, and expect to derive more than usual pleasure or entertainment from the drama.

7—Tuesday. Be at work early on this day; solicit money advantages, buy goods for trade and urge the commercial pursuits to their utmost; dealings in stock and money transactions result favorably to those whose nativities also promise fairly at this time; do not waste a moment, but inaugurate as many of the new ventures in life as possible; the evening hours are less to be depended upon.

8—Wednesday. Be master of the tongue during the morning hours lest quarrels and unpleasantness come; do not have any surgical operations performed nor should any favorable result be expected from dealings with persons in the manufacturing walks of life; fires and accidents are to be guarded against; the latter part of the day is best.

9—Thursday. Hold fast the purse strings during the forenoon of this day when no purchases should be made of merchandise for trade; beware of speculation, giving thine energies to the disposal of what thou hast for trade rather than making new ventures. The strictly literary pursuits are more favored than others and mental efforts, though inclined towards the eccentric and novel will be likely to be more than usually effective.

10—Friday. Apply to public officials or thine employer for favor or advantages; deal in such commodities as coal, iron, wood, lead, lumber, wool and grain, and, with discretion, in mining and railroad stocks; make contracts for building and repairing; deal with printers, publishers, and persons generally in fiduciary capacities; have dealings with the laboring classes, and make beginnings in business pertaining to real estate and the agricultural pursuits.

11—Saturday. One of the excellent days in which all important undertakings should be pushed vigorously; seek money favors at the hands of banks and persons of wealth; important enterprises pertaining to the elegant occupations or polite arts are favorably begun at this time and the day is also fortunate for purchase or sale of wearing apparel and all fancy and ornamental goods.

12—Sunday. Not promising for a Sabbath day, inviting physical rest and quiet rather than exertion or mental efforts.

13—Monday. Defer thy purchases of wearing apparel until a more favorable time and look out in the pursuit of pleasure or recreation that extravagant drains are not made upon the purse; the afternoon encourages thee to crowd all literary and commercial undertakings, excepting dealings in the artistic and decorative wares; urge correspondence and crowd all mental efforts.

14—Tuesday. A very fortunate day for agricultural matters and for having any manner of dealings with landlords or in houses or lands, mining properties, lumber, coal or wool. During the middle hours of this day applications to employers and persons in authority for preferment or advantage are likely to meet with very favorable consideration.

15—Wednesday. Let the musician, artist, and all in the nicer avocations of life begin this day with its earliest moments and labor diligently until the evening, dealing also in articles of dress, adornment or decoration; taking principal steps in all business of these classes as early in the morning as possible; the evening bids thee be watchful of the purse and guarded against thefts or an extravagant inclination in thy purchases; it will be better if thy means is not invested at this time in any new undertaking.

16—Thursday. Be cautious in the use of the pen in the early forenoon, when commercial contracts are best deferred; sign no deeds; engage no servants nor expect much progress or advantage from any of the literary undertakings; as the noon is passed the moments increase in energy and enterprise and activity is invited in all the walks of life, but especially for machinists, engineers, mechanics, travellers, surgeons, electricians, military men, cutlers, and iron and brass workers; consult thy dentist and experiment in chemistry.

17—Friday. This day is peculiarly adverse for any beginning involving matters of a public nature or dealings with government officers or prominent persons in large corporations; have care to avoid disputes and controversies and keep the tongue well under control, as haste in most any venture on this day would be likely to do more harm than at any other times.

18—Saturday. Urge business of all kinds during all of this day, preference being given to such as depends upon mental labor for its best success. It is especially favorable for literary matters and for the prosecution of mathematical and scientific studies. Let all classes of contracts affecting legal matters and all important movements for intellectual improvement and educational interests be now made. Merchants and tradesmen are particularly favored.

19—Sunday. An excellent day for improvement of the mind and for proper appreciation of the merits of literary and scientific productions; the mind inclines rather more towards the sombre and reflective and the contemplation of the grand or sublime in nature and art than towards the flowery and ornate.

20—Monday. Choose this day for urging all honorable business to the utmost; for buying goods for trade and for money transactions generally.

21—Tuesday. This day is emphatically to be avoided for wooing or wedding; the fair sex should remember that dissensions and controversies threaten the matrimonial engagements now effected and the time is especially conducive to quarrels between lovers; be very cautious in handling fire and chemicals; surgical operations are extremely dangerous to both operator and patient; let the strictest temperance be exercised in all kinds of pleasure seeking; beware of the suddenly awakened appetite for stimulants, for these passing days are dangerous in this respect; it is apprehended that there will occur notorious harm or violence to some member of the fair sex that will reflect the viciousness of the existing conditions; there will be marked increase of intemperance and unusual aggravation of digestive troubles and kidney weakness. The above suggestions are peculiarly applicable to persons born about the 8th of January and April, and the 12th of July and October, of past years.

22—Wednesday. Let this day be improved for literary pursuits and engagements of minor character and importance, but steps of much magnitude are best postponed for a short season.

23—Thursday. A passive day in which local conditions contribute little impulse; improve vigorously the benevolent indications of thy nativity.

24—Friday. Have dealings on this day, especially in the early hours, with builders, plumbers, farmers, dyers, and all persons engaged in the laborious and dirty avocations, when also seek the society and ask favors of aged persons; purchase coal, lead, iron, grain, wool and lumber.

25—Saturday. On this day, do thou beware of litigation and contentions, for this is a day of strife and discord; engage no servants, travel not, and be sure to "make haste slowly" in thy respective avocations; be very careful if compelled to be about machinery or electrical apparatus and in the handling of chemicals, fire arms, hot liquids and fire; typhoid and respiratory troubles are more dangerous at this time and the best care should now be given to persons whose nativities render them peculiarly susceptible in this respect. The suggestions are appropriate also for the majority of persons born about the 24th of February, 26th of May, 28th of August and 26th of November, of past years.

26—Sunday. The day is a happy one until the afternoon hours, being particularly conducive to enjoyment from communion with the poet, musician and artist; extemporaneous preaching should abound in metaphor and elegant though eccentric sentiment and the musical portion of religious worship should be peculiarly happy and effective; the afternoon is disappointing and unsatisfactory.

27—Monday. This day encourages dealings with railway officials, public officers and persons in authority in large corporations, also for the study of uncommon subjects, patents, trade marks, etc.

28—Tuesday. Use the forenoon of this day for entering into important ventures in the literary world and dealing with booksellers, publishers, printers, lawyers and all ingenious persons; the night hours are evil and caution all against quarrels and disputes; see that no chances are taken of fires and explosions.

ARE YOU ONLY

ONE-HALF A MAN

A Full Five Days Treatment of Professor Jules Laborde's Marvelous French Vital Restorative

CALTHOS

BY SEALED MAIL

No C. O. D. or Deposit Scheme.

CALTHOS is now recognized by all intelligent physicians as the only perfect, permanent and unfailing cure for Spermatorrhœa, Impotency and Varicocele yet discovered. It is a preparation of the French scientist, Prof. Jules Laborde, the world's greatest specialist in nervous diseases.

It was Prof. Laborde who first discovered, and proved to the satisfaction of the French Academy by the record of 859 cases, that these dread diseases are due to nervous debility, and that no treatment which failed to recognize that fact and strike at the root of the trouble could do more than give temporary relief.

CALTHOS strikes at the root. It cures the disease and removes the cause. It is the only remedy known to science that will absolutely cure nervous debility. It has for years been used as a specific in the French and German Armies. It has a record of a vast number of perfect cures in every part of Europe. It is duplicating its foreign success in this country.

It is controlled in this country solely by The Von Mohl Co., of Cincinnati, and is sold under their positive guarantee, signed and acknowledged, that it will effect a perfect cure.

Every man who suffers from sexual weakness, premature loss of strength and memory, emissions, varicocele, shrunken parts, impotency, or any of the other awful results of early abuses, excesses, or overwork and nervous strain, can be cured if he will but avail himself of the CALTHOS treatment.

The time to do so is now. Neither CALTHOS nor anything else on earth can cure you after epilepsy sets in with the resulting consumption and insanity which follow naturally in the train of nervous debility and sexual diseases.

So remarkable has been the success of CALTHOS and so certain is The Von Mohl Co. of its ability to effect a cure in every case that, in order to give every sufferer in the country an opportunity to learn just what this remedy can do for him, it has decided to give every one who chooses to ask for it, the benefit of five days' FREE treatment.

Understand that this is no C. O. D. or Deposit Scheme—it is absolutely free. Understand, too, that The Von Mohl Co. is not a new nor an irresponsible concern, but is the biggest and most trustworthy house of the kind in America. This statement you can easily verify.

The CALTHOS remedy is sent in plain package; there is no publicity in receiving it or taking it. With it comes a full treatise telling you in plain language just what to do and just what the remedy will do for you.

This offer can of course remain open but a short time. It affords the greatest opportunity ever offered to the man whose condition forces him to look upon the future with dismay and anxiety, and to the man whom disreputable quacks, fake remedies and appliances have left in a worse condition than before.

Irresponsible advertisers mislead thousands by fake testimonials. A moment's thought will convince you that no one would allow his name to be printed in connection with this class of diseases. The Von Mohl Co. has received a large number of astonishing testimonials from those who have been completely cured by CALTHOS after all else had failed—after doctors had given them up and so-called "remedies" had been tried in vain, but of course it does not print, nor pretend to print, communications of so delicate and private a nature.

Five days CALTHOS treatment will place you on the highroad to health, manly strength and happiness—and it's free for the asking. Ask to-day. Address THE VON MOHL CO., 430 B, Cincinnati, Ohio. Largest Importers of Standard Preparations in the United States.

A Complete Outfit of 44 Tools FREE.

GREATEST MONEY MAKER AND MONEY SAVER EVER SEEN: NEEDED IN EVERY HOUSE IN THE WORLD.

Hundreds of dollars are wasted every year in paying for repairs which could be done by you just as well as by the person you hire. "Yes," you will say, "I could do this work if I only had the tools." You have to hire the plumber or cobbler and pay him for his time while you stand around and look on, watching him do the work which you could do as well as he, but it is always that you have no tools. We have put together the best kit of tools for repairing which was ever seen, and we will sell the entire outfit for less than half the money for which you could buy it at any store. The outfit consists of forty-four first-class tools, as shown in the above cut, viz: 1 iron last for men's work; 1 iron last for boy's work; 1 iron last for women's work; 1 iron last for children's work; 1 iron stand for lasts; 1 shoehammer; 1 shoeknife; 1 peg awl handle; 1 peg awl; 1 wrench for peg awl handle; 1 sewing awl handle; 1 sewing awl; 1 stabbing awl handle; 1 stabbing awl; 1 bottle leather cement; 1 bottle rubber cement; 1 bunch bristles; 1 ball shoe thread; 1 ball shoe wax; 1 pkg. clinch nails, 4-8 in.; 1 pkg clinch nails 5-8 in.; 1 pkg. clinch nails, 6-8 in.; 1 pkg. heel nails; 4 prs. heel plates, assorted sizes; 6 harness needles; 1 harness and saw clamp; 1 box slotted rivets, assorted sizes; 1 rivet set for same; 1 harness and belt punch; 1 soldering iron, ready for use; 1 handle for same; 1 bar solder; 1 bar resin; 1 bottle soldering fluid; 1 copy directions for halfsoling, etc., 1 copy directions for soldering all securely packed, together with directions for use, in a neat case. These tools bought at a hardware store separately would cost between $7.00 and $9.00. You can repair boots and shoes, tap and heel them, mend your harness or make a new one, mend all kinds of tinware, repair pumps, plumbing and similar work, and do all kinds of leather work about carriages, etc., as well as repair and mend rubber boots, rubbers, overshoes, and all kinds of rubber made articles. The clamp is used for mending harnesses and filing saws. Has a coil spring and is made of iron. You can easily save five times the cost of this outfit in six months and make a heap of money doing little repairs for your neighbors and others. "A stitch in time saves nine," and if you have these tools in your house you can make repairs and save a great deal of money which you would pay if you let a break go or hired a man to do your repairing work for you. Every one of these tools are full sized, practical, neat and cheap. It is the only complete outfit in the market and thousands have been sold in past years for $3.00 when the outfit contained but about half as many smaller articles to people living in the country and small towns as well as in the city. This repairing outfit, weighing 20 lbs. will be sent by freight complete as above described for only $2.50 which includes a 6 months' trial subscription to this paper.

GREAT PREMIUM OFFER.—If you will get up a club of 12 yearly trial subscribers to this paper at the special price of 25 cents each, we will send you one of these repairing outfits as a present to you. Address,
COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

NOTICE TO AGENTS.

A Profitable Business

FOR MEN AND WOMEN WHO ARE WILLING TO WORK.

$3.00 a Day Sure.

DEAR READER:

If you are out of work, or are not satisfied with your present business and would like to make more money, it will be to your interest to read this notice. We do not offer you a chance to make a fortune without work, but we do offer you an opportunity to make money much faster than you can make it at any other kind of work. The country is flooded with circulars offering chances to make money at the rate of from twenty to fifty dollars a day; such offers are not business-like, and all agents who amount to anything are disgusted with such circulars, and most of them are thrown aside without being read. If you are looking for an opportunity to make twenty to fifty dollars a day, you might as well throw this notice aside also; but if you would like to engage in a good paying business, you will do well to read this notice through carefully. Then you can use your own judgment as to whether our offer is a reasonable one or not.

We guarantee that anyone who is willing to work can make from $3 to $5 a day at this business. We admit that $3 to $5 a day is not much of an inducement when compared to the statements made by some firms, who offer all the way from $20 to $50 a day for selling various articles. We do not make you such glowing promises, but what we do offer you has the advantage of being true. We might offer agents a sure chance of making from $20 to $50 a day, but the chances are that anyone who would believe such unreasonable nonsense would not know enough to earn his board at any kind of business. That is not the kind of agents we are in quest of; we want reliable agents with common sense, who are willing to work for good pay, and not those who are looking for an opportunity to make a fortune without work. We believe the only way to get such agents and keep them, is to furnish them with a good thing to sell, a real genuine bargain, and then to tell them the exact truth about the business. We have a large number of agents at work, and we know for a certainty what working agents can make. We know that $3 a day is the very lowest; most of our agents are averaging $4 and $5 a day, and often some of them make a good deal more than that. We have several agents who are clearing from $7 to $10 a day. But these are great workers operating in the best territory, and, of course, everyone cannot do as well, but it is easy for anyone to make, at the very least, $3 a day above all expenses in any territory. We haven't a single working agent who is clearing, on an average, less than $3 a day. Now, be sure that you understand us: We don't say that lazy, shiftless agents will make $3 a day, for they can't do it at this or any other business, but what we do say is that agents who are willing to work, not too hard, but the same as they would expect to work at any other business, can easily clear $3 a day above all expenses, in any territory, and if they have good territory to work in they can make anywhere from $5 to $7, and even $10 a day. If you want a good chance to work and get good pay for it, you will find it to your interest to read this notice through carefully.

The articles which we have for you to sell are a line of forks, spoons, etc., made of a new metal called "Brazil Silver." We will describe this new line of goods the best we can, then you can judge for yourself whether we are offering you a good chance to make money or not.

BRAZIL SILVER.

Warranted for Twenty-five Years.

Brazil Silver is believed to be the very best metal in existence for the manufacture of forks and spoons; it has all the lustre and brilliancy of burnished coin silver, and is much harder and more durable, in fact, it is impossible to wear it out. It is absolutely indestructible. The goods made of this metal are the same all the way through, there being no plating to wear off they will remain as good as new for any length of time. For all practical purposes in the manufacture of table ware this Brazil Silver is superior to coin silver. It is as lustrous and as pure as coin silver, and being much harder it will wear even longer than silver; in fact it is absolutely impossible to wear it out. It will wear forever. As there is no plating to wear off, the metal being the same all the way through, it stands to reason that you can't wear it out. Our confidence in the metal is so great that we guarantee it to wear twenty-five years. We give a guarantee signed by the company warranting the goods to wear and to give perfect satisfaction for twenty-five years. We are an old, strong and thoroughly established firm with ample capital to carry on our business and make our guaranty as good as the Bank of England. In selling these goods an agent can recommend them with the greatest of confidence, for they are just as represented, absolutely indestructible. And, furthermore, our guarantee warranting the goods to give satisfaction for twenty-five years, clears the agent from all responsibility in the matter; for if any article fails to give perfect satisfaction, no matter how long it has been in use, we hold ourselves ready to refund the money paid for the article. These goods are the same metal all the way through; they will never wear out. They always wear white and bright. We give a guarantee signed by the company, warranting every piece of Brazil Silver to wear twenty-five years. You can sell these goods to your best friends with perfect confidence, for every sale is as much a benefit to your customer as to yourself.

Working with goods that are warranted to wear and give satisfaction for so long a time as twenty-five years, and by a Company, too, whose capital is sufficiently large to make their guarantee good for almost any amount, is an advantage which no other firm is prepared to offer. If you want to make money fast now is the time to do it. If you think that five-dollar bills are good things to have, now is the time to get them. Never in the history of the agency business have agents had as good a chance to make money rapidly, and it is reasonably sure that they will never have another chance like it.

It is easy to make from $3 to $5 a day at this business.

All Marked with Initial Letters, Without any Extra Cost.

Among all classes there has always been a strong desire to have their table ware marked with their initial letter, but on account of the heavy expense of having it marked only a very few have been able to afford it. Heretofore the cost of artistically marking table ware has been even greater than the cost of the goods; now, by our new methods, we are able to offer these elegant Brazil Silver goods, all marked with any initial letter desired in the very highest style of the art, without any extra cost for marking. These Brazil Silver goods, even if unmarked, would be the greatest bargain ever offered the public in table ware, but with the additional and highly desirable feature of being all marked with beautiful and artistic initial letters, these goods are not only great bargains in table ware, but are the greatest bargains of any kind that have ever been offered to the public through agents or in any other way.

The people are always ready enough to buy what they want when it is presented to them in the form of a genuine bargain. Well, here is absolutely the greatest bargain every offered, and the agent who works with it will find that what he has is earnestly desired at nearly every house he visits; it is easy to get orders when you can offer great bargains, that the people really want and can afford.

It is easy to make from $3 to $5 a day at this business.

Table and Dessert Knives.

Our knives are made of the finest tempered cutlery steel and are triple plate, in other words every dozen knives is plated with 12 dwt. of pure silver and hand burnished. Brazil Silver is the best metal ever discovered for making spoons and forks, but it is not hard and springy enough for knives. First-class knives can only be made of finely tempered steel and plated with pure silver. Our knives are of the highest grade, fully equal to Rogers' or any knives made. These knives will not wear as long as Brazil Silver goods, but they will wear as long as any knives made. We guarantee them to wear ten years in constant use. If not in constant use they will wear proportionately longer. We give a guarantee, signed by the Company, warranting the knives to wear and to give perfect satisfaction to the purchaser for ten years. As knives are usually used in families they will wear much longer, anywhere from fifteen to twenty years. They are fully equal to Rogers' knives and only cost about two-thirds as much. It may seem strange to some that we can sell so staple an article as silver plated knives at such reduced prices, but we are doing it. It is our way of giving the public good, solid value for their money. We are saving our customers about one-third of the price at which the same grade of knives are sold at the stores and jewelers. Anyone who will take the trouble to compare our knives and prices with triple plate 12 dwt. knives sold at the stores and jewelers, will be convinced of the truth of our statements. We are making a profit, of course, but our unequal facilities and immense trade make it possible for us to undersell all competitors, and our customers are getting the benefit of the lowest prices known in the silverware trade. We are not only selling at greatly reduced prices, but we also guarantee every article to be exactly as represented and to give perfect satisfaction to the purchaser, or money refunded.

The First Thing to Do.

If you decide to accept the agency, the first thing to do is to send to us for the agent's case of samples, which is the most complete and perfect case of samples that has ever been prepared for the convenience of agents. Our complete and perfect case of samples is not to be compared with anything that has ever been sent to agents before. It contains the very best and most salable articles in the world. There is nothing in the market that agents can sell as fast and sell as easily and make as much money out of, as they can the goods contained in this splendid case of samples, and everything is arranged and explained so that any agent can't fail to understand just how to go to work to make a great success of the business. As soon as you receive the case of samples you are ready for business. And if you are willing to work you are just as sure to make from $3 to $5 a day as the sun is to rise. Take the case of samples and canvass your territory according to the directions sent with the samples, until you have taken orders for the amount of goods you are prepared to send for. Then order the goods from us and fill your orders, and so continue.

The Magnificent Case of Samples Which We Furnish to Agents.

The case of samples which we furnish to agents contains the following articles:

One Sample Table Knife, retail price, $2.10 per set of six	35	cents each
One Sample Dessert Knife, retail price, $1.95 per set of six	32 1-2	cents each
One Sample Table Fork, retail price, $1.95 per set of six	32 1-2	cents each
One Sample Table Spoon, retail price, $1.95 per set of six	32 1-2	cents each
One Sample Dessert Fork, retail price, $1.80 per set of six	30	cents each
One Sample Dessert Spoon, retail price, $1.80 per set of six	30	cents each
One Sample Tea Spoon, retail price, 95 cents per set of six	15 5-6	cents each
One Sugar Shell	25	cents each
One Butter Knife	25	cents each
One Salt or Pepper Shaker	25	cents each
Total retail value of Samples	$2.83 1-3

We also send you with the case of samples a large and very beautiful catalogue, illustrating a full line of plated ware, such as Casters, Pickle Cruets, Butter Dishes, Tea Sets, Napkin Rings, etc., etc., etc.

Reckoning the above samples at our lowest retail prices they amount to $2.83 1-3. We furnish them to agents nicely put up in an elegant sample case or roll, for only 85 cents, which is 1.98 1-3 less than they amount to at our regular retail prices. This is less than one-third of the retail value of the samples, and much less than they cost us. The sample case or roll, which the samples are put up in costs us nearly as much as we require you to send for the samples, case and all.

Wholesale Prices.

Wholesale or agents' prices and all necessary information for carrying on the business will be furnished with the Outfit. Remember we make everything plain to you about wholesale prices, methods, etc., when we send you the Outfit.

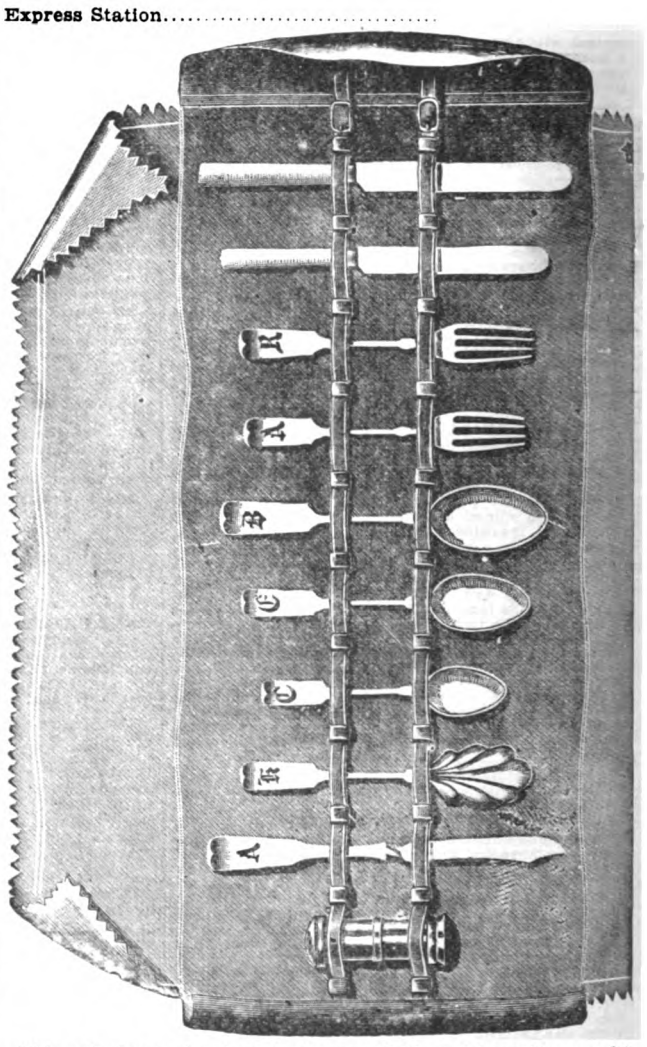
VERY IMPORTANT.

The business we are offering is straightforward and honest in everyway, shape and manner. Our goods are in every respect, just as we represent them to be. The Outfit we furnish our agents is exactly as we represent it, and is always sent the same day the order is received, just as agreed. We have tried to state these facts so they could and would be believed and still we are constantly receiving letters from parties who would like to engage in the business and would do so if they felt sure we were telling the truth and would do as we agree. Many of these doubters have been cheated and are not altogether to blame for doubting; the most of them say they think we are honest, they say we talk honest, but as they have already been swindled they don't feel like risking even eighty-five cents, and so, although our business is in every respect just as represented, and we always do just as we promise, we lose the services of a great many agents and they lose the benefit they might derive from the business because they are afraid we may not be telling the truth. Now, to overcome this spirit of doubt, we have decided to send Samples to all who wish us to do so, C. O. D., with privilege of examination at the express office. It costs us from twenty-five to forty cents more to send the samples this way, as we have to pay that amount for return charges on the money, but we are willing to do it and so prove to all that are interested that the Outfit and our goods are just what we claim. If after reading this notice you think you would like to give the business a trial, but wish to see the Sample Case before you pay the eighty-five cents, cut out the following printed form, fill it out and send it to us and we will send the Outfit to your express office prepaid, and give the express agent instructions to let you thoroughly examine the Outfit, then, if you are satisfied that we have told the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, and are also satisfied that you can make money selling our goods, you can pay the express agent eighty-five cents and take the Outfit. If you are not satisfied, you can refuse to take it and the agent will return it to us. No other firm has ever made such an offer. We have adopted this plan in order to convince the most skeptical and to secure the services of all the good working agents in the United States.

(CUT OUT THE FOLLOWING FORM.)

Form to be Signed by those who wish us to send the Outfit C. O. D. with Privilege of Examination.

ROYAL MANUFACTURING CO., DETROIT, MICH.:



GENTLEMEN—Send the Outfit by Express, C. O. D., with privilege of examination. If I find the Outfit just as you say, I will pay the eighty-five cents required and give the business a fair trial, but if I am not satisfied that the Outfit is as good as you recommend it to be, I shall refuse to receive it. Now, remember, the understanding is that I am not to take the Outfit unless I, myself, am satisfied that it is all right. It must all depend on my own judgment. If I am satisfied, I will take the Outfit; if I am not satisfied, I shall not take it and shall not pay the eighty-five cents. If you want to send the Outfit with this understanding, send it along C. O. D., with privilege of examination.

This cut shows the Sample Case or Roll, and how the samples appear put up ready for business. The Roll is made of highly finished waterproof canvas, and lined with soft flannel goods. The samples are held in place by strong straps. The whole rolls up and fastens with a leather strap which is firmly fastened to the back of the Roll. This is the most practical arrangement for carrying the samples that could be thought of. When rolled up the Case is compact and easy to carry. When open the samples show to the best possible advantage, making a good impression at first sight. This Sample Roll gives a business-like appearance; it is substantial and handsome, and invariably gives the impression that there is something valuable inside. All are anxious to see what it is you are carrying around with such care. This is of importance as it secures attention and interest at the start. There is nothing like having your samples put up in a business-like shape; it gives a favorable impression from the start, which is half the battle. It is the same in all matters. A store that looks like business attracts customers; while, from a shanty store, you would not, as a rule, expect the best things. The fact is, in the agency business, as in every other business, you must have things fixed up just right if you expect to succeed. Our Brazil Silver Goods are the best that have ever been offered for the price, or anywhere near it. The new feature of being marked with beautiful and artistic initial letters, free of cost, is the greatest popular hit of the times; and the Sample Roll is arranged so as to show the goods off to the best possible advantage. Furthermore, we carefully teach every agent just how to take advantage of all these splendid qualities and popular features. Is it any wonder that our agents succeed better than those who are working for other firms?

We Prepay all Express Charges on Everything. We pay the charges on the Outfit and on all goods ordered. Remember, we pay all express charges.

A VALENTINE.

From the meadow your walks have left so sweet
That whenever a March-wind sighs
He sets the jewel-print of your feet
In violets blue as your eyes,
To the woody hollows in which we meet,
And the valleys of Paradise.

The slender acacia would not shake
One long milk-bloom on the tree;
The white lake-blossoms fell into the lake,
As the pimpernel dozed on the lea;
But the rose was awake all night for your sake,
Knowing your promise to me;
The lilies and roses were all awake,
They sighed for the dawn and thee.

Queen rose of the rose-bud garden o girls,
Come hither! the dances are done;
In gloss of satin and glimmer of pearls,
Queen lily and rose in one;
Shine out, little head, sunning over with curls,
To the flowers and be their sun.

There has fallen a splendid tear
From the passion flower at the gate,
She is coming, my dove, my dear;
She is coming, my life, my fate!
The red rose cries, "She is near, She is near;"
The larkspur listens, "I hear, I hear;"
And the lily whispers, "I wait."

She is coming, my own, my sweet;
Were it ever so airy a tread,
My heart would hear her and beat,
Were it earth in an earthly bed;
My dust would hear her and beat,
Had I lain for a century dead;
Would start and tremble under her feet,
And blossom in purple and red.

— Alfred Tennyson.

SYNOPSIS.

Theo Staples, eldest daughter of the senior partner of Staples & Stilton, publishers, was called by the family the odd one, as she had peculiar ideas on many things. She was a very lovely girl of twenty-three, and desired to enter her father's publishing house to learn the business—more as a means of aiding working women than for any other reason. Her father reluctantly allowed her to do this, and his young partner, Ambrose Stilton, took a great fancy to her, though he could see that she disliked him. Oliver Norman, a foreman in one of the departments, however, attracted her in an unaccountable manner, and they became friendly on account of their peculiar tendencies; they were able to read each other's thoughts, and this led to experiments tried at Theo's home, in which all the family were interested. Oliver Norman was an inventor, and in his spare moments was working on an invention in a little room which had been partitioned off for him, at the publishing house.

BUT there was one who was inwardly furious at what he considered Oliver Norman's upstart impertinence in pushing his way into Miss Staples' good graces. His rage was all the more furious because he, himself, had seemed not to advance one step in his design to win her love and admiration. He understood her sufficiently, however, to recognize that his worst policy would be to show openly his bitter feelings toward Mr. Norman. This person was Ambrose Stilton.

One evening, however, Mr. Staples gave him a clue which he set to work to use in the furtherance of his purpose. Oliver Norman had completed the work he had been engaged on, and had placed the manuscript in the care of Staples & Stilton for immediate publication.

"Have you looked into Norman's book manuscript, Mr. Stilton?" asked Mr. Staples.

"Heavens, no!" said Stilton with a sniff of contempt. "Seems to me that fellow had better stick to his proper business in the house instead of wasting his time in writing trashy literature, and trying to invent what he probably knows nothing about. You ought not to encourage him, Mr. Staples."

"You don't do him justice, Stilton. As to attending to his business, no man could be more punctual, and if he can hit the right thing in that invention to make the press work more rapidly than it now does, why, it will be money in his pocket; and in ours too, perhaps. Then as to his book; if he chooses to spend his nights in writing, I don't see what business it is of ours. But you ought to look over that manuscript. It's all about that new fangled craze, hypnotism, mesmerism and such things. Theo had him here a few evenings experimenting with her and the girls, and by George! he did some very queer things; put Rose and Anna to sleep, made Anna tell where Rose had hidden some things, made Theo wide awake, tell the number of the page in a book which he held where she couldn't see—I don't understand it at all. I thought perhaps a young man like you would know. He read us several chapters of his manuscript at different times."

Stilton listened intently and remembered that a mesmerist had once said to him that he, himself, had potent power in this direction, but he only said now, as he rose to go:

"Yes, I know a little about those things and I guess I'll go over Norman's manuscript. You know there's a great deal of quackery and fraud about this sort of thing; do you think it's quite safe to allow your daughters to get their heads filled with such nonsense?"

"Wait till you have daughters of your own," Mr. Staples said, "then you'll not talk about 'allowing' them to do this or that."

Ambrose Stilton bade his host a smiling good-night, but as the street door closed behind him, his face took on a savage look and he muttered fiercely:

"So that's your little game is it, Mr. Oliver Norman! You hypnotize the proud Theodora, do you? Well that's a game two can play at," and he threw his head back with conscious strength and power.

The next morning as he glanced through the daily paper his eyes brightened as he read a certain paragraph.

"So cousin Philip is back from Paris. I'm in luck! Come to think of it, wasn't hypnotism what he went over for, to study that or some other new fad in the Paris hospitals? I'll make him a call and find out what I can."

Dr. Philip Somes, just returned from a year's stay in Europe, was greatly surprised at the warmth of his cousin Ambrose Stilton's greeting when the latter called at his office a few days later. He was still more surprised at the new interest in medical science which he manifested. The doctor, brimming with professional enthusiasm over the wonderful feats accomplished in the French hospitals by Professors Charcot, Binet, and others, in curing disease through hypnotic suggestions, was easily led into detailed accounts of some of these in which his cousin showed such interest that he was invited to be present at some experiments which Dr. Somes and his partner were about to try on one of their patients. This Mr. Stilton readily promised.

Oliver Norman's invention was as yet incomplete—one bit of gearing did not work quite well, and yet he could not see where the fault lay. He had shown it to Messrs. Staples & Stilton; the latter was not particularly interested, but Mr. Staples was quite anxious for its completion and spoke of this anxiety to Theo.

She wondered if Mr. Norman would allow her to see this mysterious piece of machinery. On Mr. Staples mentioning her wish, Oliver readily consented. So one day, accompanied by her father, Theo was admitted in the little workroom which was kept safely locked, save when the inventor was within.

"It seems rather odd, Miss Staples," he said, "to admit a lady into this workroom. So few are at all interested in machinery."

Then he uncovered his model, explaining, as he pointed out each part, its connection with the whole design. He was pleased that Theodora showed by her questions that she followed his meaning and appreciated the possibilities involved in the invention. She evinced a particular interest over the defective part, studied it a little in silence with knitted brow, then expressed a hope that the right idea would soon come; and as they passed out of the room, Oliver felt her bright presence as an augury of coming success.

Two or three days later as he was hurriedly passing her case, she called him to her.

"I fear you will think me very silly," she began in a hesitant way. "Do you believe at all in dreams, Mr. Norman?"

"Well sometimes," he answered, "though my own dreams rarely come true."

"Mine do very often," said Theo, "otherwise I wouldn't think of telling you that last night I had a queer dream about you and your invention. I dreamed that you had solved the difficulty of which you spoke to me; that you came to me with beaming face and cried 'Eureka!' and showed me a diagram which you had drawn on a piece of paper and began to explain it to me—then I woke up, but soon went to sleep and again dreamed that you brought the same diagram to me and seemed worried that I did not understand it; then again I awoke and as it was daylight, I rose, got paper and pencil and drew a copy of the diagram thus impressed upon my mind. Of course I don't suppose that it means anything, but I thought you might be interested to see the diagram of my dream. Here it is," and she gave him a folded bit of paper. As he studied it his face took on a graver expression and finally his eyes turned to Theo with a scared look while his hand shook.

"Miss Staples, this is the greatest thing! Do you know I do think this holds the solution of that refractory gear. May I take this diagram and compare it with my own plans?"

He was gone a long time, but at last he came back looking so happy that Theo was prepared for his announcement that the diagram gave him just the hint he needed to complete the model. He thanked her warmly. "I wish my book were not so nearly out of press, so I could add this confirmatory dream of yours," he said.

It was in October that Theo's determination to learn the printer's art took possession of her. She had worked on bravely through the winter and spring without showing signs of faltering or weariness in spite of her outside work among working women, and her study of Psychic lore. It was now nearly the first of June, and the family as usual, were preparing to leave the city for the summer months. Theo, absorbed in her new life, at first objected to being included in the general vacation exodus, but within the past week or two her resolution had faltered and she had consented to go to Newport.

Ever since her entrance upon her new duties, her father's partner had been exceedingly cordial and pleasant in his manners to her, but of late he sought her more frequently on the most trivial excuses; frequently bouquets of rare flowers were left upon her case, and occasionally he turned the talk in such channels as offended Theo's taste. What annoyed her greatly now, was the queer and conflicting state of mind in regard to him which she discovered in herself. Out of her sight he was positively disliked; whenever she saw him approach, it was with a sense of annoyance, but all this was dissipated as if by magic, as soon as he fixed his eyes upon and spoke to her; then there came to her a sense of positive pleasure in his presence, a dreamy, languorous delight in watching every change in his expressive countenance, the graceful gesticulations of his hands and arms in conversation, the frequent change of pose in his supple and athletic figure; and while he talked his sayings seemed full of wit and wisdom; but when she tried afterward to recall what was said, the words seemed to have lost their charm. She had never so far in her life been consciously in love with any man, but the state of her mind toward Mr. Stilton, so perplexed her that she sometimes wondered if the fascination she felt when he was present, could be the beginning of the fatal passion. She could not speak of this to her mother. She sometimes longed to confide her perplexities to Mr. Norman who seemed to her so self-poised and serene; but he was a man, so that was out of the question. So she concluded to go to Newport with the family and think matters out straight by herself. Besides, she found she needed rest as never before in her healthful, vigorous life. A strange, exhausted feeling had come over her lately. Sometimes it was an exertion even to think or talk.

Mr. Stilton was temporarily away on business for the firm when Theo made her sudden decision. So Mr. Staples could not accompany the family party as usual to see them settled comfortably in their summer quarters, but one of his sons went in his place, as much care was required in the removal of the dear invalid mother.

After a few days of Newport life, bathing in the surf, taking long drives and walks, rowing and fishing, Theo began to feel quite like her old self. She concluded she must have been suffering a severe attack of "nerves" as she recalled her strange state of mind in regard to Ambrose Stilton who now appeared to her a most common-place man to whom she was utterly indifferent.

"I must not allow any more of those maudlin conversations to take place. I will snub him severely, once for all on my return," she thought. She felt that she had wholly recovered from her glamour in regard to him, when to her surprise she received a letter from him in which he formally declared his love for her and his desire to make her his wife.

Her answer was not delayed as he had begged, until her return, but was sent at once, a brief but emphatic refusal. "And that puts an end to my printing business," she thought ruefully, "until papa and he dissolve partnership at least, for I could never place myself in a position where he could have access to me again." It was characteristic of her that in this case also, she took no one, not even her mother into her confidence.

Two or three evenings after the day she sent her letter of refusal to Mr. Stilton, she was asked to make one of a party of four to drive to the bathing beach near the cliff walk. The friend who invited her was a lady artist, who wished to catch the moonlight effect on the rolling surf. One gentleman accompanied the party, so Theo felt quite safe to wander on the moonlit sands some distance away from them as the beach at that hour was comparatively deserted. It was ten o'clock and the craggy rocks below the cliff walk seemed to her filled with weird shapes and the air alive with whisperings from uncanny looking nooks. Her own mood was one of peaceful, happy reverie. A vague sense of the possible happiness of mere being filled her heart and brain with beautiful fantasies of a future life better worth living than this. She looked back at the dim group of figures flitting about the artist and tried to fancy herself really alone and that these were water sprites making a brief visit on shore.

Some one laughed; she heard, and that broke the spell. To renew it she walked on further to be out of the sound of their voices. Now she felt quite alone. A light fog hid the curved shoreline on the left as she faced the ocean. How vast and strong and mysterious it looked with here and there a white sail glittering in the moonlight, and afar off specks of light marking the position of sea craft of various sorts. No wonder the Eternity had been likened to an ocean; these points of light might be ministering spirits bent on some great mission.

"Theodora! Theodora!"

As if one stood beside her and called upon her despairingly, she heard this tense cry. It was the voice of Oliver Norman! She turned as in a dream, fully expecting to see him close by, saying as she turned, "what is the matter?"

She started, for she was still alone with not even a bathing-house or rock near by to conceal anything—the wet sand shining under her feet, the sea stretching before, silence and solitude behind, out of hearing distance of the shadowy group of friends.

She waited awestruck, then came once more the distinct call "Theodora! help!"

Twice before in her life she had heard such calls: once when her twin brother aged ten met his death by drowning while bathing several miles away from her; and again when her mother in a runaway met with the accident which had since kept her an invalid.

She understood now. Something, she knew not what, had happened to Oliver Norman in which he needed her aid. With the strong desire which immediately arose in her soul to go at once to him, came the knowledge that somehow she could help him, and came also like a shock the revelation to herself that he held a power over her which no other man had ever held, which no other could hold.

She walked slowly back to her party which was ready to return, and was strangely silent during the drive homeward. The next morning, making the excuse that she wished to attend to some business for the club girls, she took the Old Colony train for Boston, and went directly to the publishing house. She went first to the floor where her own work had been; neither Mr. Staples nor Mr. Stilton seemed to be in.

Intending to return to Newport at once in case her imagination had played her false, she stepped inside the private office and wrote a note to leave for her father. A book of poems which she had loaned one of the girls, lay on the desk, open, with a passage marked; taking up one of the blotters she put it in the book as a mark, and taking the book with her she passed to the lower floor with a quick beating heart, hoping yet fearing to meet Mr. Norman. A glance around the room showed her that he was not there, but Ambrose Stilton came forward to meet her with an inexplicable look of triumph in his dark crafty eyes. She met him coldly and asked only for her father and was told he would not return until late in the afternoon. She asked Mr. Stilton to deliver her note if she did not see him. A little disappointed and fearing she had allowed herself to be too precipitous, she walked on Tremont street slowly homeward. The dear familiar common looked so shaded, so green, and so inviting that she decided as she reached the Park street entrance, to cross to Boylston street by way of it.

The fountain in the Frogpond was playing prettily and she stopped at one of the benches near by to rest and look at it. As she did so she saw Oliver Norman strolling in her direction. He was walking slowly with a dejected, perplexed air quite unlike his usual serenity. When nearly opposite he caught sight of her and came at once to her side with a strange look of relief.

TO BE CONCLUDED.

WE were seeing the Tower of London. Our party consisted of myself, my wife, her sister Allie and Harry Ainsworth. We had been joined at the outset by three strangers, Londoners, judging from their appearance and talk—two men and a woman. This woman attracted me at first glance. She might be described as belonging to the lower fringe of the middle third of London's populace. There was that about her which a fastidious man might have called vulgar—a mouth that was just a little too straight, and the most piercing of black eyes. She was rather overdressed, too, but her face was strikingly handsome withal, and her figure was faultless. I thought of a tigress.

florid and fat, and evidently one of those ubiquitous male monsters whose only aim is to live peacefully and quietly. He seemed to me to be exceedingly nervous.

The other man was an undersized fellow, who looked more like a Whitechapel tough than anything else, and whose only trouble seemed to be the good suit of clothes and collar he wore—a species of ornamentation to which he was apparently not accustomed.

As we reached the last exhibit of all, the Wakefield tower where the Regalia or Crown Jewels are kept, the warder who had us in charge, and whose one object seemed to be to finish as soon as possible, made it plain that we were to satisfy our curiosity as rapidly as might be consistent with good taste.

As we entered the hall I noticed casually an equestrian statue which stood just at the head of the stairway. It was of horse and man clad in full armor, and very like some of those on exhibition in the Armory. Why it was not there with the others I could not and cannot imagine. The young man whose clothes did not fit examined this relic with interest, and I noticed as we passed from the main hall into the long room where the glass cases containing the jewels are disposed, that he was loitering behind, still intent on his inspection.

It would be superfluous to say a word of the splendid exhibit, including the crowning glory of it all, the great diamond—the Kohinoor—even if I had given it sufficient attention to impress its splendors on my memory. But on the contrary I was busy watching the two strange men and the woman. Their actions had appeared suspicious from the first, and now they were doubly so.

Suddenly pandemonium cast loose in the hall outside. It was as if a whirlwind had visited a tin shop and was making sport with all the tinware together. The warder sprang through the door followed by Allie and my wife, with Harry close behind. I, too, started to follow, and then, prompted by some impulse, looked back. The woman threw up her hands and fell forward onto the glass case, which went to pieces with a crash; then she slid to the floor and struggled for an instant. The fattish man instead of going to her assistance started for the door. I ran to her and supported her head. There was a sound of hurrying footsteps and several warders ran in; one who appeared to be in authority ordered her to be taken up carefully and carried out into the hall, while the doors of the treasure room were locked.

Out in the hall we found that the clatter had been caused by the armored statue of horse and man, which had fallen down the whole length of the stone stairway. The woman was laid out on the floor and two of the warders were fanning her awkwardly, while a number of others stood about and offered good advice. The two men of the woman's party had disappeared completely.

I judged that we had had excitement enough for one afternoon, and so gathered my party and slipped away unobserved. Of course we discussed it and wondered over it, as we strolled along, until we found ourselves on the Strand, where we viewed the city at quitting time, when everybody was hurrying homeward. It was very entertaining. At last we came to a place where a crowd surrounded a bulletin. There seemed to be considerable excitement, and we understood several people to shout the word "Kohinoor." Harry tried to edge his way into the crowd in search of information, but unsuccessfully; just then a newsman came along bearing a placard announcing an extra edition of the Gazette, in staring letters:

THEFT OF THE KOHINOOR.
DARING ROBBERY.
Scotland Yard has a Clue.

I understood it all now; the nervousness of the man and the suspicious actions of all of them; the overthrow of the armored statue, which distracted attention while the woman broke the case and secured the priceless jewel. She had tossed it to the man, who made off at once. As we walked on toward the hotel I explained to the others how we had looked on while as bold a robbery as the annals of the police could show was being perpetrated.

"Not a word of this," I cautioned. "We don't want to be implicated, or dragged into court as witnesses at the best." And then we fell to discussing the robbery in all its phases, just as every one else in London was doing.

That night after dinner, the ladies having gone up-stairs, Harry and I started out to see something of the streets by night. The City proper is a dull place in the evening, and after a tramp of an hour or so we took a cab and drove over Whitechapel way. Even here there was little to be seen out of doors that was different from the sights at like time in similar parts of New York. We finally descended from the cab, and after dismissing the driver, proceeded on foot. In changing my clothes I had left all my money at the hotel, and found it necessary to call on Harry to foot the bill.

After tramping around for a bit we felt thirsty enough to patronize a low-looking bar room that stood conveniently open. It was very natural that we should be thirsty, and yet I have never been able to shake myself entirely free of the conviction that fate sent us after that beer.

An ill-favored bar-tender presided behind the counter, aided and abetted by a slouchy-looking young woman with her sleeves rolled up above her elbows. Several roughs lounged along the counter, and a number of others sat on more or less fragmentary chairs about the square room, the middle floor-space of which was occupied by a cripple who executed a shuffling dance. We got a pot of beer apiece and sat together on a bench against one of the walls, a flimsy partition with a door in it, and tried to enjoy the show. We had scarcely settled ourselves when there was an interruption. A man and a woman entered. She was closely veiled, and paused only long enough to nod at the bar-tender, before disappearing through the door near our bench. The loungers forgot the cripple and stared after her. But I was looking at her companion, who followed her through the door and slammed it shut. The woman's figure had struck me as familiar, but the man I positively recognized as he of the ill-fitting clothes at the Tower.

Interest centered in the dancer again, and I took the occasion to impart to Harry my conviction that these were two of the thieves of the Kohinoor. He was all excitement in an instant and wanted to run in and capture them regardless of consequences. But I was more prudent, and leaving him to keep watch sauntered carelessly out.

It is not so easy to find a cab in some parts of London as one might imagine, but finally I caught one and gave the driver orders to post for Scotland Yard. Then, recollecting that I had no money, I checked him long enough to tell him to make the Metropole first. We arrived and I started through the lobby toward the lift. Just as I passed the clerk's desk I heard him say, "There he goes now!" and the man to

THE MAN THAT WOMEN WRITE TO.

There's a man in Buffalo, who has without doubt, a larger number of women correspondents than any other person, man or woman, in the entire country. And yet not one in a thousand of the women who write have ever seen the man they write to. For after all it's not the man they write to but the physician. There's no sex in medicine. The physician with this extensive correspondence is Dr. R. V. Pierce, chief consulting physician of the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, of Buffalo, N. Y.

Undoubtedly Doctor Pierce owes his great popularity among women to his many and wonderful cures of that class of diseases known as "female troubles." To the treatment and cure of these diseases he has given over thirty years of his professional life, and has established himself as the specialist par excellence in the treatment of diseases peculiar to women.

The esteem in which Dr. Pierce is held by women is not to be wondered at when it is known that in the thirty years, and over, in which he has given attention to woman's diseases, he has, aided by his staff of nearly a score of experienced and skilled specialists, treated over a half a million women, and with such success that ninety-eight out of every hundred treated have been absolutely and altogether cured.

Doubtless there are other reasons why multitudes of women consult Dr. Pierce by letter and as not the least among such reasons women would set down the friendly, even fatherly advice which the age and experience of Dr. Pierce enable him to give as supplemental to the advice and instructions of the physician. Women, also, are not slow to remember that Dr. Pierce, through his method of consultation by correspondence was the first physician to offer them relief from the unpleasant questions, the offensive examinations and the local treatments, generally inseparable from the treatment of diseases of women by local practitioners.

Of course, Dr. Pierce has had many imitators who steal the terms which his advertisements have made familiar, to use them as their "catch-words," and so to draw the attention of women in their direction. The most noticeable feature of these imitations is that, women with dangerous diseases are urged to consult by letter some one who is not a physician, and has neither the educational ability nor the legal right to treat disease. And sometimes, because it is impossible for these advertisers to lay claim to the title of physician, they raise a clamor of "write to a woman." "Woman understands woman," hoping doubtless by this artifice to draw away attention from the fact that they do not and cannot offer the advice of a qualified physician. But women are quick to see that a woman unless educated in medicine and qualified to practice, can give no advice upon disease that would not be liable to be as dangerous as the disease itself. For there is no place where ignorance is so dangerous as when it undertakes to meddle with a woman's health.

That class of advertisers who raise the cry of "write to a woman" are getting to be known as "bearded women," because the "woman in the case" is a mere figure-head, a stalking horse to shelter the man who preys on women's confidence. An example of the peculiarly preposterous claims made by these people, is found in the claim that a "man can't understand a woman—just because he is a man." The only way in which this can be interpreted as true is by accepting the statement in its bare literalness as of man and woman. But it is to be noticed that there is a vast difference when you qualify the terms man and woman by the term physician. How easy it would be for such advertisers to say, "write to a woman physician because a man physician cannot understand a woman, just because he is a man." How easy it would be to do this if the "woman" who invites correspondence could or dared write M. D. after her name, and even then, how preposterous the statement would remain. For two thousand years the practice of medicine has been entirely in the hands of men, as it is in general to-day. Woman in medicine is a new thing, so new that she has not entered to any known extent into the field of surgery. Whatever any woman practitioner has learned of medicine, she must have learned in schools, taught by men, and from books written by men. What a paradox therefore is presented in the claim that the man who has taught woman all she knows about medicine, does not know anything about medicine himself.

Women who are educated in medicine would be the first to laugh at such statements. It's only the woman of the advertisements, the "woman" for revenue only, and who is not a physician, who can afford to make such amazing and ridiculous claims.

But this side issue has led us somewhat a-field from Dr. Pierce and his great host of women correspondents. To these the doctor stands a sort of father confessor of things physical. Every letter is read privately, answered privately, and its contents guarded as sacredly as becomes such confessions. And as many women are naturally sensitive about their ailments even the replies are mailed, carefully and securely sealed in a perfectly plain envelope, without printing or advertising upon it, that there may be no third party to this correspondence.

Any sick woman can have the benefit of consultation by letter with Dr. Pierce absolutely without fee or charge of any kind.

More than half a million invalid women have been successfully treated by Doctor Pierce, aided by his staff of skilled specialists through the medium of correspondence. In this way disagreeable questionings and abhorent examinations and "local treatments" are avoided.

The world at large knows of Doctor Pierce, chiefly as the inventor of the two well-known remedies, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription. And it is probably the case, that in general, Dr. Pierce's remedies are classed with all the other "patent medicines," and Dr. Pierce himself ranked with those "doctors" whose degrees are purely honorary or assumed, and no more stand for medical knowledge or experience, than the familiar title of "Major" in some sections of our country, signifies that the bearer of it is familiar with siege and battle. Dr. Pierce does not belong to the class of doctors whose titles are by courtesy only. He is a doctor by choice, a doctor by education, a doctor by practice and experience.

Dr. Pierce's remedies differ from most medicines, in the fact that they contain no alcohol, whiskey or other intoxicant, and are absolutely free from opium and every other narcotic drug. For no other medicine prepared exclusively for the use of women, as is "Favorite Prescription," can such a claim be truthfully made.

The difference between Dr. Pierce's establishment and all "patent medicine" establishments is very remarkable, and is apparent at once to every person who has had the opportunity of actually comparing Dr. Pierce's laboratory with that of any other institution. For instance, since Dr. Pierce has advertised to give free consultation by letter, many have imitated the advertisements and make an exactly similar offer. As far as the advertisements go they make just as good a showing as Dr. Pierce's. But go to these other establishments and ask to see the "doctor," who gives medical advice, and you'll find, nine times out of ten, that there is no doctor connected with the establishment. Compare this with Dr. Pierce's Institution, the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, with its staff of nearly a score of graduated and experienced doctors, busy every day in actual practice, its great special laboratory and dispensary, from which special medicines and auxiliary treatment are sent out daily to all parts of the country, its hospital with its surgical and mechanical appliances and operating rooms. In such a comparison you see at a glance that there is no institution equal to Dr. Pierce's in the whole country.

In the work of the World's Dispensary, and Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, there is real philanthropy as well as real medical and surgical skill. The best recognition of the philanthropic aspect of this work comes from the citizens of Buffalo, Dr. Pierce's home town, who elected him State Senator, and later gave him a seat in Congress. From the latter position Dr. Pierce resigned before the expiration of his term. That he should prefer to give up a high and honorable position in the councils of the Nation, to serve the sick, is conclusive evidence of his devotion to their interests and of love for his profession. Perhaps we can offer our readers no better summing up of Dr. Pierce and his work than that of President Garfield, who said, "He is one of the best men in the world, and he is at the head of one of the best institutions in the world."

whom this was addressed hurried after me. He touched me on the shoulder and said, "I am Inspector Smith of Scotland Yard, Mr. Gregory. I would like to speak to you." For an instant I was elated, and then remembering that we had reason to fear our connection with the escapade of the afternoon, my heart stood still. His first words sealed my doom. "You were at the Tower this afternoon!"

Before I could collect myself to reply, a man in uniform ran up to the Inspector and made some announcement in a whisper. The Inspector dropped me like a hot cake, and without so much as a word of explanation ran out of the hotel. I thought I was free but the man in uniform seemed to think otherwise. He caught me by the arm. "Come!" he said.

"What for?"

"H' ask no questions."

"Am I under arrest?"

"H'I dunno. Th' Inspector 'ad ye, h'and h'I h'aint goin' t' letcha go!"

So we went, and got into a cab (not my cab) and were soon tearing down into Whitechapel. Eventually we pulled up at the very barroom where I had left Harry on watch. But before describing the scene that took place on our arrival I will let Harry relate what happened during my absence, as he recounted it to me later.

"After you stepped out," said Harry, "I discovered that by resting my head against the partition at my back I could catch the hum of voices on the other side, very subdued. There was so much noise out around the bar that I could at first make nothing of the dialogue within. Just then in comes a man who is no other than the one you call the husband of the woman—the fattish man as you call him. He had in tow a Sheeny—second-hand clothing man, fence, pawn-broker or whatever you like. The fattish man motioned the Jew to a chair and went and knocked at the door near my seat. They let him in and I heard the woman cry—sort of soft—'Have you got it? have you got it?'

"He must have handed her something for she said, 'Oh, my beauty, my beauty! Millions of dollars! And you bring the Jew?'

"'Fetch him outside.'

"'Bring him in!'

"The man opened the door and beckoned to the pawnbroker. When they had him inside I heard him cry, 'The Kohinoor! You haf steal t' Kohinoor!' There was a gurgle as though some one had caught him by the throat and I heard the woman say, 'Not a word, you hound! Peach and you're a dead Jew. Now tell me what that is worth and how we can get rid of it.'

"'You can't not sell that,' was the reply. 'Unless——'

"'Unless what?'

"'Unless you cut him up. And you muss take him out of Englan' to do it.'

"'You gotter divvy with h'us before you take that h'out of h'England,' growled the fattish man's voice.

"'If it suits me I will take it,' retorted the woman sharply. "But it doesn't. Couldn't we break it?" this to the Jew.

"'Yuss—with a hammer.'

"You can guess, Gregory, that I was wild at hearing that. But I was afraid to do anything. They got a hammer from the bar-tender and I heard one of them pound the stone several times, while the woman stood and said, 'Careful! careful!'

"Then the stone broke and from the expressions of satisfaction it was just right. One of them said there must be a hundred pieces. The woman ordered the two men to go and bring in 'all those cursed fences' she had spoken to. They both went, and after some time the fattish man returned with several Jews, and then the smaller man with some others. They all filed into the room and there was some whispering. I judged that the woman unwrapped the cloth in which they had broken the stone; then I heard a sound—Hoo-hoo—like somebody laughing.

"'What's the matter, you ape?' demanded the woman.

"'It's glass!' said the voice of the first Jew.

"'Glass!'

"There was a shuffling sound as they moved forward to look, and then they laughed too. The woman screamed and there was another sound as though some one had fallen in a faint. And just then you came in, while I was still sitting there listening."

As Harry said, he was sitting on the bench by the partition when my captor and I entered. All the loungers were staring at the partition door, aroused by the woman's scream. Just then the window behind the bar burst open and Inspector Smith plunged through followed by several constables, while a number of them came in from the street. There was instant uproar, which redoubled when they broke into the side room.

The littlest man butted down two policemen and escaped. The fattish man broke through the door and gave Harry a chance to knock him down with a chair. The woman fought like the tigress I had thought her. When she was finally subdued, the inspector had a clawed face and a broken finger.

"The diamond is imitation," I said, as he emerged into the bar.

"I had thought as much," he said. "They would hardly put the real gem on exhibition. But we've got the woman—an American, and the smoothest the Yankees ever produce!!

"I am sorry my man inconvenienced you," he continued. "I did not mean for him to bring you along. You and your party will prove valuable witnesses; you intend to stay in London, of course."

"We came with the intention of staying two weeks," I replied guardedly. And then we said goodnight.

"We are going to France," I announced, on reaching the hotel. "Neither of you ladies want any police-court notoriety, and the warders will be good enough witnesses." We went.

"And to think," said Allie, as our steamer drew into the harbor of Calais, "that woman was an American!"

"'English they be and Japanee
That hang on the Brown Bear's flank,
And some be Scot, but the worst, God wot,
And the boldest thieves be Yank!'"

THE MAN IN THE UPPER BERTH.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT BY F. N. STEVENS.

Copyright, 1899, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher.

THERE are still many people in western Pennsylvania who remember well the celebrated case of Crayfoot vs. Sinclair. Not only was it one of the hardest fought legal battles of the times, but the verdict, based on the eleventh hour technicality proved a most overwhelming surprise even to the victorious counsel for the defense.

For many reasons not here necessary to explain, the experience had been one of a particularly trying nature to myself. I had, however, borne up well during the heat of conflict, but no sooner had the enormous strain been removed than I felt myself the veriest wreck, both mentally and physically.

Tormented by forebodings of a serious illness, my only thought was to reach home at the earliest possible moment after the completion of my legal duties.

Court adjourned sine die at 4.30 P. M. The first train out was four hours later, an express making but two intermediate stops, one at Altruria, the other at Hammersburg.

Therefore it was that 8.15 P. M. found me in waiting at the depot and my associate members of the bar attending a banquet which had at the last moment been tendered them by prominent townspeople.

The train was late and as I paced the floor restlessly I was electrified to see our client, Sinclair, elbowing his way through the crowded waiting room. He approached me hurriedly.

"Here, Cartwright, do me a favor, will you? Just take this into the office in the morning. There's an even ten thousand and they'll need it before noon. Came near forgetting it!"

I could hardly refuse to take charge of the money, though I must confess to no slight degree of nervousness when it was once in my possession. And, too, I felt irritated in the extreme that he had not chosen some less conspicuous place in which to make known his errand. Even while he was speaking I had noticed one man of sinister countenance watching us with strange intentness. And though no coward, a sensation of mingled depression and annoyance laid so strong and immediate hold upon me that for the moment I would have hailed with relief any reasonable excuse for deferring my trip till morning.

But my berth in the sleeper was already engaged, I had telegraphed my wife when she might for a certainty expect me and there seemed no good reason for delay. I threw off my momentary uneasiness as best I could and laughed at myself as weak and womanish!

Once in the car my first attention was directed toward my vis-a-vis who also boarded the train at Pittston.

A cadaverous face, almost livid in its pallor, with evil-looking, deep-set, black eyes, did not serve to prepossess me in his favor. I was rather impressed with a disagreeable sense of remembrance, though for the moment I did not place him.

He was tall and muscular and though noticeably thin his long, bony arms gave evidence of great strength. "A villainous-looking specimen." was my mental comment, and almost involuntarily I placed my hand on the breast pocket wherein reposed the money.

The movement was illy timed, for at the very same moment he raised his eyes, and in an instant a peculiar gleam shot across his face. It was gone almost as soon as noted, but I had the satisfaction of knowing that if I had for one second been caught off my guard, even so had he. He was the man I had noticed in the depot! He addressed one or two remarks to me but I was not socially inclined. He had an unusually pleasing voice—the voice of a good man, and singularly not in keeping with his face. He offered me the evening paper. I declined it with scant courtesy. Then he beckoned to the porter with whom he seemed on semi-confidential terms. They conversed for some minutes in subdued tones, and from their frequent, furtive glances in my direction I had no difficulty in divining their topic of conversation. The man had seen Sinclair give me the package, and had doubtless overheard his request. He was now planning with the negro how best to secure the money!

I must admit that I felt more disturbed than I cared to confess even to myself. I sized up the other passengers. It chanced oddly enough that although the car was crowded there were not all told half a dozen men present.

The porter went his way and his confederate leaned back in apparent slumber. I was not to be deceived. I knew he was watching me as a cat watches a mouse and not for one minute did I relax my vigilance!

At ten o'clock we both retired. My neighbor, who by the way occupied the upper berth, settled himself at once.

In spite of previous weariness I had no thought of sleep, and all through the early hours of the night I lay with every muscle tense, every sense alert. But I could hear nothing beyond the gentle, monotonous hum-m-m of the cars along the rails.

Occasionally I felt rather than heard the porter creeping softly—it seemed to me stealthily—along between the berths.

At Altruria there was some slight commotion caused by the few passengers who left the cars at that point. The stop was not long but hardly had the cars started again when my curtains were pushed softly aside and the porter peered within. I faced him with a fierceness as startling as it must have been unexpected!

"Beg pardon, sah! Is this for you, sah?" and he held a telegram toward me.

I hastily tore open the envelope and by the dim light read the message. It was from my wife.

"Meet me at Hammersburg.

Helen."

I stared in wide-eyed astonishment! There was surely some mistake. I looked again at the superscription. "John M. Cartwright. To be delivered at Altruria." My name most certainly, and only my wife knew that I was to be on this train.

I read the message over and over again, each time more mystified than before. This new and unexpected turn in my affairs completely eclipsed all else! My friend in the upper berth, the unwelcome money, the scheming porter, all were alike forgotten!

Helen was not a woman of impulse. Coming from her the telegram meant business, of what nature I was unable to determine. There was no alternative, and I made hasty preparations to leave the train at Hammersburg.

I can not tell whether or not I really expected to find Helen in waiting for me at the station. My mind was in so chaotic a state I do not think I had formulated any expectations. At all events she was not there, neither was there any messenger from her.

Indeed, the whole station seemed singularly deserted. Only one or two employes were about and they answered my anxious queries brusquely and were off. And much to my discomfiture the solitary carriage which had been waiting upon my arrival, also disappeared!

I looked about me undecidedly. The electric lights gleamed pale and cold, but beyond their circle of light all was darkest gloom. Three miles distant the lights of the town glimmered faintly. Doubtless my wife was awaiting me there.

All fatigue, all nervousness was swallowed up in my anxiety for her welfare! I buttoned my coat closely over the package of money and prepared to walk the distance.

I had hardly stepped into the darkness when I became aware that some one was approaching from the rear. Some laborer, I thought, whose company would be preferable to none, and I glanced backward with a positive feeling of relief.

In the dim light I could see the figure of a man who walked with loose, shambling gait. As he came nearer I perceived that he was no laborer, but evidently a traveler like myself. He was headed straight towards me, and I paused and faced him.

His manner puzzled me. He came with head bent forward and hat slouched well over his eyes. He took no apparent notice of my presence till within ten feet of me.

Then he stopped suddenly and pushed his hat backward. One glance at the deep-set, glittering eyes, at the livid face, at the bony frame, and I started back as though struck by an electric current! The man in the upper berth stood before me!

For one moment I was as one paralyzed. Then as I fully realized that I had been the victim of a hellish plot, the calmness of despair settled upon me.

I attempted to speak. He looked at me steadily with those horrible eyes and my tongue refused to move. I tried to raise my hand. In vain!

It seemed to me an eternity that we stood facing each other, when I suddenly knew that I was becoming unconscious. I felt no shock, no hurt, no blow, I experienced no sensations other than those of fading vision and failing strength.

* * * * * *

I recovered consciousness to find myself bound hand and foot! I could make no sound—a gag had been thrust into my mouth; and I could move only my head. By turning it from side to side I saw that I was in a room brightly lighted, and unfurnished save for what seemed to be a long table or bench upon which I was laid flat.

From an adjoining room I could hear the sound of two voices, one, a man's, low, deep, and musical; the other, a woman's tearful and pleading. Both voices were distinct, and despite my daze and bewilderment, I had a faint comprehension that both were familiar.

I remember that I tried to raise my head. As it fell back with a dull thud, there was sudden crash, the door was flung open, and a woman sprang toward me!

Her eyes were red, her hair disordered, and her face swollen and distorted from much weeping, but I knew her, my God! only too well! It was my wife! She knelt by my side sobbing wildly.

And behind her, creeping stealthily, came a man! Again—there was no mistaking that face, those eyes—the man in the upper berth!

He came nearer and nearer, his eyes fixed steadily upon Helen. He raised his hand as if to strike down, and I—I was powerless to prevent!

I shall never forget the supreme agony of that moment! The sweat stood in cold drops upon my brow. Every muscle stood out like a cord, every sinew was strained to its utmost tension!

I made one superhuman effort! I arose, I wrenched my hands asunder, I—awoke!

The porter was shaking me vigorously. "Half an hour to Franklin, sah!"

I looked at him in a stupefied manner. He repeated himself and turned to go. Mechanically I felt for the package of money. It was safe.

I glanced upward. I knew instinctively that the berth was empty. I leaned forward and beckoned the porter back.

"The man in the upper berth?" I questioned.

"Got off at Hammersburg, sah."

"Who was he?" I demanded.

"The Reverend Mr. Brascombe, pastor of The Heavenly Rest, sah!"

WHEN in 1867 the territory of Alaska was purchased by the United States, there were those who were positive that Russia had made the best of the bargain in spite of the fact that most of the $7,200,000 purchase money was used in St. Petersburg to satisfy old debts and obligations incurred by Alaskan enterprises, attorneys' fees, etc., so that Russia really gave her American possessions to us without reaping any direct profit from the transfer. Alaska would prove of no value whatever to us even so, such confidently asserted, but the attention which this region has recently received as a result of the discovery of gold within its borders has revealed to the public at large that it is in reality a priceless possession. Alaska is indeed a wonderful country; its rockbound hills possess a grandeur unparalleled; its sea fisheries are a mine of limitless wealth; its forests the densest and most valuable on the continent; and its mineral resources are incalculable.

But to the casual visitor the most wonderful thing in all Alaska is the quaintness of the people which inhabit it, the Esquimaux. There are eleven tribes of them in all, stretching from the region of Sitka in the south to the ice-bound shores of the Arctic regions on the north. Of these the Haidas are the fairest skin, most

CURE DRUNKARDS.

ELOQUENT WORDS FROM A WIFE WHO RESCUED HER HUSBAND FROM A TERRIBLE HABIT.

Secretly Gave Him a Remedy in His Coffee and He Now Rejoices With Her.

Who can doubt that there is a cure for drunkenness when we have such an eloquent and emphatic statement from Mrs. Katie Lynch, 329 Ellis St. San Francisco, Cal., she says:—My husband was a hard drinker. There was never a doubt in my mind but what liquor had so worked upon his nerves as to actually control his appetite. Like most men who drink he was kind and generous when sober but the rum demon usually had the better of him and his wife had to suffer. One day I concluded to try a remedy called Golden Specific, which it was said would cure the liquor habit secretly. So I mixed some of it with Mr. Lynch's food for a few days and put a little in his coffee. I could scarcely conceal my agitation and fearless he should suspicion me for he had suddenly taken a dislike to liquor, said he despised the stuff, and was the most remarkably changed man you ever saw. I kept bravely at it determined not to waver in my attempt to cure him and I soon found out that my mission was a complete success and that Golden Specific had wrought almost a miracle for me. I want other women to profit by my example and am glad to learn that Dr. Haines, who discovered Golden Specific, will generously send a free trial package to every woman who writes for it.

Send your name and address to Dr. J. W. Haines, 886 Glenn Bldg., Cincinnati, O., and if you wish you are at liberty to refer to me as having told you about this marvelous remedy.

intelligent and best dispositioned, while Innuits inhabiting the vast region from the Yukon to the Polar Sea are still for the most part savages, practically unaltered by contact with the white man, and still living as did their ancestors from time immemorial. These people still use the spear and bow and arrow of a remote ancestry, live on the flesh of fish and wild animals, and dwell in underground huts appearing from without like little rounded mounds of earth or snow. They know no law, and never have, but unlike the native Indians of the great plains of the United States are comparatively peaceable, and offer no injury unless provoked.

They are quite nomadic in their habits, often wandering many hundreds of miles from their homes, and thus it comes about that occasionally one of them will reach the haunts of the white man. If a dispute should happen to arise on these chance visits or liquor be at hand, that fearful curse of the uncivilized peoples of all countries, trouble is quite sure to follow, not infrequently ending in crime. Such an incident occurred during my stay at Fort Yukon some years ago, an Innuit having committed murder and almost immediately fled to his home in the Arctics. From the circumstances of the case it was deemed necessary that he should be captured at any cost, and for want of a more suitable deputy, I, being somewhat familiar with the Innuit language and having seen the fellow, was commissioned to secure him and bring him back to the fort, dead or alive.

It was then late in the fall, the long northern winter had already set in, and the ground was covered deep with snow; but journeying by sledge was comparatively easy, and I at once set out, confident that I should fall in with a band of Innuit hunters before having gone far, from whom I could doubtless ascertain the whereabouts of the object of my quest. In this hope I was not disappointed, for at the end of the third days' journey I fell in with a company of these little men of the far north returning from their fall hunt in the mountains. Yes, they knew of whom I spoke, Nougishgac was his name, but he had already gone on to the village. However, they invited me to continue on in their company, as he had been one of their number and could doubtless easily be found. What a different reception would have been mine had they in the least suspected the errand upon which I was bent.

After some days' journeying we came at last in sight of a number of low, snow domes huddled together on the bank of a broad river flowing toward the northern sea, the home of the Innuits. Immediately upon our arrival we learned that Nougishgac was dead, having been killed some days before in a quarrel over a walrus skin. The family clan of which he was a member were in the midst of the days of mourning over his decease, and in accordance with Innuit custom, I, coming in quest of the departed, must become the honored guest of his nearest relative!

The season of mourning for the dead among these strange people continues twenty days, during which time the relatives of the deceased abstain from all labor and amusement, and sit motionless in their huts with long drawn faces, in which ceremony the guest is expected also to participate.

Any one who has ever been within an Esquimau hut with its lack of fresh air, unpleasant odors and choking smoke from the huge, constantly burning stone lamp, can readily imagine that the prospect with which I found myself confronted was not a pleasant one. But to have declined to share the hospitality of the mourners would have been a breach of long established custom dangerous in its consequences, and as it would be necessary for me to remain in the village long enough to verify beyond doubt the truth of Nougishgac's reported death and that no fraud was being perpetrated upon me, I could not but accept the situation with as good a grace as possible.

The first night of my stay or rather that portion of the almost endless night devoted to sleep, I managed to endure comparatively well, though with almost sleepless eyes. Our couch, shared by my host and myself alike, consisted of but a layer of poles merely, to raise our bodies above the damp earth; but our pillow was a huge bolster, five feet or more in length, enclosed in a parka, or cloak, and far from soft. Fain would I have slept with none at all, rather than this ungainly affair, but my host would hear to nothing else than that I should rest my head upon it, and I was finally compelled to humor him in this regard in order to maintain peace and friendship.

Our period of sleep was over at last, and I returned again to a sitting posture while my companion proceeded to throw back the end of the parka enclosing our pillow, and gaze steadfastly upon it. I was overcome with abject horror upon observing that it was a human corpse! Then it was that it recurred to me that when an Innuit dies in the fall or winter, it being impossible to bury or burn the dead, his relatives preserve the body until spring, carrying it about from place to place with them, and through some unaccountable superstition using it as a pillow at night and looking upon its features each morning upon awakening.

A second discovery which I then made startled me not a little also. The pallid face before me, though disfigured and distorted as the result of the alternate freezing and thawing which it had undergone from the cold and proximity to the oil lamp, was nevertheless easily to be distinguished as that of Nougishgac.

The hours which slowly dragged themselves away from the time of our arising were, quite naturally under the circumstances, devoted as far as I was concerned to devising some means of making my escape from the gruesome hut and the company of the Innuits, and if my face wore as anxious and disturbed an expression that morning as did that of the mourning relative, it was not due to any attempt on my part to demonstrate grief over the death of the deceased. What would I not have given at that time for a breath of the fresh, pure air of heaven; to be out again in the sunshine of the winter day, of so short duration though it was; or to have been safely back at the fort again!

It is the practice of the Innuit males, during their long enforced term of winter idleness, to resort each day at some time during the brief hours of sunlight to the kashga, or house of public meeting, a hut of much larger proportions than any of the others, capable of holding quite a number of persons at one time. When all have assembled a fire is kindled and the coals sprinkled with water until the hut is filled with clouds of vapor. Then all throw off their garments and dance wildly about in the steam; beating and flogging themselves with reeds and whips until utterly exhausted with the exertion and the profuse perspiration which ensues, they fall to the floor, or unable to endure the heat longer make their way out to roll in the snow. This is the most enjoyable experience of any in the life of the Innuit, and nothing could induce him to absent himself from this performance; even the mourners for the dead cannot restrain their desire to be present, and so it came about that along in the afternoon my host began to display ever increasing symptoms of uneasiness, and finally prepared to absent himself from the hut.

Nothing that he was able to offer could persuade me to accompany him, for well I knew what was about to take place; then, too, here was an opportunity for which I had been anxiously waiting and which I did not propose to allow to escape me unimproved. No sooner had my entertainer disappeared down the long underground passageway which constitutes the exit of an Esquimeau hut, than I began active preparations for a hasty flight. At that moment a plan flashed through my brain which I proceeded to put into execution immediately. I would obey my orders to the letter and take the Innuit pillow with me.

The attempt which I was about to make was a hazardous one and would end disastrously with me if unsuccessful, but with the exercise of the utmost caution I hoped to accomplish it in safety. My first precaution was to remove the parka in which the body of Nougishgac was wrapped, fill it with well packed snow and return it to its customary place, that thus the theft which I had perpetrated might not be discovered until the following morning, when upon the opening of the parka my treachery would become apparent. Then cautiously dragging my burden down the long passage, I concealed it among the baggage on my sled without.

Not a soul was in sight as I emerged from the passage door, and if I could but succeed in harnessing my dogs and get well under way before the return of the men from the kashga, I was comparatively safe, as my dogs had no superiors in the village. To catch them, however, was no easy undertaking, as they were scattered about the village with those of the Innuits; but a low whistle cautiously repeated now and then brought them together at last and I was finally on the move.

As I approached the kashga I could hear the muffled shouts of the men at the dance within, and even as I passed its entrance two of their number scrambled out and plunged themselves into the snow, but being blinded with the terrible smoke of the hut's interior or with snow which may have gotten into their eyes, they failed to notice me and I passed on unchallenged.

Whether my host slept on his snow pillow or not, and what his sensations were upon discovering the nature of its contents I never heard, nor am I aware whether or not the chase after me was taken up, or how long and fierce it was; but I do know that upon finally arriving at the fort in safety and delivering up my burden, I was well rewarded for my faithful performance of my duty.

PAP'S VALENTINE.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT BY S. E. GANNETT.

Copyright, 1899, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher.

PAP, can I have Nance this morning? I want to go to town."

"Go to town, daughter? It must be something pretty desprit to take you to town with the roads in this state." And the man, a long, lean, sallow Arkansas farmer by the name of Bayles, who was at the moment busily engaged in holding up the doorpost while he gave his teeth their after-breakfast picking, glanced along the corduroy road deep in February mud.

"Why, you see, Pap," and the girl hesitated, "next week comes Valentine's day, an'—an'—"

"Good land!" muttered the man to himself, as he stared at the girl, taking in the witching dark eyes and rosy, dimpled face framed in its clustering curls, "ef she bean't a'growing up a'ready! Seems like 'tain't but a year or two sence I was a'buying valentines for her Maw, an'—now—here's Mirandy's been dead this two year, an' this baby—why, how old be you, now, Maisie?"

"Sixteen, Pap; don't you remember I told you last week I'd got a birthday?"

"Yes, yes, but I can't believe it. You're as old as your Maw was when I was a'cotin' her, sure enough. Well, who is the lucky one to be?"

The girl gave her head a toss, and her merry laugh rang out as she answered:

"Nare a one, Pap, but they's two of 'em is dead sure I'll send to him and to nobody else, and I'm—"

"Ho! Goin' to fool 'em both, be you? Well, go on. Young folks must have their fling; but I wish my valentine hadn't had to leave me quite so soon." And he glanced wistfully around at the disorderly room, the unswept floor and dirty windows, and then out at the group of frowsy, uncared-for children playing in the yard.

The girl saw the look and bit her lip.

"Pap can't expect me to give up all my fun and stay at home just to grub round," she muttered. "I'd be an old woman in no time if I did. I want to have a good time like the other girls," and then, as her father slowly and dispiritedly strolled away to his day's work she hastily cleared the breakfast table, called to a younger sister to help her, made a few preparations for dinner, and leaving everything else in the care of twelve year old Jennie, she mounted Nance and rode off to town, gingerly through the awful mud. A few twinges of conscience troubled her as she remembered neglected duties, but she quickly stifled them, and rode on.

"Howdye, Maisie!" shouted a gay young voice as she dismounted at the village store. "Goin' to the Valentine party next week?"

"Haven't heard anything about it. Where is it at?" replied Maisie calmly.

"Sure enough? Why, it is to be here in the village at Betty Wilder's. You'll get an invite, I know. Swell thing it's going to be. Say, here's your note now," as the postmaster handed Maisie her mail. "Now you'll let me see you home that night, won't you? Don't you go with Dick Somers, whatever happens."

"I shan't promise. I'll have to think over the matter a bit first," and with a word to Nance, Maisie cantered off, leaving Tom Birdsall ruefully glowering at Dick Somers, who, on horseback, was hastening in Maisie's direction.

Valentine's day came with a most unusual sight for Arkansas—a furious snowstorm—and by evening the ground was white with snow. The mud beneath was frozen in deep ruts, making traveling anything but pleasant; but no matter! Such a chance for a sleigh ride did not occur in this locality once in a winter, and all were disposed to make the most of their opportunities. Both Somers and Birdsall had hastily constructed for themselves sleighs of dry-goods boxes mounted on rude wooden runners, and each of them having received that morning a gay and flimsy lace affair ycleept a valentine, adorned with cupids, hearts and arrows galore, and vowing

"To be ever true
To only you! to only you!"

thought Maisie had surely made him her "lover true," and hastened to present himself, with his elegant "rig," at her home in readiness to drive her to the scene of the party.

Maisie's eyes danced with fun as she saw them drive into the yard at the same time, glowering at each other as they came on; but her face was grave and concerned as she opened the door and cried:

"Oh, how could I have been so careless! I certainly thought, I—well, never mind now! I am not going to say, as long as both of you are here, which of you I asked to come for me to-night. I thought I sent a note, but since I did not I'll have to ask Dick to drive me over and Tom to bring me home. Won't that do?" and the bewitching face, framed in its soft pink hood, smiled brightly upon both the young men.

There seemed to be no other way out the difficulty; so, although each of the young men scowled blackly upon the other, Tom turned his horse and drove off, while Dick helped Maisie over the side of his dry-goods box, and tucked his mother's shawl, which served as a robe, carefully about her before following Tom's lead.

The evening passed merrily. The gay little god of love showered his favors, consisting of cakes, bonbons and souvenirs, impartially upon all, and punch flowed so freely that, as the hour for breaking up drew near, many of the young men were decidedly in need of an escort instead of performing that service for the ladies.

Dick, disappointed in his hope of seeing Maisie home, had grown more and more surly as the evening wore on, and the more punch he imbibed the gruffer he became. Instead of driving off by himself, or choosing another lady than Maisie for company, he kept near Tom's sleigh, and did all he could to make his and Maisie's ride uncomfortable.

At length they reached a narrow part of the road, where the earth, washed away by the heavy rains of that part of the country, dropped suddenly down to a depth of twenty feet, with no railing to protect its edge. Dick, who had driven ahead of the other team, suddenly turned, lashing his horse to a gallop, and bore straight down, in his drunken rage, upon the other horse, which reared, plunged, and backed to the edge of the precipice. Tom, finding all efforts to stop him unavailing, flung the reins over the dashboard and leaped to safety, leaving Maisie to her fate.

Quick as a flash, however, the girl sprang forward on the edge of the box, balanced herself there a second, and, by another quick leap, reached the back of the frightened horse, and, seizing the trailing reins, with a sharp cut of the whip forced him forward to firm ground. Then, sliding to the road, in spite of all Tom's solicitations and apologies, she set off afoot for home, deigning neither a look nor a word to her cowardly escort.

Maisie got no sleep that night, but spent the time in reviewing in her mind the conduct of her two cavaliers and of herself. She was very subdued and thoughtful at the breakfast table, and made but short answers to the questions of her father and the children as to the events of the preceding night. As to the ride home she said not a word to any one.

At noon that day, as he came in to dinner, Farmer Bayles was astonished to see the kitchen shining with cleanliness, the table neatly set and covered with a tempting dinner, and surrounded by the children with clean hands and faces and nicely combed hair, while Maisie, following him into the washhouse shyly said:

"Tom and Dick are neither one of them any good, Pap. I'm going to be your valentine if you'll have me?"

Our New Colonies and Interests.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

THE greatest interest now attaches itself to the construction of the Nicarauguan canal, which should be at once pushed to a finish and completely under American control. One drawback to the construction of this canal has been a provision in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty between this country and England by which both nations agreed that when such a canal should be built it should be under joint protection of America and England and necessarily under joint control. The mutual jealousies of the two countries have tended to show each other that the division of importance was not equal and that one nation would receive more advantage than the other with its completion. The present attitude of England indicates that the outcome of the Spanish War has rendered an early construction of the canal of first and greatest importance to the United States, and she seems ready to let our country undertake the work alone and without hindrance, by the abolishment of this treaty.

The attention of our people was called to the great necessity of a canal when the battleship Oregon made her famous run from San Francisco to Florida, and being obliged to traverse the South American coast on both sides and make frequent landings for supplies and coal, which would have been unnecessary had there been a canal either at Nicaragua or still further down at the Isthmus of Panama. The idea of a canal is by no means new, for ever since the discovery of gold in California in 1849, and even earlier, there have been such enterprises projected.

For many years the favorite location for such a canal has been across the Isthmus of Panama, and many schemes have been devised for such a canal. Even the idea of immense dry docks on wheels to convey steamers bodily across was seriously contemplated. The great De Lesseps canal to be constructed by a French company at one time was apparently the successful one; but wasteful extravagance and poor business if nothing worse entirely wrecked this company, and to-day the immense work is the same as abandoned.

Farther up on the continent is Nicaragua and a glance at the map will show that here the land is much wider than at the Isthmus, but it has certain natural advantages. Half way across the continent is an immense lake, called by the name of the country, from which the San Juan river flows easterly to the Gulf of Mexico at the port of Greytown.

Opposite the middle of the lake on the Pacific coast is the harbor of Brito. The most thorough survey ever made has now caused the United States Commissioners to adopt what is called the "low level" route. The so-called Maritime route contemplated practically following the San Juan river to the lake as a shorter distance; but the Lull "low level" survey starts from Greytown and takes advantage of certain low levels which make eleven miles longer to the lake, which is forty-two miles from Greytown on the Maritime route. Part of the way will be lake navigation and the entire distance, including the lake travel, from Greytown to Brito is one hundred and eighty-two miles. It is estimated the canal will cost $184,000,000 complete and will probably be built under government supervision. The project has been debated and postponed times without number, but with our present territorial interests delays are no longer possible and without doubt the present Congress will take steps to have active work on the construction of this waterway taken at once.

The government of the United States has not taken Cuba as a part of her possessions but under the treaty of peace is responsible for the maintenance of order and peace within that country. The position of Cuba to-day is very much the same as that of the Confederate States after the Civil War in our own country. There is neither a responsible government of Cubans, nor has the Spanish government any more authority, having vacated the island; and as a consequence the only form of government that is at present maintained is the military government of the United States.

The President of the United States appoints a Governor General of Cuba, who is invested with supreme authority and really represents the government of the United States until a stable government shall have been formed and given possession by our country. This provisional government went into effect on the first of January, 1899, at which time with due military pomp and ceremonies the Spanish flag floating over public buildings was lowered, and received the usual military salutes; to be immediately replaced by the American flag, which was also saluted by both armies.

To this extremely important position President McKinley has nominated Major General John R. Brooke who, our readers will remember, was in command of the army of invasion at Porto Rico; and but for the sudden signing of the protocol of peace would have captured San Juan as he had already done Ponce and other places. His army was just deploying for a battle at the time the aide galloped up to General Brooke and presented the order for peace, an order which is said to have filled the American soldiers with feelings of bitterest disappointment so anxious were they to encounter the Spanish soldiery, who were equally anxious to test their own merits.

GENERAL WOOD.

It will be remembered that the island of Cuba is divided into six provinces, the names of which are familiar to all newspaper readers, as they have been in the press reports for the last few years during the insurrection, and consequently are familiar both as to name and locality. Each of these provinces has its own military governor who serves under Governor General Brooke. Major General Fitzhugh Lee, who left Havana at the outbreak of the war, amid the jeers and execration of the populace, and who from the deck of the departing steamer called to them that he would return, now has the opportunity to make good his prophecy, as he has been appointed the governor of the province of Havana, which is the most important province of the island both commercially and because within it is Havana, the capital city. At the head of the military government of the city of Havana is Major General William Ludlow. He is under the supervision of General Lee and subordinate to him, exactly as General Lee is subordinate to General Brooke; but the position is a most important one as all the details of the city government, police and sanitary regulations, and all such municipal details are under his immediate direction. General Ludlow was at one time Commissioner of the District of Columbia, and it was in this capacity that he first came under the President's notice. He has great ability and experience, and being a civil engineer of the highest rank will have the necessary qualifications for practical administration in the completion of the sanitary and municipal improvements which are to be undertaken in the city and harbor of Havana.

SIR WILFRID LAURIER.

Few of our readers comprehend the vast importance of this military government. Cuba is undoubtedly the richest island in the world; of the greatest natural resources and inexhaustible soil it has been well termed the Garden of the Antilles. For centuries it has been milked of its riches by outrageous taxation by the Spanish government, which has looked upon the island as fair prey. Its people have been kept in a state of illiteracy and subjugation hard for Americans to comprehend. The conduct of the native Cubans during the war would seem to prove that they are utterly unfit at the present time for self-government; nor would it be right towards the Spaniards, who form the best part of the population of the island, to let loose a mob of native Cubans upon them without restraint. The American who has been in Cuba has no sentimental idea about that population, and knows that while many Cubans are highly cultured and fine specimens of manhood and womanhood, the great bulk of Cubans are hardly up to the standard of modern civilization.

Having driven the Spaniards out of Cuba, it became necessary then for the United States, without desire for conquest, to take possession of the island until such time as it can be seen what will be the best for the future. The same rule has been applied in hundreds of instances, and even now there are countries which are not British colonies where it is impossible to maintain practically an English protectorate in order that the native government shall carry out the wishes and intentions of England, and give justice to all people within their borders. That some such solution of the problem will be necessary with Cuba nobody doubts; and with the great influx of American capital and American interests which will certainly follow the ratification of the present peace treaty, the financial and material interests of the island will be largely in the hands of British and American people within two or three years. It would be as much folly to expect that under such circumstances the final government of Cuba will be given into the hands of people adverse to the interests of the United States, as to expect entire surrender of State government to the colored population at the present time in the South; and our readers may be sure that a firm military government will be maintained

Five Million Boxes a Year.

The verdict of the nation! During the year 1898, the people of America bought nearly 5,000,000 boxes of Cascarets Candy Cathartic an increase of over a million boxes over 1897. Among the intelligent American public nothing succeeds like merit, and the stamp of public approval has evidently been affixed to the pure, fragrant, palatable little tablets of candy that are regulating the liver, stimulating the bowels, purifying the blood, perfuming the breath of the nation. The reason? Cascarets are honest up-to-date, natural successors to the pills of the past, doing better work and doing it in so much nicer and more pleasant way. All our readers no doubt have used Cascarets, but if there are exceptions, we recommend them to fall in line.

EASY MUSIC CHEAP.

COMFORT'S NEW CHART of CHORDS for the PIANO.

A New and Quick Method of Learning to Play the Piano or Organ Without a Teacher.

You Learn in a Moment What it Takes a Teacher Months to Explain to You.

There have been many so called easy methods and charts devised but this is the latest and best. It is intended for those who have not the time to take lessons. A complete self-instructor, enabling anyone to play the piano or organ at sight. This chart is the practical result of years of study by a noted American composer and musician. With this chart anyone can become an expert pianist, playing accompaniments to the most difficult songs at sight, as well as dance music, marches, etc. These charts are valuable to the advanced musician as well as to the beginner, embracing nearly every major and minor chord used in music. It is the most comprehensive yet simplest chart ever published, and is endorsed by teachers and musicians everywhere.

To introduce "COMFORT'S CHART" in every home, we will send free with each chart the "GIANT ALBUM OF SONGS," containing 184 Songs with words and music, including the great hits, "I Won't be a Nun," and "The Mountain Maid's Invitation." Also old and new favorites, and war songs.

We will send this CHART OF CHORDS and the GIANT ALBUM OF 184 SONGS, with "COMFORT" for six months for only 25 cents in postage stamps or silver. Address

COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

A Bear Hunt in the Himalayas.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

THERE is one part of British India, where you may enjoy fine sport in the midst of magnificent scenery and a splendid climate for nine months of the year, and that is the Himalayan hills, between the altitudes of 5,000, and 10,000 feet; below 5,000 it is too hot at times, and above 10,000 it is equally too cold.

Some of the best bear hunting I ever had was in company with the old Kumaon rajah, the Goorkha king whose territory had been annexed by the English forty years ago (when he was quite a boy) and who has ever since lived quietly in his own capital on a pension of $3,000 per annum from the British Government. It is a remarkable instance of the aptitude of the English for conquest that they should have taken by force of arms this ancient kingdom of Kumaon, and held it peaceably ever since, though it is not garrisoned by a single British soldier, the only troops in it being generally two battalions of its own people in the pay of the British Government.

I had made the acquaintance of the Kumaon rajah by having been fortunate enough to relieve him from a very unpleasant position. I was out shooting pheasants in a rhododendron forest when I heard loud shouts, and on hastening to the spot I found the Kumaon rajah up a tree, his gun lying on the ground, which he had evidently dropped in climbing; and at the foot of the tree a large black she-bear with a broken foreleg, who could not climb the tree, but was scratching and snarling in a most unpleasant way. I relieved him by neatly putting a bullet through the brute's heart as it stood on its hind legs snarling at the rajah; since which he had always sent word to me when he heard of any "shikar" and of course he always got the first information from the country people who knew his devotion to the sport.

I was lying in the veranda of my bungalow after tiffin one day, when the rajah's head shikaree, Omrah Deen, appeared, and salaaming low, said, in the hill patois: "The rajah, sahib, has heard of three 'reis' (bears) at Baghesur," mentioning a village on a river about twelve miles off, "he starts at sundown to sleep there and attack them in the morning, and he hopes you will accompany him." "Good" I said, "I will be at Baghesur at ten this evening."

The haunts of the bear are rocks on a hillside, particularly those overlooking cultivated valleys; they sleep all day in caves, and come out at night to feed in the sugar-cane plantations. They do not stay long in the same cave if at all disturbed, but move about the country from cave to cave. Many of these caves are very deep. I have been in some running for one hundred yards in the hillside, and six or eight feet high, perhaps twenty feet wide at the mouth, and narrowing away into the interior. The bears sleep in a mass together at the far end, and are often difficult to get out. The natives take advantage of a favorable wind when they have tracked a bear to a cave, and light large fires of wet leaves; the smoke, driving into the cave, sometimes forces the bears out, but it is tedious work, taking some hours. The natives hide themselves behind pieces of rock, and shoot poisoned arrows at the bears, as their great object is to get rid of them for the sake of their crops and honey, getting the flesh and skin being a secondary object, and hardly considered worth the danger, they being very fearful of the bear.

The rajah and I dined together that night at Baghesur. We turned in early, and by three the next morning the camp was astir. After two delicious massocks of ice-cold glacier water from the river, I had a cup of tea, lit a cheroot, and felt "fit" for any bear.

My arms were my shot-gun, with a bullet in left barrel; in my waist-belt a five barrelled revolver and huge couteau de chasse, or sword bayonet, which would fix on to my short breechloading rifle, carried by my gun coolie, who also had some of my ammunition.

We strolled down to the river by starlight, the rajah and I with our gun coolies, his head shikaree, and a villager who had tracked the bears the day before to their cave, and crossed on two inflated buffalo skins; the other shikarees and beaters went up the river to cross at a ford, and beat the cultivated flat ground up to the hills where we were to be posted.

On arriving at the foot of the rocky cliffs, the villager showed us a sort of track winding up the sides, which we covered with low brushwood, and which he said led to some caves about two hundred feet higher, and that, about a mile on, there was another track which ran back to the same caves and that the bears would come up one of these at daylight or when disturbed. It was settled that I and my gun coolie should go up the first track, and that the rajah and his men should go on to the next one, as it was a wider one, with branches, and required several men to be on the watch, lest the bears should slip by and get into caves unperceived. I was glad, before I had gone many hundred yards, that it was the coolest part of the twenty-four hours, for the track was very steep and very rough—hand-and-feet climbing most of the way—and by the time I reached the caves, and stood on the platform of rock in front of them, I was running with perspiration. From this spot I had a view of the whole valley, and could see the beaters just crossing the ford, preparatory to beating the flat ground below us, which was covered with sugar-cane and plantations. In the distance were the snowy summits of the highest Himalayas, thirty thousand feet, now gloriously tinted with red and gold from the beams of the rising sun, which had just caught them. As soon as I had recovered my breath I took a survey of the caves and their approaches, and quickly observed a projecting rock, round which the pathway or track wound about fifty yards below the cave. Behind this I and my gun coolie ensconced ourselves. I placed a two ounce bullet in each barrel of my smooth-bore, which I held in my hand, as the handiest and deadliest at close quarters; in my rifle held by the coolie I placed a shell bullet with a percussion head, and fixed the sword on ready for an emergency.

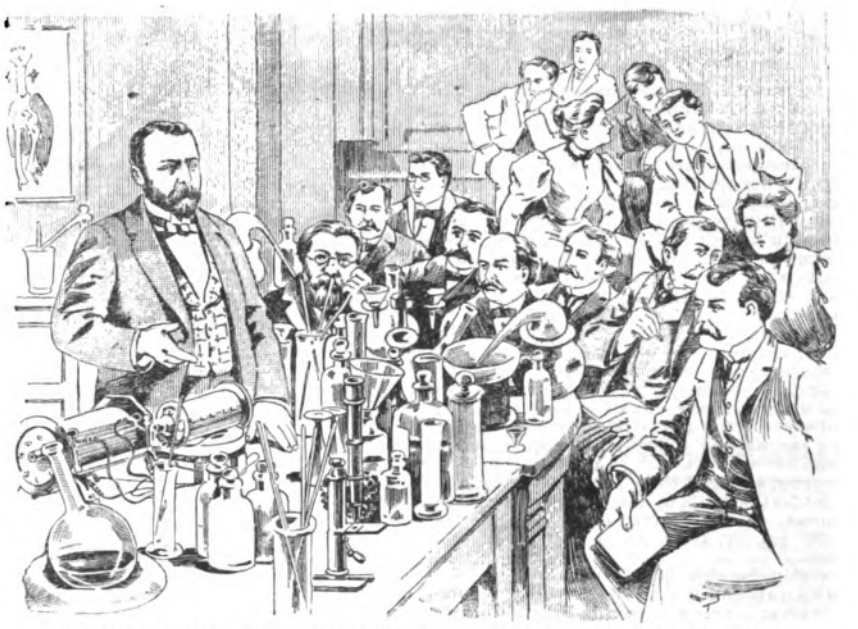
Soon the shouts and cries of the beaters disturbed the valley below and raised up clouds of birds—ducks from the river, and pheasants and hawks and pigeons from the cliffs. We had been peering over the rock behind which we were ambushed for some ten minutes, when my gun coolie gave me a nudge, as his quick ear detected something coming up the track, and in less than a minute appeared the shaggy black head of a bear shambling up the track. I cocked both barrels, determined to give him a broadside as he passed our ambuscade and then to seize my rifle to finish him.

As he approached our rock we could hear him growl as his nose evidently detected us, but his desire to get to the cave, away from the row of the beaters, was apparently stronger than his prudence, and in half a minute his black head and forequarters loomed out between me and the sky as he trotted along the edge of the track. Bang! bang! went both my barrels pointed behind his shoulder, and in a cloud of smoke and dust he rolled over the precipice, and crashed through the rhododendron bushes.

I handed my gun to the coolie to reload, and seizing my rifle I moved to the edge to look after him and see if he required anything more in the shape of a quietus. About twenty yards below his carcass had caught in a thick bush, and I could see he was recovering and trying to get his footing. I immediately raised my rifle, and was peering about to get a fair shot at him between his eyes, which I could hardly see for the intervening bushes, when an unearthly yell from my coolie made me quickly look round, and, behold! four yards from me two bears rushing up the track. One, a half-grown one, rushed, apparently to get past me, and get up to the caves, while the bigger reared on its hind legs and evidently meant fighting. As the young one approached me I lowered my point and lunged at its chest, but it caught the sword in its mouth, and the point came out of its cheek on the other side. I had just time to observe this, and was about to withdraw it when the big bear rushed at me and knocked me backwards. In falling I managed to get my face downwards to save it and my chest from the clawing that I expected, but to my surprise directly I fell the bear left me and went to the young one, who was kicking up a tremendous row about the sword in its cheek.

I rose as quickly as I could and shouted to my coolie for the smooth bore. He was standing on the rock, up which he had climbed for safety, and was screaming for help, though there was no one to hear him; but almost as I rose the young bear got his head clear of my rifle and sword and he and the big one, which was evidently the mother, trotted off down the hill again. I discharged my revolver at their vanishing sterns but apparently without effect; and now I heard the scramblings of the first wounded bear trying to get up the cliff; his advent, though, I awaited with the utmost composure, as I was sure he must feel very sick after my broadside. I crouched down and soon his forepaws appeared on the edge of the track. I stepped up and as his head appeared uttering fierce growls I plunged my point into the center of his chest. A dark stream of blood poured out and the bear fell backwards and disappeared, crashing through the underwood.

I now retired to the old corner behind the rock, and refitted; my right arm was torn with the she-bear's claws; this I tied up; my rifle was much bruised and dented, and the sword was slightly bent by the efforts of the young bear to free himself; however, nothing had happened to impair me or my weapons, and I was soon ready for anything that might turn up. In a few minutes I heard two quick discharges, and then one from the direction of the rajah and loud shouts. I hurried up the track to the mouth of the caves, thinking to intercept any bear that might have passed his party. However, I waited there some minutes but nothing appeared, though another shot and loud shouting came from the same spot; and as I heard from the noise below that the beaters were nearing the foot of the cliff, I hurried back to my old ambush, in the hopes of the she-bear and young one appearing again. Soon the shouts below me redoubled, and we could hear the cry of "Reis! sahib! reis!" I now took up my position with my rifle, kneeling on the track, looking down, and close to the projecting rock, behind which I could spring if I should fail to bring down anything coming up, and in a few minutes a three-quarter grown bear came shambling up the path, followed by a yapping dog of the village, on whom he turned every now and then. He did not see me at first, and waited until he was within twenty yards, then his little eyes caught sight of me and glistened with rage. He uttered low growls and redoubled his pace; but the bead of my foresight was on his nose. I pulled, and the animal turned head over heels like a rabbit. My coolie handed me my smooth bore, and I hurried up, but he was quite dead, and the village dog was worrying his carcass. The shell bullet had struck just below the left eye, having grazed along his nose (my aim had been the point of the snout), and apparently exploded at once, as all that side of the head was blown open, and the ear hanging down. By the time I had done examining and measuring the brute some of the beaters appeared on the track I had come, so there was nothing more to expect from that quarter. Leaving my gun coolie to point out to the shikarees where my first bear had fallen over, I hurried on to see what the rajah had done. On arriving, I saw the rajah's shikaree, Omrah Deen, lying down, looking very sick, and a good deal of blood about; the rajah's rifle, with the barrel bent to an angle of forty-five degrees, and a half-grown bear lying dead on the path. It appears that the young bear had appeared first, when the rajah had knocked it over with a double shot, and that Omrah Deen had run out with a kookree to settle it, and drag it off the path. While so employed a great she-bear had come up suddenly, and clawed his back; the rajah had run out with his rifle, and afraid to fire for fear of hitting his man, had crammed the muzzle into the animal's mouth. He then, as he affirmed, pulled the trigger with the muzzle pointing at its head, but I expect the bullet must have gone out of its cheek; however, the brute had bent the barrel nearly double, and then scuttled off up the path, and must have got into the cave before I arrived there. Soon afterwards another bear had come up the path at which the rajah had fired, with what effect he knew not, as the beast had turned and run down the path again. Some of the beaters said that they had seen another bear get up to the caves by some track we had not known of; this was probably the bear that the rajah had fired at last.



We now all moved up to the caves to see what we could do for the bears inside. There was no wind stirring, so a fire was hopeless to smoke them out; however, by the fire made we got some hot tea and chupattees; and our coolies indulged in the social hubble bubble, made of a cocoa-nut, which was handed from one to another. Omrah Deen began to feel rather faint from the loss of blood from the scratches on his back, so we made a litter for him, and determined to return to camp. We were fairly pleased with our success, having bagged three out of five bears seen, though certainly only one was full grown; and if it had not been for poor Omrah Deen's back we should have had a most enjoyable morning.

GLORIOUS NEW DISCOVERY

That Cures Lung Troubles, Grip, Lung Consumption and Catarrh.

By Special Arrangement With the Doctor Four Free Preparations (Formulae Dr. Slocum) Will be Sent to All Readers of "Comfort" Who Write for Them.

CONSUMPTION NO LONGER FATAL.

SCENE IN THE SLOCUM LABORATORIES, NEW YORK CITY.

The Doctor Demonstrating to Medical Men, Scientists, Statesmen and Students the Value of the New Slocum System Treatment for the Permanent Cure of Lung Consumption, Catarrh, Grip and all Pulmonary Diseases.

(Extract from New York World.)

Foremost among the world's greatest Medico-Chemists stands Dr. T. A. Slocum of New York City. His efforts, which for years had been directed toward the discovery of a positive cure for consumption, were finally successful, and already his "new system of treatment" has, by its timely use, permanently cured thousands of apparently hopeless cases.

He has demonstrated the dreaded disease to be curable beyond a doubt, in any climate.

Indisputable facts prove that the Doctor's New Discoveries are an absolute cure for Consumption, Catarrh and all bronchial, throat, lung and chest troubles; stubborn coughs, scrofula, rheumatism, general decline and weakness, loss of flesh, and all wasting conditions; and to better demonstrate its wonderful merits, he will send Four Free Preparations (The Dr. Slocum New System of Treatment) with full instructions, to all readers of COMFORT who send for them, with complete directions for use in any case.

The System consists of Four Remedies which act simultaneously and supplement each other's curative action.

Simply write to Dr. T. A. Slocum, 98 Pine Street, New York, giving name and full address.

There is no charge for medicine or correspondence-advice—strictly confidential.

Knowing, as we do, of the undoubted efficacy, we urge every sufferer to take advantage of this most liberal proposition.

Every first-class druggist dispenses the Slocum System of Treatment in large original packages, with full directions for use in any case.

No one medicine combines in itself all the properties requisite for successfully curing lung consumption, grip and its results.

The Dr. Slocum treatment embodies in its Four remedies the most logical, advanced scientific and successful methods of cure, and this broad and liberal free offer to our readers puts its great benefits within the reach of all.

WRITE TO THE DOCTOR.

Write for the complete free treatment NOW before the results of the disease have become so deeply engrained in your system as to render it difficult to get rid of them at all, and thus, perhaps, lead to a fatal result. When writing or calling please state that you read this article in COMFORT.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

WE are with one accord adopting the newest of new skirts, which fasten over in front, so that nothing may mar the beautifully-fitting simplicity of the perfectly plain back. These skirts are particularly easy to hold up, those which are practically untrimmed being, to my thinking, the most attractive. Such a one, for instance, made in bright violet cloth, has half-a-dozen rows of stitching to sweep down the center of the back, another group outlining the place of fastening in front—that is all; while a double-breasted coat, just covering the waist line, continues the line of stitching, and boasts, perhaps, of a row of crystal buttons. Such a costume will have a specially useful career, if you have an indoor bodice made of the cloth quite simply, with just a knot of mauve satin, and a cascade of lace to fasten it over the left side, and then you also provide yourself with a tucked silk shirt, whose aim and object it will be in life to save the cloth one from crushing, and to be worn in its place under the little coat when taking your walks abroad.

In the cigar-brown, tan, black, or dark blue the costume will look equally well, and, in its elegant and distinguished simplicity, will hold its own among any number of more elaborate gowns.

Of course, some of these skirts are decorated with bordering frills or waved lines of stitched strappings, and so forth, but, in their untrimmed aspect, they are, I think, at their smartest.

The polonaise skirt is, it must be confessed, painfully unbecoming to the average woman, so, though it is being shown by all the smartest houses and worn by a few of our elegantes, it is not likely to become popular. In fact, it is at all times an impossible style for any woman who is not of the "divinely tall" order.

Still another novelty is a skirt—of cloth, of course, seeing that no other fabric is allowed any chance nowadays—with a deep shawl point, bordered with triple tucks, falling to the hem of a plain under-skirt, both in front and at the back, the sides rising to a level of the knees. This is rather a graceful style, as I was compelled to admit when I saw it exemplified by a Parma mauve cloth gown. The bodice, in Van Dyked tucks at the back and sides, but with a plain plastron front, which displays a tiny vest and diminutive revers of lemon yellow. So it only remains for you to pay your money and take your choice of skirts only let me beg of you to study your stature, and carefully consider your waist and hip measurements before you do so choose.

Let me tell you of the smart simplicity and perfect taste of the last new hat, which is made in felt cloth, with a rouleau of velvet to bind the sailor brim, which is tilted up a little at the left side with a cluster of flowers—dahlias and roses, say, in the case of a mauve hat, while for sole trimming there is a species of bow at the left side, which is like nothing so much as five curved leaves of graduated size placed one inside the other, and fashioned of silk and satin, shading from palest pinky mauve to deepest violet. It looks lovely, too, in cerise felt ribbon, while it is demurely dainty too in grey.

I must now introduce to you two evening gowns, whose charms I believe will specially interest you. One displays the fashionable chenille embroidery, where trails of fuchias, pink and purple, are wrought on pale mauve chiffon, which in its turn veils blush-rose pink; the touch of black tulle at the decollete and in the puffs of the short sleeves are particularly effective. The other gown is destined for wear by a superbly handsome woman, whose dusky hair, black eyes and clear complexion will be set off to perfection by the white satin veiled with jet embroidered net, and relieved by a deep-folded waistband and corsage bow of yellow and orange silk.

Either of these gowns might be copied very easily by means of the embroidered overskirts and bodice lengths, which fashion introduced during one of her kindly moods, when she gave a thought to those folks who had to be economical, but still desired to be fashionable. I really believe that evening gowns get richer in embroidery and precious stones daily. A very lovely one seen lately was built in the Princess style of rich blue velvet, perfectly plain, and perfectly fitted, bordered round the trailing skirt with a very deep silver embroidery in the form of huge lilies and their leaves; encrusted on the silver were pearls and gold paste, the latter sparkling with brilliant effect, as you may imagine. This beautiful embroidery figured on the decolletage also, and down the left side of the gown, which was otherwise unadorned. It certainly looked lovely and so did another dress of less costly material and more simple style, being worn by a younger woman. The foundation of this gown was cream colored satin, which, on the bodice, was veiled with sequinned and jeweled net in quite a novel way. Quite unique were the sleeves, fashioned partly of lace and partly of mousseline frills, while the shoulders were ornamented with loops representing true-lover's knots of cerise velvet. The same idea was carried out on the skirt which was flounced with sequinned net, and headed by an embroidery of silver.

The new white net boa is decidedly becoming and dainty. The white net you must know, is thickly quilled in graduated form, very thick and broad in the center and tapering off almost to a point at either end, and then over the whole is sprinkled black chenille spots, which gives it very chic style. Needless to say these net boas are the dernier cri. In all colors they are made to correspond to hat or gown with which they will be worn. A very sweet shade is mauve with either white or black spots dispersed on its surface, and again, blue or green are equally charming and modish. In feather boas, white seems most popular although for slender purses the fashion is the reverse of economical, for nothing looks worse than a dirty white; therefore, let me beseech you not to invest in one of such delicate nature unless you are prepared to replace it for a fresh one as soon as signs of wear and tear are seen. Rather have a black one that will brave all signs of dust and fog, but even then do not wear an ostrich feather boa when there is any likelihood of damp, for all the pretty curl will vanish and nothing but a long straight unsightly mass of feathers will be left to you.

Blue and mauve is a particularly stylish mixture, originating, of course, in Paris, where some of the very smartest of gowns have been created with the blending of these two shades.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

A Royal Love Story.

A PRETTY story is told of the first meeting of the German Imperial pair. The German Emperor, when a young man of twenty, was shooting at Prinkeman, and lost his way in the park. As he wandered around he came upon a rustic, rose-covered summer-house, and looking into it discovered a very pretty girl about his own age, who was sleeping in a hammock.

He did not disturb her but went on his way, thinking of a little German poem known as the "Briar rose." Later in the day he met the same girl in the castle, and saying: "Here is my briar rose again," he introduced himself, and entered into conversation with her, which ended in his falling in love, so charming was she. They were married on his twenty-second birthday, and since that time she has set herself to realize the German ideal of a devoted hausfrau.

DANGER IN SODA.

Serious Results Sometimes Follow Its Excessive Use.

Common soda is all right in its place and indispensable in the kitchen and for cooking and washing purposes, but it was never intended for a medicine, and people who use it as such will some day regret it.

We refer to the common use of soda to relieve heartburn or sour stomach, a habit which thousands of people practice almost daily, and one which is fraught with danger; moreover the soda only gives temporary relief and in the end the stomach trouble gets worse and worse.

The soda acts as a mechanical irritant to the walls of the stomach and bowels and cases are on record where it accumulated in the intestines, causing death by inflammation or peritonitis.

Dr. Harlandson recommends as the safest and surest cure for sour stomach (acid dyspepsia) an excellent preparation sold by druggists under the name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. These tablets are large 20 grain lozenges, very pleasant to taste and contain the natural acids, peptones and digestive elements essential to good digestion, and when taken after meals they digest the food perfectly and promptly before it has time to ferment, sour and poison the blood and nervous system.

Dr. Wuerth states that he invariably uses Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets in all cases of stomach derangements and finds them a certain cure not only for sour stomach, but by promptly digesting the food they create a healthy appetite, increase flesh and strengthen the action of the heart and liver. They are not a cathartic, but intended only for stomach diseases and weakness and will be found reliable in any stomach trouble except cancer of the stomach. All druggists sell Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets at 50cts. per package.

HOW BOOKS ARE MADE.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

For the great army of book-buyers, book-readers and book-lovers in this country, how few have any idea of the processes that enter into the manufacture of a volume. More than the most casual knowledge of the processes through which an author's manuscript must go before it finds its way to the shelves of the dealer is something possessed by not one person in a hundred. To briefly sketch these processes is the object of this article, believing that it will be of interest to all who read or buy books, and may inspire a desire to investigate further the fascinating industry of book-making. During the writer's connection with one of the largest book-making concerns in the country, it has often been his privilege to escort visitors through the various departments of the plant, and some of the questions that have been propounded have been, to say the least, very amusing and have founded the basis for the statement above.

The large book-printers usually deal with publishing firms, seldom with the author direct. This is because the publishers are able to advertise the book more widely, and because they have a force of editors and proof-readers who can look out for the technical points in the work. The author selects his publisher (if he is well-known; if he is obscure he searches for his publisher). The publisher selects his printer and his engraver. If the work is to be illustrated it is sent first to the engraver, who makes the cuts, wood-engravings, zinc etchings, half-tones, or whatever they may be. The manuscript and the cuts are then sent to the printer.

The author's manuscript or "copy" as it is called, is now given to the compositors who set it up in type. The process of type-setting consists in taking the pieces of type, each of which represents a letter, out of the case which contains them, and arranging them to form words and sentences. As many words as can be conveniently put into a line are set up, then the space between the words is increased or decreased until the line is of exactly the required length. On plain books, requiring only one size and style of type, a type-setting machine is used. These machines are comparatively a new invention, but have proved of immense value in the printing office. The type-setting machine used in newspaper offices does not set the actual type, but casts each line solid, so that the change in a letter necessitates the resetting of a whole line. This would never do in book-work, except on books which are merely reproductions, as the author or publisher makes numerous changes in almost every page of proof. Therefore a machine is used which sets the actual type, and letters and words can easily be changed.

The type, after it has been set is tied up in strips of convenient length and put on a hand-press, where a proof is taken. The proof-presses used to-day are an almost exact copy of the finest presses known in the time of Franklin. In the office referred to here, there is at present on exhibition an old printing-press on which Ben Franklin himself is said to have worked. At that time it was the finest piece of printing machinery known. At the present time, except for the associations connected with it, it sinks into insignificance beside even the cheapest proof-press.

The proof is taken to the proof-reader, who reads it aloud to his assistant, and all mistakes noticed are marked. Horace Greeley said that one of the qualifications of a proof-reader was that he must never make a mistake. Mistakes do occur, but the number is surprisingly small with a good reader.

The compositor who set the type now takes the proof and makes the changes indicated. The type is then taken by the "make up," who measures it off into page lengths, inserts the cuts in their proper positions, puts on the headings and ties a string around the page to hold it firm. A clean proof, called a revise, is now taken and copies sent to the author and to the publisher. These are read by them and all desired changes are indicated. The printer corrects the pages and a corrected proof is sent to the author. Some authors make only slight changes in their proofs, some cut their work up badly, changing sentences and cutting out and rewriting whole pages. As all the work done on proof after the first revise is at the expense of the author, some of the bills for authors' corrections are as great as the original cost of type-setting.

When everything is corrected to the author's and publisher's satisfaction, orders are given to "cast" the pages, that is, to make the electrotype plates of them.

Few books at the present day, if a large number are wanted or if more than one edition is to be printed, are printed direct from the type, but from electrotype plates. This saves the wear on the type; besides this, plates are easily handled and stored. The pages to be cast are taken to the "stone." Here they are put into iron frames, or "chases" and surrounded with strips of wood or metal and securely locked in place by means of iron wedges called "quoins." The "form," as it is called, is then proved and is given a final reading for broken letters and errors that have thus far escaped attention. When all corrections have been made, the pages are ready to be cast.

The process of casting consists of taking an impression of the type in a sheet of prepared bees-wax. This wax mould is then hung in an electric battery, and a thin sheet of copper is deposited upon it, filling the indentations in the wax made by the type. This copper shell is then "backed" with an alloy of lead, the pages sawed apart, trimmed and finished, the backs being planed off to the proper thickness. These plates are proved and are again examined for broken letters and other imperfections, besides any errors that even now may appear. The finisher corrects errors by cutting out of the plate the wrong word or words and substituting a correct piece that has been set just the same size. The new piece is soldered into place in the plate. These plate corrections are rather expensive, but often changes are made by the publishers after the plates have been made. When all changes have been made the plates are ready for the press-room.

Then begins a very delicate and painstaking process, arranging the page plates with reference to the margins of the sheet which is to receive their impression. Usually sixteen or thirty-two pages are printed at once, though if the pages are very small as many as one hundred and twenty-eight may be printed on one side of a sheet. The plates are arranged in the "form" as it is called, so that when the sheet is folded the pages will fall in consecutive order. On most books, especially on those requiring fine work, only one side of the sheet is printed at a time; on other books, the forms are put on what is known as a "perfecting" press, which prints both sides of the sheet at once. On fine work where there are a number of illustrations, the task which requires greatest nicety is underlaying and overlaying. The former is accomplished by pasting on the bottom of the plate carefully cut bits of paper to procure a stronger impression from those portions of the plate which should print up sharp and black. The same result of accentuation is secured by overlaying the smooth polished surface upon which the plate presses at the moment when the impression is made. Of course, the paper which receives the impression is between the overlaying and the plate.

When everything is ready the press is started, and the number of sheets required for the edition is run off. The form is removed and another one made ready. The sheets are usually fed into the press by a man known as a "feeder," but recently a machine has been invented to do this. The way the automatic feeder picks up a sheet of paper in its steel fingers and places it in position is so human as to be almost uncanny. To add to the human element of this machine it is arranged to stop the press automatically if a sheet is torn or is not fed in exactly right.

After being printed the sheets are put into a powerful hydraulic press, where they are subjected to very great pressure, to smooth out the indentations made by the plates while the sheets were being printed. The sheets are now counted and dried, and are ready for the binder.

Novels and other classes of cheap paper-covered books are not given all this attention. The foregoing description refers to fine editions of books. The cheaper books are rushed through a perfecting press at a high rate of speed, and are bound at once. Books with fine illustrations are printed more slowly, one side of the sheet at a time, and are given the greatest attention.

Our sheets have arrived at the bindery. A wonderful machine has recently been invented for binding cheap paper-covered editions. It consists of a massive steel structure, supporting at each end a wheel carrying a wonderful grooved belt or endless chain. Where the latter begins its journey from the lower side of one wheel to that of the other, the central slot of the belt is fed with the folded sheets, constituting a book. The back edges to which the covers are to be attached protrude a fraction of an inch below the bottom of the carrying belt, and first come in contact with knives which do a neat job of trimming. A few inches beyond, the trimmed edges run the gauntlet of three saws, which reduce the backs to a spongy surface, ready to receive a coating of peculiar glue, which is applied by rollers located a little further on, and just beneath the belt and its tandem train of coverless books.

Then strips of cotton the exact width of the book back are firmly stamped upon the soft sticky surface. The thin glue quickly soaks through the strips and makes the latter thoroughly adhesive. At this juncture the paper covers make their appearance, and are pressed in proper position against the cotton backing. This leaves but one more task for this almost human machine to perform before the finished book passes under the second wheel and begins the "home-stretch" along the upper line of the belt. When the cover is pressed upon the back of the book, it is in the form of a flat, outspread sheet. A moment later it passes through the jaws of a clever piece of mechanism, which folds the stiff manilla sheet against the sides of the book. Then the line of finished books advances to the top of the wheel from which the sheets started, dropping out of a chute, ready for market. It will be seen from this description that these sheets are not stitched together, but are simply imbedded in a back of pliant glue. This is said to make a stronger binding than is obtained by stitching. One of these machines can easily handle 7000 volumes a day.

For other classes of books the process of binding is of course more elaborate. The sheets are first folded, sometimes by hand, sometimes by a folding machine. When a book is not to have a gilt top the sheets are usually folded by hand, for the machine makes a slight puncture in the sheet near the top of the folded page, which is rather unsightly. When the book is to have a gilt edge, however, a machine can be used, for enough of the top will be scraped away to remove these punctures. After being folded the sheets are stitched together. If sixteen pages have been printed on each side of the sheet, the complete sheet will contain thirty-two pages of the book, in proper order. Each of these folded sheets is a "signature." The various signatures that go to make up a book are now stitched together in their proper order. The sides and edges are next trimmed to the proper size. If the books are to be gilt-edged, they are placed side by side in a lateral press, much like a large vise, with jaws that open very wide. The edges that are to be gilded are scraped very smooth and a thin sizing is then applied, sufficiently adhesive to retain the sheets of gold foil without sticking the leaves of the book together. After the gold leaf has been laid on, the burnishing begins. This is done with long-handled instruments which resemble chisels having a smooth round tip of agate instead of a sharp edge of steel. The handle bears against the shoulder of the workman, and his body sways back and forth as the pressure of the instrument gives high polish to the gold, thoroughly affixing its particles to the edge of each individual leaf.

The books are now ready for their covers, or "cases" as they are technically called. These were formerly made by hand, but a recent invention is a machine where they are glued, have the pieces of straw-board that form the stiff sides put into position, also a strip of cotton the proper width at the back. The cloth is pressed into position, its corners folded over neatly and the completed case discharged at the side of the machine in half the time it takes to tell it, and done much better than it would be possible to do by hand. The covers now have the design of the artist stamped on, from brass dies cut by hand. If the design is to be printed in colors, a separate die is used for each color. If gilt lettering is to be used the design is stamped in adhesive sizing. Gold-leaf is then placed over it, and the surplus gold brushed off. The operator who does this work is in an enclosed booth, so that no particle of superfluous gold can be wasted.

Now the backs of the books are rounded in a machine for that purpose, the covers are put on the book-bodies, and "corded" in huge presses. After being carefully inspected and wrapped they are packed and shipped to their destination and appear on the bookseller's shelves.

Such is the history of a well-made book. In special cases where the regular routine is departed from, processes quite as complex and painstaking as those here described take place. A visit to any large bookmaking establishment will repay the time spent, and the interested seeker after information in these times has before him a broad and interesting field of research.

Surprised His Wife.

When John brought home a beautiful new sewing machine of the latest model his wife was amazed at his extravagance, but when remonstrated with he said there are thousands of wives using worn out machines or even have none at all, whose husbands would be ashamed if they really knew how cheaply a first-class one could be purchased. The Brown-Lewis Comp y, of Chicago, sell one with all attachments for $14.50. This company has a world-wide reputation for honest dealing, low price on good quality.

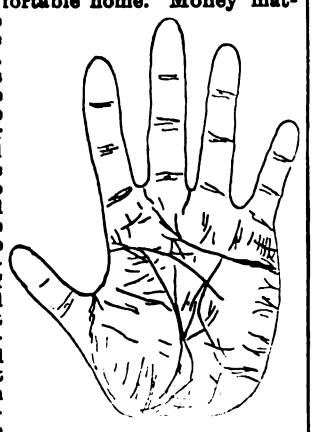
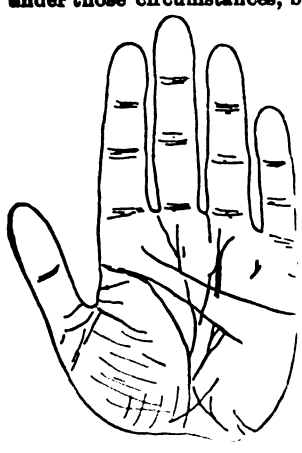
CONDUCTED BY DIGITUS.



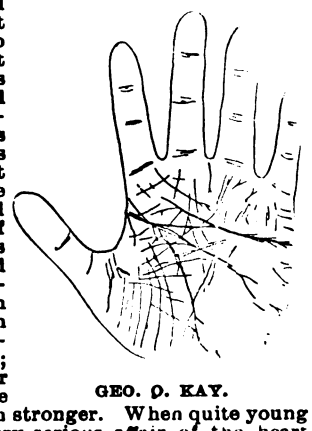
IN spite of all I have said about the need of patience on the part of those who send impressions of their hands, I have several letters this month of complaint that their readings do not appear in COMFORT as soon as they think they ought. In each case the readings were all in type and came out in the December number, so that I must advise a little more patience still. I am reading four hands this month, and every one was received last October. I have others here that came in November and December, and these I shall have to delay till next month. I mention this that you may all know that it is the rule and not the exception to wait from three to six months.

Nora C. is the first one this month. She has an excellent hand showing great refinement of character, a kind and gentle disposition and talents of a varied order. In her childhood and youth she was rather retiring and did not intrude her opinions and ideas on older people; rather she kept things to herself, though not what is usually known as a secretive child. Even now she is not very assertive about thrusting her own opinions on others but loves to depend on those older and wiser than herself. As a married woman she will be guided by her husband, provided he is a man to whom she can look up with respect for his judgment. I do not know her age but would predict a deep attachment for some one running from childhood to middle age and even after. She should marry about the age of twenty-five, although matters of the heart will not be thoroughly settled with her before thirty-five or forty. She will marry happily, however, and will be quite prosperous in all that she undertakes. She will not be very wealthy, but neither will she suffer from poverty, having always enough to give her a comfortable home. Money matters will improve with her as she gets on in life. She is generous and affectionate by nature and the man that gets her will get a good wife, and one that he ought to cherish. She will however, have many little crosses to bear between the ages of twenty-five and thirty-five, but has so much character that she will be able to meet and bear them in a creditable manner so that she will turn them to good account as a means of discipline. On the whole her hand is a good one and one that gives good auguries for the future. She will be blessed with good health and will live to see her allotted three-score years and ten.



NORA C.

Mrs. O. L. A. has a very peculiar hand, marked by strong characteristics. She will have many vicissitudes and changes in her life and will travel about a great deal making some long journeys. She has a discontented disposition and is very ambitious. This is a good sign, however, as she will keep improving her circumstances on account of it. She will marry quite young but her heart, that is, the best part of it, is not in the marriage. Of course she would not get the best part of marriage under those circumstances, but I find nothing to show that her husband is unfaithful to her or that he does not prove a good husband in every way. There are no signs of a separation but she outlives her husband and marries again, the second time much happier. Her second husband will be better off in this world's goods and she will be comfortable in her old age. She will live to be an old woman and the latter part of her life will be spent in a different place and in a very different fashion than the early part of it. There will be some unexpected turns to the last part of her career and she will be well known in the community where she lives and be a woman of influence and reputation. She has great force of character and it is owing to this that she meets so many changes in life. But things are sure to improve with her as long as she lives.



MRS. O. L. A.

I. S. E. ASTORIA.

I find the hand of I. S. E. Astoria, very interesting as for one thing, the right and left hands are exactly alike, which is a very unusual thing in itself and indicates that this person carries out precisely what Nature designed him to be. I do not remember that I have ever met a case before where there was not some difference in the two hands and generally there is a radical difference. It is an excellent hand too. This young man is honest, upright, square-dealing, and a fine fellow in every way. He is a man that can be tied to, and the girl that gets him may consider herself pretty fortunate. I do not often see a hand that gives so much promise of an upright, manly character. In business he has good judgment and will be steadily successful. Some business connection which he has now or will have at about the age of twenty-seven, will gradually grow distasteful to him and the partners will grow apart. The co-partnership will not be suddenly dissolved, however, the change coming at about the age of forty-five with this man. He will be steadily successful when he sets up for himself and will be well off and highly respected wherever he is known. He has a faculty of sticking steadily to the one thing which means business for him, and to that he will owe his success in life. He admires the other sex but will never be foolish for the sake of any member of it. He will not marry until late in life but will be happy when he does as he will use the same sort of common sense about marriage that he does about business. As I said before it is not often I see a hand that I like so well.

George O. Kay has a good hand also, although quite different. He is by nature very ambitious and dreams of what he would like to be and to do; but he seldom carries out to their full extent these ambitions. All his earlier life he has been rather kept back by the wishes and opinions of others. His health also will not be very robust, although he will live much beyond the average age of man; during the latter part of his life he will be much stronger. When quite young he will have a very serious affair of the heart which will go wrong and which will affect his after life for many years. He will marry young, however, and will have a very nice wife and live happily with her for many years. Whatever his ambitions are he will succeed with them at last and he will be a distinguished man before he dies. He will be an orator or a preacher as he chooses and will lead a very upright life, ending in the deep respect of his fellow citizens if not of the nation. If he is still a young man, I would advise him to become thoroughly familiar with political matters and if his ambitions are in that direction to aim for honors of that kind, as he has the right hand for success in that line. Or if he inclines to the ministry, to bend all his energies in that direction, for he is bound to "get there" sometime. He must cultivate the virtues of patience and perseverance and be willing to wait, for with him honors and success do not come all at once. He should fix his eyes on a certain goal and then keep them there, determined to get there in the end. He will travel much especially in the latter part of his life. Much the better part of life with him comes after he is forty.

GEO. O. KAY.

Next month we shall consider several others that are on the waiting list.

A LADY TELLS HOW SHE SUPPORTS HERSELF AND FAMILY.

"I often read of ladies who work hard trying to earn enough to keep body and soul together and for their benefit I will relate how easily one can get along in the world if they only know how. There is a big firm in Pittsburg that manufactures flavoring powders. I had tried them myself and knew they were splendid, so sent for samples and tried selling them. I found it so pleasant and easy that I have kept right at it and never make less than $3 a day and often clear more than $5. The powders go twice as far as the liquid extracts sold in stores and are much stronger. I sell from one to eight different flavors in each house. They are used for ice cream, custards, cakes, candies, etc., and are so delicate and give such a rich flavor that everywhere I go I gain a permanent customer. Those of your readers who would like to make money can get full particulars by writing to W. H. Baird & Co., 87 Telephone Bldg, Pittsburg, Pa., and they will give you a good start. I support myself and family nicely and we have a good many comforts we never had before." "L."

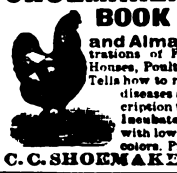
THE TONIC CUP.

A Fountain of Health and Youth to Jog Your Jaded Appetite.



DOWN in the tropical jungles of Surinam, sometimes called Dutch Guiana, there grows a tree of magical medicinal properties. Until Linneaus gave it attention it was not known to European medicine, but reports of wonderful cures produced by an infusion of a strange, South American wood were brought home by sea captains and other sailor men. The attention of the great Swedish naturalist having been directed to this strange medicinal wood he learned that a negro named Quassia had used it with such effect as a remedy for fever and gastric disturbances that some of the people thought him to be in league with the devil. Those whom he cured worshiped him.

Having the negro in mind Linnaeus named the tree quassia. Much was written concerning the discovery made by this negro and early in the last century quassia wood was recognized as of immense medicinal value by the leading physicians of London, Paris and Berlin. It was used with success in malarial and gastric fevers, for dyspepsia and as a remedy for jaded appetites. London found infusions of quassia wood to be effective as a specific for influenza or the grip. Vessels were sent for cargoes of quassia wood and the demand became so great that a counterfeit was imposed upon the people. This counterfeit was the bitter ash of the West Indies. It was said to possess all the medicinal qualities of the real Surinam quassia but it did not and its introduction made the public suspicious.

The Dutch government controls the quassia yield of its South American colony, and to-day the real article is to be had with improvements by all who are willing to take advantage of an offer in another part of this paper. The wood is used in medicine more extensively than ever. It is mixed with other ingredients and given as tonics, as remedies for malaria, for the grip, for severe colds and for a builder up of the constitution.

In considering the thousand and one things that might be offered as a gift to our patrons we decided that of all the things that came within our ken nothing would meet with such wide-spread appreciation as a Tonic Cup made of the genuine Surinam quassia. In this cup would always be found a ready physician, a cure for fevers, for chills, for grip, for dyspepsia and other gastric disturbances; a stomach tonic than which none better was ever discovered; an appetizer, too, and such a one as can be depended upon to coax he who quaffs into a ravenous desire for food. No expense is attached to the ministrations of this Tonic Cup. Pour water, clear cold water, into it, and let it remain for a few moments before drinking. The active qualities of the wood produce a marvelously pure bitter—a bitter made by an active agent in the wood known as quassine. There is no danger whatever to be feared in drinking the infusions from the Tonic Cup. To get one of these cups you simply send your name with 25c. for a year's subscription to the LITERARY COMPANION, Augusta, Maine, and a Tonic Cup will be sent you free by the editor who has used one for the past thirty years with the greatest success, and now with the improvements added you cannot fail to be benefited. See the advertisement in another column about the cup that cures and send at once for one before they all go. We might add that in South America infusions of quassia wood are employed as an injection to destroy thread worms, and water from the Tonic Cup well sweetened with sugar and placed in a wide pan puts fly paper in the shade as a killer of those troublesome insects.

ELECTRICITY IS LIFE.

THE GREAT HOME HEALER.

Pain Vanishes, Blooming Health Returns at the Touch of Science.

Read of this Modern Scientific Machine that Heals, Teaches and Amuses.

Electricity no longer the master but the servant of man, represents to us light, heat and force. By these three great powers everything on earth lives and electricity means life. This grand machine is a combined motor and dynamo and gives a perfect electric organization. Most interesting and instructive of the recent products of electrical science; teaches and instructs while it amuses, young and old alike. Scientific in construction and no student or ingenious boy should be without it. Perfectly harmless, but produces no end of fun, by giving shocks to circles and many harmless tricks. FOR A HOME CURER. Doctors know almost every known disease and pain yields readily to electrical currents. The cost of electric batteries as generally sold places them far beyond reach of any but the wealthy. This Electrical Machine has been produced by the latest and most improved machinery and at nominal cost as compared with the expensive batteries formerly sold at $8, $10 or $20 each. The great improvements in machinery enables us to produce this and to offer it to you for a mere trifle. See What Electricity is Used For. There is no disease of the nerves or any bodily pain which will not yield readily to electric currents. This wonderful machine utilizes the forces of nature; drives out Rheumatic Pains, Neuralgia and every species of blood and nerve disease; Cures Weakness of every kind and nature and restores youthful health and vigor. Works like a miracle for that worn out feeling and languor and despondency and strengthening nervous system with a direct (not alternating) current, large in volume but pleasant to take, no shock or irritation. Patent switch adjusts current to weakest child or strongest man. A valuable treatise accompanies every machine shipped. We now place nature's great restorative agent, Electricity, within the reach of every sufferer rich or poor.

A Wonderful Offer to All. This Electrical Machine is needed in every home and family. We will send one to any person who will send us $1.00, and 25 cents to pay all shipping charges besides sending our great home paper, COMFORT, subscription paid for one year. ($1.25 for everything.)

CONDUCTED BY EVERETT G. WHEELMAN.

AN old country church in England is hardly the kind of place to look for evidence concerning the origin of that modern article of speedy frivolity, the bicycle. And yet it has been discovered that here, in a stained glass window in the ancient church of Stoke Poges, made famous as the place where the poet Gray obtained the local coloring for his elegy, is a representation of the original of all the great family of wheelmen and wheelwomen who possess our highways to-day.

It is truly startling, this sudden discovery of the original wheelman, for since the bicycle became popular many so-called authentic stories have been written, giving the exact date when the progenitor of the modern safety came into existence, but none of the authors of these contributions to wheeling literature mention the bicycle window in the church of Stoke Poges. Here, then, is the first information the wheeling world will have of the existence of this remarkable window, which is shown in the accompanying illustration. What artist made the window that shows the figure of a primitive man astride a wheel of curious construction is not known. The only thing actually certain about the record of the window is that the panel bears the date of 1642, which antedates the time when the first bicycle was supposed to have come into existence by 120 years.

The pope a few years ago, in granting permission to priests to use bicycles, took occasion to announce that the wheel was invented by Abbe Painton, who used it in 1845. About the same time that Leo XIII. made this statement, F. R. Shipton, Secretary of the Cyclists' Touring Club, of England, asserted that the first machine was invented by a Scotchman in 1846. Another correspondent asserts that, strictly speaking, no one invented the bicycle—"it just growed." The bicycle is the developed result of a long series of mechanical contrivances for the acceleration of individual motion, and its beginnings are probably of older date than many people have imagined.

In August, 1665, Mr. John Evelyn, on his way back to London from his home at Wotton, called at Durdano, near Epsom, and afterward noted in his diary that he had found Dr. Wilkins, Sir William Petty and Mr. Hooke "contriving chariots, new rigging for ships, a wheel for one to run races in, and other mechanical inventions. Perhaps three such persons together were not to be found elsewhere in Europe for parts and ingenuity." What was this wheel in which one could run races? It is impossible now to say, but the description is curiously suggestive of some contrivance of the cycling kind.

Another one hundred years were to pass before anything resembling the modern cycle was to be invented. The first velocipedes, as they were so long called, appear to have been made in France. In the "Journal de Paris" of June 27, 1779, there is an account of a velocipede invented by MM. Blanchard and Magurier, which seems to have been a clumsy affair of four wheels, carrying two people and very heavy to work. This invention was a false start. No one followed it up or improved upon it, and no further attempt in this direction was made for some thirty or forty years. Then appeared the "dandy horse," upon which our fathers and great-grandfathers disported themselves gayly, albeit at times a trifle laboriously, for a brief season. When the crank was first invented, or who invented it, is quite uncertain. The date must have been early in the present century, but who first hit upon it is quite unknown. It was possibly first attached to a three-wheel machine.

It seems, however, that the bicycle was introduced into England about 1873, and into the United States in 1877 in the high wheel form, which was the immediate forerunner of the safety. About the year 1616 one Baron Von Drais devised a vehicle to assist him in the performance of his daily duties as chief forester of the Grand Duke of Baden. This machine, which was named Draisine, after the inventor, was thought to be the first rudimentary bicycle. The bicycle depicted on the window of the Stoke Poges church bears a general resemblance to this Draisine machine, although it is still more primitive in appearance. The Draisine was composed of two wheels connected by a bar astride of which the "rider" sat, and propelled the machine by thrusting at the ground with his feet.

"Johnston's Curicle" was the next step towards the modern bicycle. It was a "hobby horse" like the Draisine, and the ridicule it excited speedily caused its downfall. It was not until the invention in 1840 of the system of propulsion by means of a gear attached to the wheels that the bicycle's popularity was assured.

Since then many able treatises on the subject of the bicycle's originator have given credit to the Baron Von Drais that will no longer be accorded him now that the existence of the bicycle window of Stoke Poges church has been made public.

How impressive have become the changes that a few years have brought about in the world of cycledom. Those of us who may fairly be termed "old timers," cannot but be affected by the modifications in the order of things pertaining to cycling. 'Tis but a short flight backward to the days when wheeling was only enjoyed by those who were supposed to be long of purse and steady of nerve, though in the opinion of our farmer friends, and, indeed, not a few others, short of brain.

Those were the days when we rode wheels for the sport there was in it, pure and simple, the happy hours of superiority over our fellow men, and the glorious times of braids, bugles, and blue uniforms. Indeed, I always pity the safety rider who does not know of the exhilarating uncertainty of a ride on a high wheel.

All this is past and gone. The masses wheel for business nowadays—to save care fare, and to go home to lunch. The clergy and the drummer, the doctor and the plumber, all find that the wheel is no longer a toy and a fad for pleasure. It has its uses and its abuses.

The very conditions of things to-day are presenting problems, and serious ones, too, growing out of this unprecedented adaptation of a plaything for the idler into a necessity for the man of business.

A CHURCH WINDOW CONTAINING IN AN UPPER PANEL A BICYCLE. IT WAS MADE 120 YEARS BEFORE THE FIRST BICYCLE KNOWN TO HISTORY. IT IS A GREAT MYSTERY.

It is impossible to enumerate how far-reaching the use of the wheel has become.

Here is a good parody on Proverbs up to date.

The world's a cycle, and the folks
Are nothing but the cycler's spokes.

One man may seat a cyclist fair,
But ten men can not keep her there.

She rises brightly with the dawn,
While yet the dew is on the lawn.

And ere 'tis dried from hill and plain,
She rises many a time again.

A novice and her wheel soon part
And pride is humbled at the start.

The upright rider winneth praise,
But who can mend the humped one's ways?

Behold the woman riding down
Swift as the lightning through the town.

She scorcheth through the outer gate
And goeth far and stayeth late.

Her husband, in the market place,
The elders mock unto his face.

"Thou buttonless!" they cry; "all hail,
Go clasp thy raiment with a nail!"

He plucks his beard and saith a swear,
But he doth not his garment tear.

For no one bides at home to darn
(Save orally) his suit of yarn.

One of the most difficult duties laid upon a man is the balancing his life between what appears to be antagonistic tendencies.

With the Revolutionary, the Civil and the Spanish wars the United States will certainly have her fill of pensions to be distributed.

TOBACCO CURE.

HOW A MOTHER BANISHED CIGARETTES AND TOBACCO—A HARMLESS REMEDY THAT CAN BE GIVEN IN TEA, COFFEE OR FOOD.

Anyone Can Have a Free Trial Package by Sending Name and Address.

Some time ago a well known business man whose stomach and nerves were ruined by the tobacco habit was secretly given a remedy by his wife and he never knew what cured him of the habit. He suddenly evinced such a dislike for tobacco that he concluded the weed had finally floored him and that his own determination made him quit she then treated her son, a young man just 21. He was a cigarette fiend, inhaling the deadly fumes almost constantly and he too, was made sick of the "weed." His mother enjoys a quiet laugh to herself, at the manner in which the young man tells of how he came to the conclusion that cigarettes were "drugged and poisoned nowadays and not fit to smoke."

The remedy is odorless and tasteless can be mixed with coffee or food and when taken into the system a man cannot use tobacco in any form. The remedy contains nothing that could possibly do injury. It is simply an antidote for the poisons of tobacco and takes nicotine out of the system. It will cure even the confirmed cigarette fiend and is a God-send to mothers who have growing boys addicted to the smoking of cigarettes. The remedy is called Tobacco Specific and a free trial package of the remedy will be mailed prepaid upon application to Rogers Drug & Chemical Co., 196 Glenn Building, Cincinnati, O. This will help any woman to solve the problem of curing her husband, son or brother of a habit that undermines the health leaving the body susceptible to numerous lingering and dangerous diseases.

THE CUP THAT CURES.

GALLONS OF MEDICINE FREE.

NEVER RUNS DRY.

"The Literary Companion" has been published 30 years, and during that time its Editor has been obliged to fight disease of all kinds, and in spite of having contracted malaria in the war of the Rebellion he has kept at his desk daily. When the country has been under the sway of fevers and other deadly contagious disease, when in '91 the deadly epidemic of "Grip" swept the land with such awful fury, he was fully fortified to withstand all of the cyclone results, and has kept as active, well and hearty as any mortal could who has overcome so many ailments. He will now tell you how to keep well yourself. You see the illustration of the Tonic Cup. Well, here is the secret. It has long been known that Quassia wood contained special medicinal properties which surely relieve and cure Malaria, Jaundice, Dyspepsia, Rheumatism and like diseases of Body, Stomach, Kidney and Liver—and by long and careful experiments with this wood it is now by a lately invented new process prepared and turned into forms which are in every way far superior to anything ever produced in the line of Quassia Cups. Gallons of medicine can be gotten from one of these Tonic Cups by simply pouring water into it and letting it stand a short time, when it will be found to be changed into the best tonic medicine ever made and can be drank direct from the cup itself or poured into any tumbler or bottle. These cups are Veritable Fountains of Health and Youth. A perfect river which will carry you on to the flood tide of prosperity and long life. Every member of every family in the land should use one, and one cup in each family will furnish medicine for the whole family to drink. The problem of economy in doctor's bills has been solved, and sickness can now be banished without employing the expensive methods of former times.

FOUNTAIN of HEALTH AND YOUTH.

ONE CUP SENT FREE To help all the people possible I will send one cup free to any one who will send 25c. for a year's subscription to the Literary Companion. This paper in itself was a $1.00 a year paper We want new subscribers and I want to acquaint people with this wonderful Tonic Cup, and thus adopt this means of advertising them, for where one goes to jog the jaded appetite hundreds can be sold as nearly every family will take one and agents can make money selling them and taking subscriptions for the paper. Send 25c. to-day and get agents' terms on dozen and hundred lots.

The United States has 55 war ships in process of construction. This will make a substantial addition to our navy. It emphasizes the "era of the new." We have not in times past been lavish in our expenditure of money for military or naval strength. But "expansion" must bring new responsibilities to those "who pay the freight" and we must expect a great expenditure of national wealth along new lines.

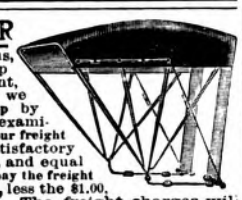
February brings the holidays that show the admiration of the American people for Washington, the creator of the nation, and Lincoln, its preserver. No February in our history has ever developed more momentous issues than those of to-day. The nation of our two greatest men to-day belts the globe and brings with its territorial increase duties as grave as those that confronted the two greatest men in our history. They knew moments of discouragement but they persevered. We may face dark days but we shall know how to bear any burdens that may be laid upon us. The hour always brings the man.

The portrait show held in New York for the benefit of a hospital brought the work of the most eminent portrait painters all over the world into one collection. The eminent artists of France, England and America were well represented. The portraits of women proved one thing. The beauty and grace of the old time portraits is rivaled by the beauty of these modern women. There is no charm of shy witchery, no naive expression of a portrait of our grandmother's day that does not find its match in these modern maidens. No dashing beauty of the court of Louis or of Bonny Prince Charlie's time but can find a worthy rival in the "grande dames" of the portrait show.

One of the interesting developments of the library systems in great cities is seen in the plans of the New York City Circulating library. A number of books suitable for children are packed in a neat case and sent to the home of any child who will distribute them among her playfellows and collect them for safe return at the end of the time allowed. As each case is sent a woman goes to the home of the receiver of the books and endeavors to interest the children in the books. This is really an application of the state system of traveling libraries with the addition of the library employee who gives an idea of what the books are about. Many educators boldly proclaim that it were better that a child did not know how to read than that he be given this key to knowledge and then turned loose in the midst of pernicious and bad books with no hand to direct or guide his taste. To place good books within his reach and then to furnish a guide to create and stimulate the taste for good reading is certainly a noble work.

The American possesses a certain light airy surface manner that leads him to jest when he is most in earnest. One of the recent new figures introduced in the German is the Battle of Manila Bay or the Admiral Dewey. Each side merrily bombards the other with confetti balls. These society bombs burst in air and showers of gayly colored streamers fly in every direction. It is quite sure that none of those participating in this frolic fail to understand the tragic importance of the historical significance of that battle. At the same time it is in rather questionable taste to take the amusement of the moment under the name of such an event as the Battle of Manila. There was loss of life in the battle and not even the gay surge of dance music or the colors of a favor for the German can totally shut out the graves that lie by Manila Bay. We are too close to the sound of actual war to make a jest of its paraphernalia. There is national courage. It jars upon a fine sense of eternal fitness when the event that opened to this nation a great eastern empire is made the name for a careless revel. These very society butterflies have shown that they had patriotism and self sacrifice in the interests of their country. Let them also show that they can appreciate the dignity of achievement.

The Board of Health of New York City has added one more horror to the generous list of attainments in that line already in the scope of the dreaded "Grip." Sufferers have always been able to gather what comfort there might be in the sympathy of friends who listened to and condoled with the victims. Now the Board says that "grip" is contagious. To all its other horrors must be added that of suffering alone or of bearing the well-known stigma of the one who "begun it" from the victims of contiguous sympathy. Now let some scientist tell us how to destroy the "bacillus." It is really a great social triumph for this unrecognized member to be admitted by scientific approval to the royal family of discomfort and death—the germs. In these later days, not to be familiar with germs and microbes is to write yourself an emphatic back number. The bacillus of grip has never been recognized before but it has gone its way and made even the aristocracy of the germ family look to their laurels. At last the disposed bacillus has come into its own. It has been classified, and suffering humanity may indulge in the faint hope that now that it has entered the "four hundred" of the germ family it may be content with a scientific recognition of its existence and less direct proof of its activity among the laity. "Watch out" for the grip bacillus and give it the cut direct.



England has shown a most gratifying interest in her sometimes rebellious child. Some confirmed doubters have tried to see "a revenue only" side to this long supposed affection. We all know family quarrels are the most bother in the world but we also know that the same sensitiveness to wrong will make the most quarrelsome family unite against any outsider. It seems so with the great Anglo-Saxon family. We are of kindred blood. The proposal to place a statue of George Washington in Westminster Abbey is but another expression of a sentiment that has been growing between the English speaking races on the other side of the water. We can hope that it may be found possible to place this statue. No greater recognition could be given of a fact that Sir Edward Thornton once stated when he said, "Englishmen know that it was their battle as well as your own that was fought in the Revolution." It is the battle that the English speaking race has been fighting since its birth—the battle against arbitrary, tyrannical rule whether it be of a nation over its colonies, of a king over his subjects, or of a class of men over their more unfortunate fellows. The broader minded portion of the race have fought this battle against their own people when they failed to see the right. They have fought it against "lesser breeds without the law" wherever the great question of eternal right and wrong demanded settlement. A statue of George Washington in the great historic burial ground of those who have made England great would proclaim to all the world that a battle for a principle that was right was not a battle of one nation against another, but of those who sow the right, whether in England or America, against those who hold to a wrong.

"Man is the only animal that laughs," is a trite saying. We do hear of "crocodile tears" and of "grinning like a Cheshire cat," and sometimes of a "laughing hyena," but we fall back on the old saying as an indisputable proof of man's superiority. Of course "man" is used in the general sense and the feminine portion has decided that the one peculiarity that raises us above the brute should be cultivated to esthetic perfection. So my lady if she be of the latest mode, takes lessons in laughing. No loud, boisterous "haw haw" is to be tolerated. It is not to laugh but to laugh well. The class in laughing are given the pitch from a pitch pipe. Then they laugh up and down the scale. They laugh in the key suitable to a drawing-room, and they laugh pianissimo and crescendo, forte and diminuendo. In fact they make a careful, conscientious effort to substantiate the claims of the authors who speak of "silvery peals of mirth" and "low, musical laughter."

Seriously speaking, there is no surer evidence of culture or of lack of culture than the laugh. The voice may be trained so that it rings fairly true but the tone of the laugh fixes the social status at once. It gives an index of character that can be trusted. The laugh of the selfish, narrow, self-centered individual indicates his character. It is impossible not to trust a person who laughs out in a free, merry burst of good feeling. The shy person, the secretive, suspicious person rarely laughs aloud. No slip of tongue, eye, or lip betrays the inherent coarseness of some natures, but let the person laugh aloud and they stand revealed. The giggle is usually a sign of extreme self-consciousness and of a nervous temperament, whose whole universe is obscured to her own personality. Cultivation will change or destroy the index to individuality furnished by laughter. A merry laugh is a charm worth cultivating and laughing to music till laughter is music should be encouraged.

A CHILD'S All-Wool SUIT $1.90

Made from remnants of our fine $2.00 and $3.00 a yd. cloth which was left over from our Great Tailoring Department. $1.90 don't pay for the cloth, to say nothing of the making and linings. Order today before they are all gone.

REMNANTS will accumulate in our large tailoring store—do what we will we can't avoid them. Upon taking stock recently we found on hand over 1300 remnants, in each of which there was enough material to make a child's suit. The cloths consisted of genuine imported all wool English cassimeres & Scotch cheviots—all medium & dark shades, in beautiful mixtures & neat check patterns. None of the cloth cost less than $2 and up to $3 a yd. We made every remnant into knee pants suits (like cut) to fit boys from 4 to 15 years old, and now offer them for the wonder price of $1.90. The suits are splendidly tailored, perfect in fit & style and are guaranteed fully worth double our price.

SEND NO MONEY but send this adv. with choice of shade and pattern; give age of boy, state if large or small for age and we'll send the suit C.O.D. by express, and allow you to try it on the boy before you pay one cent. If just as represented and worth double our price then pay the express agent $1.90 and express charges. Pay nothing if unsatisfactory. Write for free cloth samples of suits for boys from 4 to 19 years old.

WORDS AND MUSIC BY E. NINIAN.

THE LATEST IDEAS IN MUSIC.

A Few Words on the Growing Popularity of Good Music, Cheap.

The beautiful song published above is somewhat of a change from the music in a lighter vein, which has more recently appeared in COMFORT, but will be none the less welcome to the thousands and thousands of readers who also enjoy music, and have become accustomed to look eagerly each month for COMFORT'S music page, knowing that upon it will be found the choicest and best of the more recent artistic musical productions.

Music publishers who cling to antiquated ideas and methods have always contended that good music could not be sold at low prices; that there was a comparatively limited number of people sufficiently versed in music to appreciate high class work; that these people were generally wealthy; and that the great expense of producing music in sheets compelled them to adopt and hold excessive rates. But COMFORT once saw a place where soda water was sold at ten and fifteen cents a glass. The druggists said it cost high and only the wealthy could afford it. Pretty soon a bright man sold it for three and five cents a glass and sold so much that he made more aggregate profit than all his ten-cent competitors combined.

COMFORT has always believed in the good taste of the masses and has been convinced that the experiment of giving the best and highest music at low prices and within the reach of all, has been a perfect success, and we are convinced that more good music has been sent wide-spread through America by our efforts than by all other agencies joined.

But by far our greatest triumph has been the production of elegant sheet music of finest quality and character and clearly printed in large words and notes at practically the cost of mailing. It is impossible to realize that music that one pays from forty cents to a dollar for at music stores can be obtained through COMFORT'S wonderful music offer for a trifling cost can be true; and yet such is the fact.

If instead of being doubtful readers would send or have their friends do so, we can assure them that we would gladly refund the money if the buyer were not entirely satisfied, or if it appeared that we had in any way exaggerated or deceived as to what the music really is. Certainly no offer could be fairer than this and you will have no cause to complain if you take the same advantage of low prices that hundreds of thousands of people are now doing.

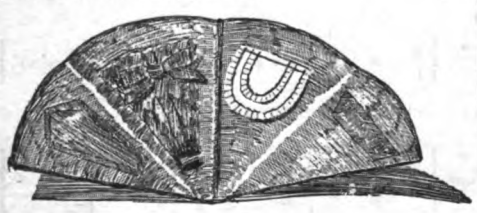
To both old and new friends we call attention to the offer on another page and especially among the many new pieces to No. 193, Poet and Peasant Overture, by Von Suppe. The original complete edition of this celebrated overture, consisting of ten full pages from entirely new plates, made especially for this number, usually sold in high-priced music stores for 75c.; No. 194, She Sleeps Among the Daisies, words by C. H. Webb, music by Lon Dinsmore; No. 195, Killarney, the celebrated Irish ballad by W. M. Balfe.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

THE woman who lives in or near one of the large cities has much the advantage of the one who lives in the country, for she can look over the newly brought out fancy things in the shops, and, if she is clever, duplicate them while they are yet novel. The woman who lives far removed from the great trade centers must wait until these ideas are brought to her through the medium of some paper—either described in an article, or in an advertisement.

One of the articles to which we wish to call attention this month, and which is comparatively new, is certainly the most useful that has come to our notice in many moons. It is a receptacle for broken needles—such dangerous things to have around, particularly where there are children or four-footed pets.

This little friend in need is as modest and simple as one could desire—being only a small bottle such as homeopathic physicians use for their little pellets; over the top of the bottle is tied a piece of silk, no cork being used, and around the neck of the bottle is tied a piece of narrow ribbon to cover the edges of the silk and the thread with which it is tied. Baby ribbon is used for this, and ends of three or four inches are left dangling; these ends are used for tying the bottle to the handle of the work basket, and then it is always at hand, and the broken needle can be slipped through the silk top and down into the bottle, where it may rest in peace, (also in pieces) until the bottle is full; then the top can be removed, the little sharp points be consigned to the stove, the only safe place for them, a new top be put on and the bottle again tied to the old stand, where it will continue to do a thriving business.



Store this idea up, if it happens to be new to you, and next December when Gladys wonders what she will give to her Aunts, bring it out and let her make half a dozen, and, my word for it, the Aunts will be more than delighted with her forethought.

We illustrate herewith a little needle book, which also holds scissors and thread; it is not a new idea, but is so useful that it will stand a description. It is something that can be utilized as a gift to a man, and is also a handy little traveling companion for a woman, as it can always be kept well stocked, and when going away for a day or two can be slipped into a hand bag, taking up little room, and yet will be found very convenient in the event of a glove or boot button becoming loosened.

If possible, get a skin of bronzed leather; from one skin half a dozen of these little books may be made. The book is a half circle, measuring ten inches across the straight side and, of course, five inches at the widest point of the circle. Bind all around with brown galloon, stitched on by machine. Then cut a lining of satin or silk one-fourth inch larger all around than the leather; turn in the edges and hem this lining onto the wrong side of book.

Next cut a piece of leather the shape of that on our diagram marked "scissors pocket"—this to be three inches long and one and one-half wide at the widest point. Bind the edges with galloon. Cut also a strip of the leather for the needle band, two and one-half inches long by one-half inch wide, which also bind. Attach the latter near one end of the book, onto the lining, by fastening firmly at both ends; then fasten it also in the middle, and there will be room to slip two papers of needles under the band. On the other end of the book fasten the scissors pocket.

FINISHED NEEDLEBOOK.

Next to the scissors pocket comes a pocket for thread, which is made of the same material as the lining of the book, and the shape may be seen in our diagram. This should measure three inches in depth by three in width at the top, tapering off a little at the bottom. Draw the bottom closely together, hem and shirr the top, and then attach to lining.

* For the fourth and last compartment, make two leaves of white flannel, buttoned-holed around the edges—the larger leaf to measure two and one-half inches across the top, and the smaller one inch less—the leaves being rounded at the bottom edges, in good proportion. Attach the e in their place, one above the other, and then fold the book by bringing the two outer edges to the center, and then folding these edges together. At the point where the edges come together after folding, attach two pieces of narrow ribbon, to match in color the lining, with which to tie the book together, and put a small bow of the same on the pocket, inside.

Red morocco may also be bought in the skin, and is very pretty when made into these books, particularly when lined with cream or white satin.

Someone has sent us word that pads for stairs, to be used under the carpet, may easily be made at home; of course we all know what a saving they are to the carpet. Take half-worn blankets, which have been shrunken in repeated washings so that they are no longer useful for the beds; sprinkle with pepper and make into flat pads to fit the stairs, covering with thin calico. These pads should be one inch shorter than the width of the carpet, and five inches wide, and placed under the carpet directly over the edge of the stair, where the wear comes. Of course you know what the pepper is for.

This same person tells us to air our bookcases! this is a good suggestion, for books in a continually closed case become musty and ill-smelling. Therefore, each week when the sweeping has been done, open wide the doors of the bookcase and let in the fresh air.

PEPSIN-SALTED PEANUTS.

Dyspepsia, Insomnia and Other Ills Cured by the Common American Peanut.

IF the day ever dawns when science shall have robbed Nature of her last secret the world's people of that era will marvel at the host of simple things that Nature possessed for the welfare of mankind. Diligent investigation has lately discovered that the common American peanut contains qualities which when scientifically prepared and made operative with salt and pepsin in proper proportions acts with amazing promptitude on the gastric juices, relieving almost immediately dyspeptic disturbances, and, in time, curing dyspepsia in its worst forms.

To America is due the honor of having first produced the peanut (arachis hypogæa). Its true name is "goober," and Virginia is noted for exceptionally large crops of the nut. Since something of its real value has become known other warm countries succeeded in growing it. The plant is leguminous and of many branches, resembling somewhat the clover. It is planted and cared for much like peas or beans and is sometimes called earth or ground nut on account of its vines running along on the ground. Two years ago any one recommending peanuts for dyspepsia would have been geered at, and rightly, too, for it is of more recent date that the medicinal qualities of the nut were discovered. Until this discovery these qualities were dominated by an oil in which the peanut is rich. This oil is non-drying and valuable as a lubricant. It is also used extensively as an adulterant for olive oil.

Frequent experiments discovered that the peanut was also rich in nutriment, and that this food when peptonized acted like magic in dispelling heartburn, curing insomnia, and putting the digestive apparatus in working order. All well-informed medical men know that science has succeeded in isolating so pure a pepsin that it will digest 25,000 times its own weight in albumen. Pepsin is one of the albuminoids or nitrogenous substances, and it has the power of converting proteids into peptones. When the process of digestion does not furnish sufficient pepsin to accomplish complete assimilation of the food dyspepsia begins to entrench itself in the system. Then have a care, for, if its inroads are not blocked and the disease routed, years of intense suffering are sure to follow.

Everybody likes peanuts. Ever since the first "Young America" laughed at the antics of the circus clown peanuts have been popular. Children love to eat them on the sly "when the teacher isn't looking," while older persons have been known to crack them quietly in their pockets and sneak the palatable kernels into their mouths at the theater. Even the confirmed dyspeptic loves them, but is afraid. Who, it may be asked, ever expected to hear of peanuts being used as a remedy for dyspepsia, for Bright's Disease, for Diabetes, for Insomnia and for corpulency?

Germany claims the credit of having discovered the possibilities of the peanut, and an eminent chemist in our employ has demonstrated that "pepsin-salted" peanuts lose none of the peanut flavor in the preparation. Our process of preparing them is such that the oil is neutralized while the flavor and the medicinal properties of the nut are retained. This makes a food-medicine that is certain to be the delight of everybody.

In connection with medicinal qualities of pepsin-salted peanuts it might be interesting as well as instructive to know that peanuts outrank, by a large percentage, such nutritive foods as cheese, peas, beef, rice, potatoes, milk, rye flour, and veal. Already the Germans are making flour and butter from the peanut, and the success of the venture has been such that peanut planters everywhere are preparing to double their usual crops.

We are the first in the United States to prepare pepsin-salted peanuts for the market, and we hope to merit success solely from the quality of the goods which we shall dispose of through our agents at 10c. per package.

Experiments have proved that our pepsin-salted peanuts will cure heartburn and relieve all the other pangs of chronic dyspepsia.

Sufferers from the effects of Bright's Disease and other kidney troubles have noted marked progress after treatment.

Corpulency disappears because the pepsin-salted peanuts digests and makes other food digest.

Half a handful eaten one hour before retiring will induce sleep and a continuation of pepsin-salted peanuts rightly will cure insomnia.

The World's Greatest Offer!

The great enterprise of a famous New York publishing house whereby every reader of this paper can secure a big dollar's worth for a few cents. Our offer beyond a question the most liberal ever made. We give

A BIG PREMIUM PACKAGE of useful Household Goods, Jewelry, etc., for the small sum of 20cts. which, when the greatness of this offer is considered, everyone should take immediate advantage of.

OUR PURPOSE is not to get the few cents that we ask in this advertisement, and send you something of little value. We publish "The Paragon Monthly." It is a large illustrated magazine, carefully edited, illustrated and filled with the choicest original literary matter that the best authors can produce. In the ordinary way its merit would force it to the front and in a few years we would easily have a circulation of at least half-a-million for everyone who subscribes is so pleased that we seldom, if ever, fail to receive a renewal, but instead of wasting years to accomplish our aim we have decided to force it to the front as rapidly as possible and to attain our aim and swell our subscription up the desired mark with the least possible delay. We have prepared a great premium package of Useful Household Goods, Novelties and Jewelry which we give absolutely FREE with a year's subscription to the "Paragon Monthly" at only 20cts. Our premium package has been made up with the one great aim in view of giving the utmost possible satisfaction even considering that it is free, but we desire to so thoroughly please every one answering this advertisement and convince them all we want is simply that they become regular readers of "The Paragon Monthly" that we have spared nothing—time, money and care, to make our offer as we justly claim it to be The World's Greatest Premium Offer.

Here is the List of Articles

They will come carefully packed and mailed postpaid

RHEUMATISM IS DEAD!

Long Live OXIEN, the King of Remedies that Killed it.

No more infernal tortures, no more roastings of the flesh with red hot irons, no more lightning shocks from the electric battery or dosings with dangerous drugs.

RHEUMATISM HAS BEEN CONQUERED by Oxien the triumph of medicine, the Godsend of the age. Absolute cures are now certain, and Oxien is making them every day. In this connection

WE HAVE A WORD TO SAY.

Oxien was last year put to the test as a remedy for Rheumatism and it made a record of absolute cures in Acute Rheumatism, frequently called rheumatic fever, Pericardit's (inflammation of the investing membrane of the heart), Endocarditis (inflammation of the living membrane of the heart), subacute rheumatism, sometimes applied to the less severe attacks of the disease, chronic rheumatism, which swells and twists the joints and sciatica, or neuralgia of the sciatic nerve. In fact Oxien is guaranteed to cure Rheumatism in any form. Thousands jump for joy and many write as follows:

Received OXIEN O. K. Found it far superior to what you represent. Have tried everything I could hear of for rheumatism. For ten years I have been crippled up with this terrible disease. Laid in bed one whole year. Could not turn or feed myself and when I was able to walk on crutches (which I did for four years) was crooked and unable to straighten up, but Oxien did it and you can imagine how happy I am now. Yours sincerely, Geo. F. Lawton, Olympia, Wash., Feby. 9th, 1898.

FREE 200,000 BOXES OF RHEUMATISM CURE. FREE.

This momentous offer we make in order to more thoroughly introduce this amazing rheumatism remedy in the United States and Canada. None but those who will give us their word that they either suffer from rheumatism, or are afraid of it through hereditary tendencies will be considered entitled to free treatment. Therefore, if you want a box free send at once, yes to-day. Write plainly as our clerks are badly rushed.

DEAR NIECES AND NEPHEWS:

Here we are all together once more, ready to listen to each other's tales of wonders we have seen, pleasures experienced, and good deeds witnessed. I think we all enjoy these chats, but I find my family circle is much like the rest of the world: most of you prefer to listen and enjoy without doing your part toward the general entertainment, leaving the talking to be done by a very few of your number. Now that is hardly fair. All of you have something which you could tell which would instruct or amuse the rest of us—some curious or wonderful sight, some interesting event, or some scientific discovery which has come to your personal knowledge; and we are all longing to hear you speak. So do please make an effort to gratify us.

Our first letter this month gives an account of "The Lost Indian God," which is said to have been cut by the Mohicans before the time of Uncas. I find the story, which is entirely new to me, very interesting, and I hope my nieces and nephews will find it equally so. Our cousin says:

WITH what thrills of delight old and young recall Mr. Cooper's wonderful story, 'The Last of the Mohicans.' They remember the great Sachem Uncas, whose mark was a turtle—an emblem of the tribe of which Mr. Cooper says 'it was the noblest among Indians, commanding peculiar respect when seen by the scattered tribes.' This same Uncas, when an old man in 1641, sold to English planters a tract of land in Connecticut, now called Guilford and Madison, not far from New Haven. He was paid in coats, kettles, hatchets and hoes. These deeds of sale, signed 'Uncas—his mark' and 'Ahaddon his son,' are now great curiosities.

"Remnants of this noted tribe still remained on their native soil in Connecticut as late as 1740, and still held in reverent possession the Indian God, whose picture is shown below. This stone image was doubtless cut by ancestors of these Indians long before the time of Uncas, as it was, even then, regarded by the tribe as a valued and choicely kept relic. After the extinction of the tribe it disappeared for a time, but for more than one hundred and fifty years it has been known to be near Madison. A letter is still in existence, written by an aged man to his grandchildren which says: 'Be sure and go to a hillock close by Tixis pond. There you will find a great curiosity. It is an Indian God made of stone.' The children found it as directed. Like a grim pilgrim from a long journey it is solemn and solitary, with great stone shoulders and rocky face. It is an image of a human being, dark, stained with lichens, briars and brambles. A collar or necklace is carved around its huge neck, dropping low under the massive chin. It was hauled by a Madison man to his own yard where visitors came from all parts of the country. Antiquarians and archæological students studied it, but none could exactly locate the period of its creation.

THE INDIAN GOD.

"Years passed; the family moved away. The idol disappeared. Again its huge head peered out of an old stone fence. The villagers welcomed its return, and children climbed the wall with awe and wonder to see the Indian God. One grandmother tells how she used to say, when a little mite and disappointed—'Well, I guess I'll go and see the old stone image anyhow.'

"A new depot was made, land cleared, walls torn down, and for fifty years the stone image was lost. In the growth of railroad interests it entirely passed off the face of the earth. A short time ago an old man chanced to recall the Indian God. He directed men to the spot where, covered with briers and brambles, roots and brush, lo! in another stone wall, solid, grim and perfect, was the lost God!

"Mr. Nathan Bushnell, one of the oldest inhabitants of Madison, removed it to his handsome grounds, where, as a rare relic of 1600, and the last of the Mohicans, it will probably always remain."

MARGARET SPENCER, East Haven, Conn.

Now we have an account of the celebration of Washington's Birthday at the "Farm School" in Boston Harbor, which is not only interesting reading but exceedingly appropriate to the month as well.

"In Boston Harbor there is a beautiful island, one hundred and fifty-seven acres in extent, called Thompson's Island. For over fifty years this island has been the property of the Farm School, a home training school at which there are always about one hundred boys from seven to eighteen years of age. There are no other residents on the island except the School and those connected with it, and life on the big farm there is as quiet as if the farm were in the middle of New England instead of only a mile and a half from the busy life of Boston.

"Especial attention is always paid to the regular holidays, and the good times which the boys have are planned to teach some lesson for each day. Washington's Birthday is always celebrated in a unique manner. Every year two big snow forts are built on the lawn. Early in February the boys elect two generals, and these boys choose officers and choose sides. Thus the School is divided into two companies. Each company builds its fort, and works days in doing so. These forts are large, high and strong. On Washington's Birthday everybody on the Island gathers to see the battle. Twenty bags are filled with sawdust and placed in one of the forts. Then the company which owns th t fort defends it for twenty minutes from the other. When time is called the number of bags which each side has counts so many points. Then after a rest the other side takes the bags and the struggle is reversed. Then all the bags are placed at some point equidistant from both forts and both sides make a rush for them, for twenty minutes. Finally the side which has scored the greatest number of points wins. They carry a banner of victory, and march about the grounds escorted by the School Band. The prize is a big box containing a feast of good things. The victors march up into the gymnasium and enjoy the feast which they have fought for and won." MAX BENNETT.

Now an Illinois cousin invites us to take a trip to Wisconsin to admire with her some of its beauties and curiosities. She says:

"Not many miles from Baraboo in Southern Wisconsin, lies a placid little lake of which we seldom read. Years ago, tradition relates, it was a favorite spot of a wandering tribe of Indians, but after the drowning of an Indian bride in its green and blue waters, something evil seemed attached to it, gaining it the title of the evil one and it has since been known as Devil's Lake.

"Enormous rocks of a reddish color, piled one over the other and reaching in places the dizzy height of hundreds of feet, encircle the tiny lake with the exception of one side, which is a pleasant valley dotted with beautiful forest trees.

"The formation of many of the rocks is remarkable for their almost exact likeness to living things; one in particular, 'The Elephant,' is so close an imitation of the great beast in its natural construction that one might say, all it lacked was life! The 'Devil's Doorway,' and 'Hells Gate' are among the many curious and well-named openings and caves around the lake. Ascent to these means a tiresome slipping from rock to rock, but the descent is perilous, for should you chance to lose control of a steady gait you may come down too fast for comfort. Nevertheless a grand view as well as the curiosities awaits one at the top; and gazing about one looks down on the beautiful dells of Baraboo and a good section of farming country. An overland route to Baraboo, the nearest town, is made by 'bus, and one may also take in the scenery of this beautifully situated town, as well as observe the grandeur of the distant cliffs."

I feel sure that the northern cousins will thank me if I keep you all still longer in a southern clime while we visit Mexico with a new cousin from Virginia. She says:

"Three years ago I visited Saltillo and Monterey, Mexico. We first went to Saltillo, a quaint old town famous as a summer resort. We stayed at Hotel Del La Plaza, so called because of a beautiful plaza opposite. The rooms, instead of being numbered as in our hotels, are named after some distinguished person or place. My room was Porfirio Diaz, for the President of Mexico. All the floors in the building are stone, both above and below. In the distance could be seen the famous battle-field of Buena Vista.

"While there, we visited the penitentiary and bought many articles such as baskets and Mexican purses made by the prisoners. Their work is very pretty and bright and requires much skill and patience. All except the very unruly prisoners are taught some trade. The prison band played several pieces of music which we thoroughly enjoyed. Mexican music is a mixture of the plaintive music of the Indian and the gay Spanish airs. Their national hymn, La Golondrina, would thrill any lover of music. We were taken into some of the cells, many of which are decorated with gay pictures. Men imprisoned for twenty years or more, occupy the first floor, those for fifteen the second floor, for ten the third floor and those for five, or under, the fourth.

"That night we went to Monterey, which is a beautiful city and greatly Americanized. West of the city is a peculiar mountain called 'La Silla,' because of its marked resemblance to the Mexican saddle. On Sunday morning we attended high mass and following the old saying 'In Rome do as the Romans do,' we attended a bull-fight in the afternoon. Although the favorite sport of the Mexicans I cannot say that I enjoyed it very much.

"Horse-cars run from the city to the Bishop's Palace, an historic old ruin, the scene of a battle between our troops and the Mexicans in 1847.

"Tuesday we spent at Topo Chico Hot Springs, two miles from the city. We walked up the mountain and down in an hour. Only cacti, laurel and the resurrection plant grow on it. The view from the top of the mountain is beautiful, the lovely valleys, gardens and hills, with streams of water winding in and out, make a charming picture. EVA DICKINSON, Castlewood, Va.

Now let us leave the snow and ice and wintry blasts of Boston Harbor for the warmth and sunshine of Georgia while we visit with our southern cousin beautiful Tallulah Falls. We shall find it a pleasant change.

"I have greatly enjoyed your letters in COMFORT and I would be pleased if you and your nieces and nephews will ramble with me a few moments among the mountains of upper Georgia.

"When you reach Tallulah, and catch your first glimpse of the grand chasm, through which a wild mountain stream noisily tumbles over successive piles of rock, the senses are intoxicated with the rugged beauty, the sublimity and the fascination of the scene. Here among the shadows of the eternal hills you may look down from the rustic seat of a vine-clad summer house upon a gorge much wider and more picturesque than Watkins Glen, and a thousand feet deeper than Niagara, intersected by roaring cataracts which break into numberless cascades before reaching the Tugaloo. This river, which was so named by the Indians, after spending its power on these wonderful falls quietly flows onward to mingle with the broad Savannah in its march to the sea.

"Armed with long walking canes we present quite an Alpine appearance as we carefully follow our guide over the winding mountain path. L' eau d'or (water of gold) is the first fall we reach, and as its musical waters come dashing downward we think of Southey's famous poem 'Lodore! Lodore!' The next fall is Tempestia, whose deep bass voice resembles that of the turbulent billows of the ocean. After listening to what its 'wild waves are saying,' we approach Old Hurricane, which is rushing down a pyramid of white rocks with a frightful velocity. When we reach Oceana, the lowest of the falls, no imagination can picture its grandeur. On our right is a wild shaded mountain, overhung with huge boulders of dark, moss-covered rocks, bending downward as if waiting for some fearful cyclone to hurl them into the depths below. On our left is a perpendicular height of solid rock painted by nature in different colors—red, blue, yellow and brown, fifteen hundred feet high, upon the summit of which is Point Inspiration. Look straight up and you will see a natural pulpit called 'The Devil's Pulpit,' but my heart rebelled at this sacrilege, so I call it 'The Holy of Holies.'

"Close your eyes one moment and listen to the voices of all those waters, each in a different key, and you cannot help hearing this grandest of all anthems, 'Who is the King of Glory?' Then all the mighty waters catch up the wondrous strain and together reply: 'The Lord of Hosts, He is the King of Glory!' What a grand symphony in A minor! Reclining on this broad, flat stone, with Oceana at our feet, hemmed in from the outer world down in the canyon by two giant walls, where not a ray of sunshine penetrates, we may silently drink in the inexpressible beauty of the scene. Surely not in sunny Italy, or the far famed Vale of Chamouny can there be found a more impressive picture than this among the hills of beautiful Georgia, the Empire State of the South."

L. R. ROGERS, Barnesville, Ga.

And now, hoping you are all enjoying the pleasures as well as the stormy blasts of winter, I will say good-by for another month. AUNT MINERVA.

WE GIVE THIS WATCH FOR A CLUB OF 4.

Thirty Minutes is a short time, but many have earned one of these watches in less time than that. It is one of the very best watches for time ever offered to our readers at no matter what the price asked for it. We know, of course, there are watches that cost more money, because they are in gold or silver cases, but they will not keep any better time, simply because they cannot. This watch keeps not perfect time, we never saw the watch that did, but it keeps as near perfect time as watches usually do. We have such faith in this watch as a timekeeper that we send with every one a guarantee just as binding as that given with any watch, no matter what make. We are willing to give you this watch if you will do us a slight service, which you can easily do in an hour. We wish to increase our subscription list, and we want the assistance of every reader of this paper to that end. We do not want you to do it for nothing, we will reward you for it. You can easily secure this valuable watch if you get four subscribers to this paper, at our special subscription price of 25 cents a year each. Do this, sending us $1.00, with the names of four subscribers to this paper, and we will send our paper to each subscriber for one year, and we will send you the watch to reward you for your efforts in our behalf. Start out now and see what you can do. Remember we guarantee every watch. If you get five subscribers and send us $1.25 for the same we will also send you a nice chain. Women in Public Service.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

PRESIDENT McKinley and the men who hold portfolios under him have appointed an unusual number of women to government places, and clerks of the gentler sex get much more consideration than they received from the last Administration, which openly exhibited a prejudice against them.

For thirty-seven years women have been employed in the public service at Washington, where there are now somewhat over 3000 of them in the executive departments. They have proved themselves a success, having made a record for reliability superior to that of the men, and it is for this quality that they have earned most praise. During the period mentioned there have been many defalcations by government clerks, but only one of these was attributable to a woman. Being occupied in the redemption division of the Treasury, she invented a most ingenious plan for making nine notes out of eight, incidentally to the work of putting together fragments of damaged money.

Up to the period of the Civil War no women were employed in the departments at Washington. The conflict with the South occasioned demand for great quantities of paper currency, and twenty men were engaged to do the work of cutting apart and trimming the notes. Gen. Spinner, at that time Treasurer of the United States, conceived the notion that women could do this sort of thing much faster. He had been in the banking business, and his daughter had clipped his notes for him with notable deftness. Accordingly, a single female clerk was introduced into the office experimentally, and she did the work of three men. That settled it, and presently the entire corps of clippers and trimmers was composed of women.

Next, the notion was conceived that women could do the work of counting the money with greater quickness, and an experiment showed that this was true. Accordingly, the men in the redemption division were replaced by women, and some of those originally employed are still occupied in the same task at the Treasury. The women are surprisingly reliable and accurate, almost never making a mistake. It would be impossible to put men in their places without great disadvantage to the work and a large increase of expense. One point made by Gen. Spinner in his argument in behalf of employing women was that they could be had for half the price of men; but since the adoption of civil service regulations they have received the same salaries as the male clerks of equal rank, and this rule has governed in all the departments. It is a fact that many women of superior abilities are glad to accept positions which could not be filled so satisfactorily at the same pay by men, for the reason that clever men can earn more money outside of the public service.

In the division of loans and currency of the Treasury Department all of the distinctive fiber paper used for money and for bonds is counted and examined, and the utmost care has to be taken to see that there are no flaws in it. This work is done by women, and the faithfulness with which it is performed is proved by the quantity of rejected sheets annually returned to the manufacturers. To the eye of any ordinary person these rejected sheets would seem to be of first-rate quality and finish. Even greater expertness is exhibited by the counters of mutilated money. All of these are women, because it has been found that they are more clever than men at such work. They must be absolutely accurate, accounting for every dollar, and much of the spoiled cash that comes into the Treasury for redemption is in such a condition as to require most delicate handling, having been chewed by goats, swallowed by puppies, eaten by babies, passed through the laundry, or partly burned by the fire. One of the ladies in the redemption division of the Treasury is the greatest living expert in identifying and "restoring" burned money, and another is more skillful at detecting counterfeits than any man in the government employ. She says that it is intuition with her.

The clerks at the Post Office Department who do "blind reading," which consists in deciphering illegible addresses, are women. They are far superior to men at such work, possibly for the reason that feminine intuition helps them. One of them is considered the foremost expert in her line in the world, and some of her decipherings are well-nigh miraculous.

Women of late have been making their way into the scientific branches of the government service. Two women ethnologists of very superior attainments and of recognized reputation are employed by the Bureau of Ethnology. The Smithsonian Institution has a woman expert in lobsters and crabs. In the National Museum is a woman who is an authority on mammals, and the most skillful entomological artist living is a woman employee of the bureau of entomology. Her reputation for accuracy in the drawing of bugs is unequaled. The Chief Librarian of the Bureau of Public Documents is a woman. Recently the Bureau of American Republics required a couple of translators in French and Spanish, and two mere girls won the prizes in competitive examinations. They are the highest-paid women in the government service, each of them receiving $2400 a year. A female expert in grasses was appointed a few months ago in the Department of Agriculture.

The Post Office Department employs a great army of women. Among these are 7670 female postmasters, and there are about 80,000 women to whom the oath of office has been administered to qualify them to assist in conducting the business of post offices. Women are employed in all branches of the postal service, except as letter-carriers, railway mail clerks, and inspectors. The same salaries are paid to them as to men for the same kind of work, running from $240 to $1900 per annum. Postmistresses sometimes receive much more than $1800. There is only one government office in Washington where no women are employed—the Army Medical Museum. The Indian Bureau furnishes good opportunities for women who are employed as cooks, laundresses, and seamstresses at Indian schools and agencies, getting from $400 to $500 per annum. They do no menial work, being required merely to teach the little Indians how to cook, sew, etc. Matrons at such schools and agencies receive $500 to $660. These are the only government offices accessible through marriage, the wife of a superintendent of a school or agency being always the preferred candidate for the place of matron.

The chiefs of the departments and bureaus are at full liberty to call upon the Civil Service Commission for male clerks if they prefer them, and the mere fact that so many women are appointed is proof that they are reliable and efficient. There are only two or three women in the Department of State, because that Department has always had a prejudice against them. A notion is entertained to the effect that they cannot be trusted with public secrets.

Naturally there are some officials who entertain views adverse to women clerks. They assert that women expect special favors and are less manageable than men; that they are disposed to appeal to the sympathy of their superiors in office, in order to obtain privileges and immunities; that they are apt to rely upon their fascinations rather than upon hard work; that they object to smoking; that the young ones are often vain and desirous of pleasing the young men with whom they are associated; that they cannot be used in emergencies; that they do not have the ambition to excel in their work that the average man has; and, finally, that while working for Uncle Sam, they are looking out all the time for the right man to come along and when they find him they quickly shake off the government harness and don the matrimonial.

That some of the allegations have a basis in fact, as applying to special cases, cannot be doubted, but they are certainly not just as referring to the generality of the women employees of the departments. Most of the officials in charge of government bureaus frankly acknowledge that, for certain classes of work particularly, women are far superior to men and more reliable. They are accurate and painstaking. As typewriters and stenographers they are particularly efficient. They pass the civil service examinations much higher than the men, their average of superiority being eight or ten per cent. One reason for this is that girls stay longer at school than boys do, as a rule, and are more mature in respect to book-learning when they come out. Their habits are good, and their work is not apt to be interfered with by any sort of indulgence. In offices devoted to accounting and filing, where memory and system go very far, they so admirable. As already hinted, they furnish more ability for the money. It is declared by Commissioner of Pensions Evans that some of the women in his employ are as competent as any men to pass on legal questions of the kind that come under the attention of his bureau.

In the old days of the spoils system a good many females of dubious character were employed in the departments, and, thanks to their "influence" were more sure of their places than the good women and received greater consideration. For them promotion was rapid, hours what they desired, and work light or none at all. Some of them never came to the office, but merely signed the pay-roll and drew their salaries. The Civil Service Law has changed all this, however, and at present the average of respectability among women government clerks is very high.

Bureau officials, in calling on the Civil Service Commission for clerks, are at liberty to fix the requirement as to sex, and this is why six men are appointed for every woman. To show how far prejudice goes in this matter, the case may be mentioned of Miss Staklnecker, who was appointed recently as a translator in the Department of State. She had previously applied for a place in the War Department, and had been rejected, after beating all her male rivals in a special competitive examination "out of sight." The requirements were extraordinarily exact, but, after answering every question correctly, the young lady was shut out because she could not with propriety climb ladders for books.

Our government is said to be the only business concern in existence that places women on the same plane with men in the matter of pay for work. Certainly Uncle Sam affords a commendable example in this regard; nevertheless it gives rise to no little grumbling outside of the ranks of the Federal civil service. In the big cities of this country there are plenty of educated and refined young women who are doing typewriting or other clerical labor for $7 or $8 weekly, toiling from 8 a. m. to 5 p. m. to earn that modest stipend. Not unnaturally, they consider it an injustice that persons of their own sex, merely through the luck of getting places under the government, should be receiving from $1[illegible]0 to $1800 per annum—with one month of vacation each year and another month of sick leave—for doing the same sort of work, with much shorter hours. The everyday employee in commercial life cannot be persuaded to look upon this situation with complacency. When the last report on this subject was made by the Civil Service Commission, seven women employed by Uncle Sam in Washington were drawing $1800 a year, forty-six were getting $1600, ten were receiving $1500, two hundred and fifteen were absorbing $1400, and six hundred were pocketing checks amounting to from $1200 to $1300 annually.

BICYCLES AS BAGGAGE.

There has been a test case in the English courts on a question which is agitating cyclists all around the world, more or less. It was brought in the Queen's Bench division against the Great Northern Railway Company "on behalf of one Britten," seeking "to recover sixpence paid for the conveyance of a bicycle from King's Cross to East Finchley." And after hearing and argument the court decided that the plaintiff could not recover for the reason that "a bicycle cannot be ordinary luggage within the definition."

The special interest attaching to this case is found in the fact that the attorney for the plaintiff made his argument on the very lines on which similar claims are based in this country. He claimed that a bicycle came clearly within the definition of "personal luggage" for the reason that it was carried by the traveller for his own personal convenience and use in connection with his journey, and was an article such as was ordinarily carried for that purpose. But his Lordship, in rendering his decision, brushed away all such considerations by declaring that "the idea of luggage" must control; and as luggage implies something that is "packed," not taken "loose, like a bicycle," the wheelman lost his case.—Boston Post.

FITS

Permanently Cured.

SERENE MIND, HEALTHY BODY AND A JOYOUS FUTURE ASSURED.

Potsdam, N. Y., Oct. 23, 1898.
W. H. MAY, M. D., New York City.
Dear Sir:—I am permanently cured of "Fits." I recommend your treatment to all who suffer from this terrible malady.
Faithfully, MRS. L. A. CLEVELAND.

Rock House, Ohio, Oct. 30, 1898.
Dr. W. H. MAY, New York City.
My dear Doctor:—Let me state that your remedy, "Epilepticide," has worked miracles for my little girl. Before she began your treatment, she was so bad with St. Vitus' Dance that she could not feed herself, nor could she walk. After using your remedy, she was able to feed herself and walked without assistance. Three months ago I stopped giving "Epilepticide," and when I tell you that my little girl is now going to school, and is in perfect health, you cannot fail to believe that your wonderful medicine has effected a permanent cure. You have saved my child's life, and I ask that you publish this fact to the whole world.
Very gratefully yours,
MRS. MARY M. SWEET.

Seville, Ohio, Nov. 3, 1898.
W. H. MAY, M. D., New York City.
Dear Doctor:—My daughter suffered for some time with "Nervousness" and "Spells." Your medicine, "Epilepticide," acted like magic, and she has been completely relieved of all her symptoms. I want to express to you my gratitude for restoring my daughter to health.
Very respectfully,
MRS. JOHN W. LEE.

All lovers of good government will be pleased to know that General Wood is to continue as military governor of Santiago. No person has done more to reconcile both the Spanish and Cuban people in that province to the conquest by the Americans; as few weeks as it is since the memorable fights around Santiago, and with all the sores of war still unhealed, General Wood has brought about a feeling, if not of entire friendship, one where there is no enmity or bad feeling; and his great success in municipal improvements, cleaning of the streets, regenerating of the wharves and docks, paving, and many other things, all of which have been done with such promptness, have been such an object lesson to the inhabitants that even at this early date few, if any, would be willing to return to Spanish rule; and the demonstrations that have taken place at banquets and other meetings show that General Wood has won his way into the hearts of these people, although representing a conquering army. His original appointment and its renewal bring great satisfaction, and have proven the wisdom of the administration in the selection.

HON. JOSEPH H. CHOATE.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier's visit to Washington as a member of the Canadian treaty Commission is a matter of the highest importance. It will be remembered that a Commission representing both the United States and Canada has held sittings in Canada and our country and exhaustive testimony has been taken concerning matters of trade about which there has been more or less friction for years. Sir Wilfrid has consistently fought for more intimate trade relations for years and the present friendly disposition on both sides of the great lakes makes this an opportune time to construct a fair and equitable agreement. In the presence of President McKinley the other day Sir Wilfrid said that the British Empire and the United States are now united by the strongest bonds of brotherhood; and that henceforth the starry banner and the union jack will float side by side in defence of right and justice. There are so many conflicting interests to be thought of on both sides the line that the Commission's success can be but partial; but it has effectually cleared the ground for future understanding.

Just as the work of the Commission is to be made public the country is filled with pain to learn of the death of the American Commissioner Hon. Nelson Dingley of Maine. In his death the whole nation as well as his native State meet with a loss hardly to be recovered. No public man had so many heartfelt tributes paid to his memory as this plain unostentatious political student who has directed the Ways and Means Committee in Congress. His colleague, Congressman Burleigh of Maine sums up his character as follows:

"The death of Mr. Dingley is an irreparable loss, not only to his own State but to the whole country. He was a broad guaged statesman. No man in Congress approached him in range of accurate information upon the great public questions of the day. He was a clean, able, progressive man, a fine type of the true Christian gentleman. In my short service in Congress I have often been to him for counsel and advice and have been constantly indebted to him for many kindly acts. He was a man of untiring industry, with an almost phenomenal capacity for hard work and yet he was never too busy to maintain a thoughtful interest in those about him. It is not an easy matter to analyze a character like Mr. Dingley's. He was a many-sided man. The whole country feels a sense of his loss. To the members of his delegation his death comes with the force of a personal bereavement. The country does well to honor his memory, for in his death it has lost an eminent public man, a true patriot who commanded in a marked degree the sincere respect of his countrymen, irrespective of party affiliations, and whose untimely death in the very meridian of his powers will be universally mourned."

The condition in the far east remains practically unchanged. Aguinaldo still threatens, should not full independence be given the Filipinos, who at the present time are certainly unfitted for self-government. An expedition was sent from Manila to take possession of Iloilo, the second port of the islands, but the Spanish general surrendered a day before the arrival of the Americans. The insurgents at this writing have possession of the city and threaten its destruction by fire, for which the buildings have been prepared by "kerosening," should the American force land. Meantime Aguinaldo puts out proclamations most hostile to the Americans and is evidently preparing for resistance. In many quarters it is believed that Germany is interfering and plotting against us, but this is most indignantly denied by all German authorities.

The course of anti-expansionists in Congress naturally gives these insurgents great hopes. Instead of assisting President McKinley and promptly aiding him in his endeavors to do what is best for the advancement and civilization of these heathen people, a few senators are opposing every movement. It is easily understood that the Philippines came to us by the chance of war and that their conquest was unlooked for; but now they are in our hands we must hold them at least until such time as they are capable of self-government. They cannot be given back to Spain, we cannot allow European countries to divide them, the natives are uncapable of proper self-government. The only thing left is to have firmness enough to hold them until they can be released with safety. Although these "antis" are opposed to the administration, they offer no remedy for the state the islands would be left in were the present policy given up. It is always easier to be a destructive statesman than a constructive one; easier to pick to pieces and tear down, than to create and build. Numerous canvasses of leading papers and representative bodies of men show that the people are overwhelmingly in favor both of colonial expansion and giving the administration a free hand to work out the destiny of these people unhampered by unmeaning criticism.

The promotion of Ambassador Hay to be Secretary of State left the ambassadorship to Great Britain vacant and many prominent men have been named for the position. The President has appointed Hon. Joseph H. Choate of New York to fill this position. Mr. Choate has been the most prominent member of the New York bar for years and is a highly-cultured orator. He was very warmly supported for the Senate and would have made a formidable rival to Chauncey M. Depew, upon whom the choice has fallen, had he not been selected for foreign service. Mr. Choate will maintain the high standard that has been set by the previous Ambassadors at the Court of St. James, a record which should cause every American a feeling of pride and pleasure.

THE CANARY ISLANDS.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

THE Canaries lie in the Atlantic Ocean, just off the west coast of Africa, in latitude 28 deg. north. They consist of seven islands, all of which are of volcanic origin, and all show large areas of bare, volcanic rock. Each island, however, has its peculiar characteristics of relief, soil, and climate, and the traveler is never wearied by monotony. There is ever something new to attract, something strange to amuse the foreigner upon these shores.

The climate at the sea-level is delightful, being very mild and equable, the temperature averaging sixty-four degrees Fahrenheit the year round. Even the nights vary little from the day in warmth, and a sheet is the only covering ordinarily required on the beds.

The derivation of the original people of these islands, the Guanches, is unknown, although they are supposed to have wandered here from the north of Africa. These Guanches were conquered by the Spaniards in 1493. Many of them were slain, others sold into captivity, and the remainder intermarried with their conquerors, and so gradually lost their identity. The present race of natives resemble their Spanish ancestor in form and feature, and speak the Spanish language, but they are darker skinned, and far more sweet and gentle in dispositon.

The war in Cuba was deeply felt in this far-away province, as the people of the Canaries were heavily over-taxed to obtain the means to carry it on. Large demands, too, were made on the men for soldiers, and so great is the scarcity of money that even the wealthiest Canarinas found it difficult to raise the five hundred dollars necessary to free their sons from this duty. This is the more unfortunate as the quiet, country lives and the gentle dispositions of these people totally unfit them for war and fighting.

The vegetation of the islands is arranged, as it were, in zones, according to the height above the sea. The lowest zone produces the date palm, the sugar cane and other tropical plants; higher up flourish the grape vine, olive and maize; while the highest summits are barren naked rocks. Owing to the climate and soil three crops a year are raised in some parts of the islands. The lower classes live very inexpensively on fish, potatoes and gofio, which is merely Indian corn or wheat roasted, ground, and kneaded with water or milk.

Teneriffe, the largest and most thickly settled of these islands, is of irregular shape, sixty miles in length, with an extreme breadth of thirty miles. It is covered by mountains and piles of rock—trachite, greenstone and tufa—however, so that not more than one seventh is fertile land. A chain of mountains runs its entire length, and in the middle of its broadest part rises the celebrated Peak of Teneriffe, which, with its support and spire, occupies nearly two thirds of the whole island. The Peak has a double top. The highest point, El Piton, is twelve thousand two hundred feet above the level of the sea. The other, Chahorra, connected with the first by a short, narrow ridge, has a height of nine thousand eight hundred and eighty feet, and both are orifices in the same mountain of trachyte. Neither reaches the line of perpetual snow, although snow lies upon them four months of the year. There is, however, upon El Piton, an immense cavern, eleven thousand feet above the sea, where snow lies continually.

The Peak is surrounded by a mountain wall, six thousand feet above the sea, which forms the rim of an ancient crater within which the present cone was built up from ashes, pumice stone and lava thrown up by eruptions. Both El Piton and Chahorra have craters from which issue steam and a little sulphurous vapor, but there are no accounts in history of eruptions from either crater of the Peak, although at various times lava in great quantities has issued from vents in its sides.

The ascent of the Peak is made from Oratava, a large town on the northern side of the island. From twenty to twenty-four hours are occupied in the ascent. The town of Oratava is situated in the most beautiful part of the island, about a thousand feet above the sea. The houses are solidly built, water flows through every street, but the place has a deserted look. A fine, hard, broad road, macadamized in the most approved fashion, connects it with Santa Cruz de Santiago on the southern side of the island. This road is about twenty-six miles long, and so great was the expense of building it that it is popularly said to be paved with gold.

Santa Cruz is the present capital of the islands, and the residence of the Governor-general, who is also the civil lieutenant-governor of the Teneriffe district and the military governor of this island. It is a well-built and fairly clean town of ten thousand inhabitants, lying in a beautiful little fertile plain surrounded by bare and rugged rocks among which scarcely any vegetation is to be seen except thorny cacti and euphorbia, which latter gives a peculiar red tinge to the rocks upon which it flourishes. Inside the city boundaries the streets are paved with cobble-stones, very rough and uneven; the streets are narrow, too, and their gutters run directly in the middle, and not at the sides, as with us; these gutters are, however, very shallow, and the donkeys and mules, which are the principal beasts of burden, do not seem to mind them in the least. Horses are only used for coaches and cabs.

The houses in the cities, both on this island and Grand Canary, are built of white plaster, with flat roofs which are surrounded by a wall to protect those who walk and sit upon them. In the country, however, the old style of peaked roofs covered with red tiles still prevails. The city houses are generally low, with the second story overhanging the first, and adorned with balconies. There balconies are the favorite resort of lovers. Here sits the lady, while her adorer, in the street below, stands gazing at her, sometimes for hours; she, meantime, encouraging him by coy, amorous glances and witching smiles.

The climate is dry and warm, and rain falls, on an average, only about thirty-six days of the year. Much ground in the neighborhood is planted with the prickly pear for the cultivation of the cochineal insect.

Laguna, on the road to Oratava, is on much higher ground than Santa Cruz, and the summers are cooler, making it a popular summer resort for the wealthy residents of the latter place. Its winters are cold and damp, and a great quantity of rain falls, the plain being often flooded by it. The cause of this excessive rainfall is the meeting here of three aerial currents from the north, east and south-west. Owing to the extreme humidity of the air the walls and houses are covered by a thick growth of sempervirum.

Grand Canary is the most fertile island of the group. It is nearly circular in shape, and has a diameter of twenty-four miles. Its interior is simply a mass of mountains radiating to the shore, its highest peak being sixty-four hundred feet above sea level. There is plenty of water and several mineral springs on the island, but very little ground is under cultivation. Las Palmas, its largest town, and formerly the capital of the islands, is on the northern coast. It is a well-built and clean town, and abounds, as its name implies, with palm trees. Its climate is more humid than that of Santa Cruz. The Port is three miles from the city, and is reached by a steam tram, which is the nearest approach to a railroad to be seen on the islands. A fine mole extends out into the harbor for convenience in loading and unloading vessels.

The dress of the peasants of Grand Canary consists of a blouse and divided skirt, both of white cotton, no stockings, and clumsy shoes. The shepherds wear, besides their ordinary dress, a large blanket shirred around the neck.

On the islands of both Teneriffe and Grand Canary are the celebrated cave dwellings. These are simply holes in the soft volcanic rock which have been enlarged and made habitable. They are about as large as ordinary rooms, and have a door but no window. Adjacent caves serve to house the animals of the family. The inhabitants of these caves are said to be the worst of thieves, the greatest of liars and the dirtiest of mortals; but there are gradations of vice everywhere, and not all the dwellers are superlative thieves or liars. Those living near to the town of Las Palmas may perhaps merit all that can be said of them in this respect, but the dwellers in Artenaria are industrious tillers of the soil—respectable, and quite as good,

Clothing Salesmen Wanted.

$150.00 PER MONTH AND EXPENSES MADE BY ALL OUR ACTIVE MEN. WE PAY MANY FAR MORE.

WE WANT MEN IN EVERY COUNTY in the United States. If your reference is satisfactory we will start you at once. No experience necessary. No capital required. We furnish a full line of samples, stationery, etc. A tailor's-for-the-trade complete outfit ready for business. NO COMMISSION PLAN. You regulate your profits to suit yourself. No house-to-house canvass. This is not one of the many catchy advertisements for agents, but one of the very few advertisements offering a rare opportunity to secure strictly high-grade employment at BIG WAGES.

We are the LARGEST TAILORS in America. We make to measure over 300,000 suits annually. We occupy entire one of the largest business blocks in Chicago. We refer you to the Corn Exchange National Bank in Chicago, any Express or Railroad Co. in Chicago, any resident of Chicago. Before engaging with us, write to any friend in Chicago and ask them to come and see us, then write you if it is a rare opportunity to secure steady, high-class, big-paying employment. BETTER STILL—come to Chicago yourself and see us before engaging and satisfy yourself regarding every word we say. You can get steady work and big pay. Work in your own county 300 days in the year and you can't make less than $5 every day above all expenses. WE WANT TO ENGAGE YOU to take orders for our Made-to-Order-and-Measure Custom Tailoring, (Men's Suits, Pants and Overcoats). We put you in the way to take orders from almost every man in your county; a business better than a store with a $30,000 stock. You will have no competition.

GENTLEMEN:—In reply to your letter requesting the use of my photograph for advertising purposes, and asking how I am pleased with the work, would say I do not object to you using my photograph as your prices are very low and garments so exact to my measurements that I gladly recommend you. I would add that I have never made less than $80.00 per month since I received your first outfit, and in the best months have made as high as $350.00 per month. Very truly, E. J. DOYLE.

Should you write Mr. Doyle, be sure to enclose a 2c stamp for reply.
We have hundreds of letters similar to Mr. Doyle's.

WE ARE THE LARGEST TAILORS IN AMERICA Of Fine Custom-Made Garments. We buy our cloth direct from the largest European and American Mills. We control the product of several Woolen Mills. We operate the most extensive and economic custom tailoring plant in existence, thus reducing the price of Suits and Overcoats made to order to $5.00 and upward; Pants from $1.50 to $5.00. We show a large line of suits at from $5.00 to $8.00. Prices so low that nearly everyone in your county will be glad to have their suits MADE TO ORDER.

WE FURNISH YOU a large, handsome leather-bound book, containing large cloth samples of our entire line of Suitings, Pantaloonings, etc., a book which COSTS US SEVERAL DOLLARS; also Fine Colored Fashion Plates, Instruction book, Tape Measure, Business Cards, Stationery, Advertising Matter, and your name and address on rubber stamp with pad complete. We also furnish you a Salesman's Net Confidential Price List. The prices are left blank under each description so you can fill in your own selling prices, arranging your profit to suit yourself. As soon as you receive your sample book and general outfit and have read our book of instructions carefully, which teaches you how to take orders, and marked in your selling price, you are ready for business and can begin taking orders from every one. At your low prices, business men, farmers and in fact every one will order their suits made. You can take several orders every day at $1.00 to $5.00 profit on every order. EVERY ONE WILL BE ASTONISHED AT YOUR LOW PRICES.

YOU REQUIRE NO MONEY. Just take the orders and send them to us, and we will make the garments within 5 days and send direct to your customers by express C. O. D., subject to examination and approval, at your selling price, and collect your full selling price, and every week we will send you a check for all your profit. You need collect no money, deliver no goods, simply go on taking orders, adding a liberal profit and we deliver the goods, collect all the money and every week promptly send you in one round check for your full profit for the week. NEARLY ALL OUR GOOD MEN GET A CHECK from us of AT LEAST $40.00 every week in the year.

THE OUTFIT IS FREE. We make no charge for the book and complete outfit, but as each outfit costs US SEVERAL DOLLARS, to protect ourselves against many who would impose on us by sending for the outfit with no intention of working, but merely out of idle curiosity, as a GUARANTEE OF GOOD FAITH on the part of EVERY APPLICANT, we require you to fill out the blank lines below, giving the names of two parties as reference, and further agreeing to pay, merely as a temporary deposit, ONE DOLLAR and express charges for the outfit, when received, if found as represented and really a sure way of making big wages. The $1.00 you agree to pay when outfit is received does not begin to pay the cost to us, but insures us you mean business. WE WILL REFUND YOUR $1.00 as soon as your orders have amounted to $25.00, which amount you can take the first day you work.

Fill out the following lines carefully, sign your name, cut out and send to us, and the outfit will be sent you at once.

AMERICAN WOOLEN MILLS CO., West Side Enterprise Bldg., CHICAGO, ILL.

GENTLEMEN:—Please send me by express, C. O. D., subject to examination, your Sample Book and Complete Salesman's Outfit, as described above. I agree to examine it at the express office and if found exactly as represented and I feel I can make good big wages taking orders for you, I agree to pay the express agent, as a guarantee of good faith, and to show I mean business (merely as a temporary deposit), One Dollar and express charges, with the understanding the One Dollar is to be refunded to me as soon as my sales have amounted to $25.00. If not found as represented and I am not perfectly satisfied I shall not take the outfit or pay one cent.

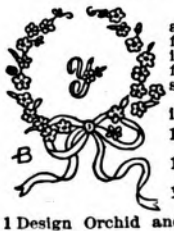
MAGIC SPECTACLES



Are the latest thing out for fun or use. These wonderful eye protectors are gotten up in such a strong manner that they will be found very useful to protect the eyes from the sun or from dirt or any substance that is liable to fly into or strike the eye. There is no glass to break but they are so constructed that you look through them same as through the lens of a camera. The frames are very strongly made of heavy wire and the artistically colored revolving eyes can be made to turn in every conceivable direction, so that the most grotesque and comic expression can be made with them when on the face. By simply turning to right or left, or sideways, the cross-eyed dandy or cute clown can be instantly imitated and bushels of fun be had. Or, as will be seen by the reverse side of the rubber hung centers, they are plain, useful, every day spectacles. They are having a great sale. Will send a pair free with a 6c. three months' subscription to "NATIONAL FARMER." Agents make money with them. Ask for terms when you send for trial pair.

NATIONAL FARMER, Augusta, Maine.

The Victoria Stamping Outfit.

More Artistic Patterns for the Money than were ever Dreamed of.

It has been our special pleasure to select designs for this collection for our artistic friends. Illustration A shows a floral and ribbon design which can be used for almost anything the dainty worker has use for. The flowers are best executed in Kensington stitch, the ribbon may be either simple outline, outline filled in with feather, herring-bone or cat stitch, or, what is still more effective, the long and short stitch. Illustration B is a dainty little design for monograms or what-nots.

Note the sizes of the designs named below and the number of sheets of patterns in this outfit.

BOOKS FOR THE BLIND.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

IN South Boston, connected with the Perkins Institution for the Blind, is a library which differs from any other collection of books in the city, and probably furnishes far more of enjoyment, happiness, and real helpfulness than even the Boston Public Library. This is the Library for the Blind, the volumes of which have been selected with the greatest care to both fill the needs and satisfy the cravings of those for whom they are designed. It is shelved in a long, narrow room, the many windows of which admit floods of air and sunshine. Sunshine—you say—of what use is sunshine to those who cannot see it? Ah! but they can feel it if they cannot see it, and they can feel the effects of the warm, health-giving rays. Most blind people can tell, as quickly as you or I, whether they are in sunlight or shadow, the presence or absence of which affects their sensitive natures very quickly.

The number of books in this library is eleven thousand. Of these, six hundred are in the raised type of the blind, three thousand in ordinary type, while all the rest are duplicates of the first six hundred. They are all in handsome glass cases, and the librarian gives them out to the students at their request, or advises them and furnishes books if the readers desire as she sees the need of her services in this way, for she is interested in and for every one of the young people who use her library. Big books they are; not such, in their size, as you would choose for reading while easy chair or lounge rests your tired body. Blind people know nothing of the luxury of a lazy loll while reading. Books fourteen inches in length by twelve in width, and four and one-half inches in thickness, do not allow their readers to recline while using them, especially as both hands must be employed in mastering their contents. But, as the greater number of blind people have no conception of the convenience of a small, easily handled book, they do not find the large ones wearisome.

The line type as it is called, is used for the greater number of these books. It has the raised letters, embossed on beautiful, thick, white paper, and is very easily read by the sensitive finger-tips of the blind. The printing is, of course, only on one side of the paper.

The books are very carefully selected, and only the best of English and American literature has been prepared for the use of the blind child. Trashy and sensational stories find no place in this library. One of the greatest favorites with young people here is Black Beauty, while Charles Dickens and his many characters are familiar friends. David Copperfield, Paul Dombey, Sam Weller, Little Em'ly, Dick Swiveller, Peggotty, Smike, and hosts of others of Dickens' people hold daily converse here, and have many admirers among the frequenters of this library.

The Holy Bible, which we see people read in the form of one little five by seven inch volume, is here shown in eight large books, each fourteen by twelve inches in size, and the entire Bible occupies four feet of shelf room.

There are to be found here, besides the best of novels and juvenile books, volumes of history, biography, poetry, and books in Greek, Latin and German. In this library, too, are many cases filled with stuffed birds and animals which are used in studying natural history, and it is a most interesting sight to watch the children, each with some specimen on the table before him, carefully studying its size, its shape, its covering and its various characteristics, all done with those slender, delicate, sensitive finger-tips which serve them instead of eyes. The earnest, thoughtful, absorbed faces bent above the specimens show the deep interest of the children in the subject before them, and it is safe to assert that not one of them will ever lose the knowledge thus gained.

BLIND GIRL READING.

Schoolbooks are not included in this library. Their place is in the schoolroom, where these little ones with darkened sight learn to open wide the eyes of their minds and take in the knowledge which shall transform their lives.

Besides the line type books there are some volumes printed in what is known as the Braille System. This type seems to the uninitiated as intricate and puzzling as is stenographical writing to those unacquainted with its mysteries, and perhaps it is so; but to one who has mastered its peculiarities it is of the greatest use and value. It is, indeed, a veritable shorthand to the blind, by which they are enabled to take notes, keep accounts, write, and read when written, their own letters; and, in short, places the blind, to a marvelous degree, in touch with the outside world. I have, myself, seen one of these people engaged in managing a variety store, selling the goods, waiting on customers, taking orders for goods, writing business letters, and keeping his own accounts; and all with the aid of the Braille system.

This machine somewhat resembles, in its form, management and general design, a small typewriter. The Braille System is made up of six little raised dots, from which, in different numbers, arrangements and combinations are made letters, words and signs. It is a most ingenious invention, and of the utmost possible use to those for whom it is intended. All their music is written in this type, and it is simply wonderful to watch the facility with which it is read and rendered from these notes.

In another wing of the same building in which the library is situated is the printing office, where all the work for the library is done, and where the textbooks for the pupils are made. The manager of this is a blind man, although the compositors are, of course, seeing men; and a young lady with perfect sight is also in attendance to help out the blind workers, and wait upon visitors.

Many improvements are being made in these helps for the blind, and well it is that this is so, for the utmost that we can do to ameliorate the condition of our sightless brothers and sisters is but small indeed in comparison with the loss of so great a boon as one's eyes.

THE LATEST POPULAR SONGS.

Cost in single copies at least 40 cents each; but we have a book of one hundred and fifty-six popular songs sentimental, pathetic and comic with words and music complete which we will send to any friend who will send six cents to pay mailing expenses and our illustrated catalogue of latest bargains.

CONDUCTED BY AUNT SARAH.

IN the chafing dish we have a real friend which grows dearer to us as we realize how much may be done with it, and what an atmosphere of hospitality surrounds it, with the sound of something good bubbling and sizzling under its glistening cover. In the evening, what can exceed the coziness of a dining-room with half a dozen congenial spirits, all hovering around the table on which, in all its glory, stands the king of the feast, presided over by the Queen. And the use of it is not limited to the evening supper alone, but may be used at the breakfast table where the eggs may be cooked in any way desired, and so be served hot and done just to a turn; and at the lunch table where hot dishes may be daintily served from it, in place of the cold meats usually served.

Some of the recipes given this month for the chafing dish may be new to our readers; we hope so—but, in any case, they are tried and true, and will bear repeating.

OYSTER RAREBIT.

Clean, parboil and drain one cup of oysters, reserving the liquor. Remove and discard the tough muscle. Melt two tablespoons butter, add one-half pound mild cheese cut in small pieces, one-fourth teaspoon salt and a few grains cayenne. As the cheese melts, add gradually the oyster liquor and two eggs, slightly beaten. As soon as the mixture is smooth, add the soft part of the oysters.

GRILLED SARDINES.

Drain twelve sardines and cook in chafing dish until heated, turning frequently. Place on small pieces of dry toast, and serve with a slice of lemon.

ENGLISH MONKEY.

Soak one cup stale bread crumbs for fifteen minutes in one cup milk. Melt one tablespoon butter, add one-half cup mild cheese cut in small pieces, and when the cheese has melted add the soaked crumbs, one egg slightly beaten, one-half teaspoon salt and a little pepper. Cook three minutes and pour over toasted crackers.

LOBSTER A LA NEWBURG.

Cut two pounds of lobster meat in slices. Melt one-fourth cup butter, add the lobster and cook three minutes. Add one-half teaspoon salt, a little cayenne, a few gratings of nutmeg, one tablespoon sherry wine and one of brandy; cook one minute, and then add one-half cup thin cream and the yolks of two eggs, slightly beaten. Stir until thickened, and serve with toast.

UNION GRILL.

Clean one pint of oysters and drain off all the liquor possible. Put oysters in chafing dish, and as the liquor flows from oysters, remove it with a spoon. Cook oysters until plump, sprinkle with salt and pepper, add two tablespoonfuls butter and serve on crackers.

Now for a few sandwich recipes.

RUSSIAN SANDWICHES.

Spread crackers with thin slices of Neufchatel cheese and cover this with finely chopped olives, moistened with mayonnaise dressing. Place another cracker on this and press together.

NUT AND CHEESE SANDWICHES.

Mix equal parts of grated cheese and chopped walnut meat, and season with salt and cayenne; spread on bread cut in fancy shapes.

BROWN BREAD AND PEANUTS.

Bake the bread in one-pound baking powder boxes, and then the slices are of the right size for sandwiches. Spread and cut slices and between put layers of finely chopped peanuts seasoned with salt; or use a mixture of the nut meat and cheese, grated. Or, flake a cup of cold boiled salmon and mix it to a paste with one tablespoon mayonnaise dressing; spread on one slice, and press another slice onto it.

FIG SANDWICHES.

Use the ripe figs that come in cans. Drain them from the syrup, and then mash them to a paste, and spread over the buttered side of a slice of bread; lay another slice on top, press together and then trim off the crusts, and, if the slices are large, cut into triangles or squares, or into oblong pieces.

DATES AND NUTS.

Remove stones and break up dates with a fork; take half as much in bulk of pecans chopped finely and mix with the dates, moistening with creamed butter. Add a little salt and spread between thin slices of bread.

The presence of the children at the table with the grown up members of the family is not always desirable—and when there is a nurse, attendant or governess who has charge of the children, there should be a separate room and table for them—for the reason, principally that the proper food for children is not, usually, that which is eaten by the father and mother, and also because the older people are apt to eat hastily, and naturally the children will acquire the same habit—will take too large mouthfuls and swallow them when not properly masticated. One result will be illness—and another will be the acquisition of an undesirable habit which it will be hard to break up.

Children are inclined to eat too fast, and require careful and constant watching to avoid this. Either let the children be served first, and the mother carefully watch and help them and then removed from the dining-room, or else have someone in attendance in an entirely separate room, who will give them her undivided attention.

Bread and milk tables are among the new furnishings for the nursery. They come in oak, and consist of a child's low table with two seats on opposite sides, and the seats and table are fastened together at the bottom by a rail. This arrangement prevents the spilling of the milk into the children's laps—as the chairs bring the child close up to the table.

WE ARE Searching for Sufferers

YOU MAY NOT FEEL SICK

BUT ALL HANDS POINT TO THE FACT YOU ARE NOT WELL AND WHETHER YOU BE MAN OR WOMAN YOU WILL SOON TAKE ON THIS AGONIZED LOOK.

WE CAN HELP YOU.

YOU DON'T NEED MEDICINE.

But you say you feel generally miserable or suffer with a thousand and one indescribable bad feelings, both mental and physical? Among them low spirits, nervousness, weariness, lifelessness, weakness, dizziness, feelings of fullness or bloating after eating, or sense of "goneness" or emptiness of stomach in morning, flesh soft and lacking firmness, headache, blurring of eyesight, specks floating before the eyes, nervous irritability, poor memory, chilliness, alternating with hot flushes, lassitude, throbbing, gurgling, or rumbling sensations in bowels, with heat and nipping pains occasionally, palpitation of heart, short breath on exertion, slow circulation of blood. Don't your hands and feet become cold and clammy, do you HAWK AND SPIT and expectorate greenish colored matter? IS your urine scanty or high colored and does it deposit a sediment after standing? You have pain and oppression in chest and back, pain around the loins, aching and weariness of the lower limbs, drowsiness after meals, but nervous wakefulness at night, languor in the morning and a constant feeling of dread as if something awful was about to happen.

There Is Help for You. You Can Yet Be Happy.

I have an appliance. The only way to introduce it is to let you try it FREE. You will tell others if it helps you. It is perfectly harmless. Send us your name we are looking for real sufferers and knowing it will do you good you can cure yourself without trouble or expense. This article is perfectly safe and reliable, can be worn day and night, all of the time or part of the time and in any place or spot on the body that feels sick or shows pain—it is most marvelous acting and is the greatest God-send you ever heard of. After you use it and you feel its power you will say $25 would not have prevented me from sending for it. It acts just as well on man or woman.

THE ONLY CONDITIONS.

We send one all charges paid. It is Medical and we are obliged to put on Revenue stamps. Therefore as we furnish them entirely free we simply ask you to send us TEN CENTS for mailing, etc. We trust to your honor to tell others about the cure and know many will be sold thereby. We do not ask you to send any more money unless you want others to sell at a profit after you try it. Address, G. O. COMPANY, Box 654, Augusta, Maine.

PRIZES FOR BRIGHT PEOPLE.

The picture at the left represents one of the Naval Heroes in the Battle of Santiago. The Hero has many friends and more admirers, and if you study the picture carefully the faces of many of them can be found. See if you can name the Hero and find his friends. Find as many as you can, and mark them by tracing with pen or pencil the outline of each face, or some mark that will make your answer plain and neat. Cut out the picture and mail with your full name and address to the Problem Department of THE CHICAGO HOUSEHOLD GUEST.

SEND NO MONEY

Do not enclose any money with your answer, but mail at once. If four or more are marked correctly, you will be entitled to a Prize, as hereinafter set forth. To the person or persons finding and marking correctly all the faces hidden in the picture, we will give

$100.00

To the nearest correct, we will give $25.00; to the second nearest correct, a Gold Watch; to the third nearest correct, a Sewing Machine, and to all others who have found and marked correctly at least four faces we will give a handsome Prize, as hereinafter set forth. If two or more are tied for any of the large prizes, the prize, or its equivalent in cash, will be divided equally. Make your answer neat and plain, and be sure to give your full and correct address. To give assurance to those living at a distance that the contest will be fair and impartial, we will not allow anyone living in Chicago or its suburbs to take part in it. As our object in offering all these prizes is to call special attention to and advertise our 20-page Family Magazine and Story Paper, those who win prizes will be required to get five of their friends to subscribe. Try it and see if you are one of the "Bright People." You may win the $100. When answering, be sure and say whether you are at present a subscriber or not. Answer to-day. Address

$5.00 Worth of Dressmaking Models FREE.

I am introducing an entirely new system of Model Dressmaking and will send any lady interested a complete set of models free together with full instructions in the new art. With the simple A B C directions which I send any girl or woman can for nothing learn to cut, fit and make garments with these models in a few minutes and hours what would take weeks and months, and money to accomplish by any other method. This instructor on the Model plan is the latest, most simple and most reliable tailor system of dress cutting ever invented. Only Three Measurements required. Anyone can make them without misfits or mistakes of any kind. No time or materials wasted. No worry, no expense, no disappointments. A bad fit impossible. A perfect fit guaranteed even to a round-shouldered, hollow-chested, large-hipped unfortunate. In fact, it fits any figure. Thoroughly up-to-date in every way. Even if you have never made a garment you can follow any fashion plate you fancy and have the finest fitted dress, which your friends will declare was made by the most stylish experienced dressmaker if you use these models. If you are already a dressmaker and have a dozen other systems on hand don't fail to send for this Easy Model Method System. It will save experienced persons much time and money as well as beginners. This system offers young people a great opportunity for money making. Send at once for the System and get our wonderful terms. It costs you nothing to get it and you can return it without any extra expense after looking it over fifteen minutes if you do not care to enter our money-making plan.

BIG FREE OFFER.

These models are gotten up to sell for $5.00 per set, but in order to introduce them quickly we will send one set of models to you free, all charges paid, so it won't cost you a cent to examine into the plan. The first idea was to send the models on receipt of one dollar, but many do not like to risk even one dollar without seeing the article even if sure of getting $5.00 worth—so it was decided to trust to the honesty of the sisters to either return the models or the small amount in cash required and rely on the good words to be spoken to advertise it to others. We thus give all who see this notice a chance to inspect the great system free of charge for the next thirty days, and an offer goes with the models whereby you can secure it entirely free and make much money and secure valuable premiums talking it up and introducing to others. Don't wait, act quick before our first lot is exhausted, send full name and complete address to socially and morally, as their neighbors. Some of these cave homes, notably those of the agricultural people, are fairly well furnished, with tables, chairs, beds and dishes, and the food is various and well cooked. The women do all the work in the fields except the plowing.

"COMFORT'S" MODEL SYSTEM, Augusta, Maine.

THE CANARY ISLANDS.

Another class of cave dwellers are the potters, who make all the earthenware used on the islands. These live principally at Atalaya, on Grand Canary. They have lived here for generations, their caves having been handed down from father to son. They are very poor and ignorant, and perhaps a little rough, and they will steal if they are given a chance. They dress in cotton, originally white, but now both ragged and exceedingly dirty, as it seldom comes in contact with soap and water; but when we consider the lack of water in these cave dwellings we cease to wonder at the dirt.

The pottery is made by the women, the men doing their part by bringing the clay and the wood for the firing. When ready for work the woman is seated cross-legged on the ground, a flat stone about eighteen inches square in front of her, a lump of gray earth on one side, and an earthenware basin of water on the other. Taking a lump of clay in her hand she dampens it, rapidly rolls it into a ball, then placing it on the stone, she presses it out into a basin shape, moving it round to preserve the circular form. With more of the dampened clay she gradually increases its height, keeping the left hand always within the basin. A mouth is formed, a handle added, and in perhaps ten minutes the dish is ready to be set in the sun to dry. If adornment is wanted lines are drawn on the outside with a particular kind of smooth stone. There is no great beauty to civilized, educated eyes in these lines of ornamentation, but it is curious to observe that they are the same as those made by the old Guanches on their pottery, thus showing how little these people have changed their manners and customs. The ovens in which the pottery is baked are dome-shaped, built of stone, filled in with mud.

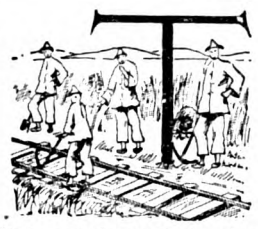
The other islands in this group—Palma, Lanzarote, Graciose, Fuerteventura and Hierro, have no large cities or towns, and are not so well known as the first two. All are inhabited and somewhat cultivated, and the products are exported to the other islands. Social intercourse between the islands is very slight. Although the same nationality and speaking the same language the inhabitants of the various islands differ decidedly in habits, food and dress, and have, besides, as strong a love for their own particular island as we of the United States have for our country. As an instance of the attachment of the islanders to their own home, however poor it may be, we have only to observe the behavior of the people living in the island of Hierro. This island has neither springs, wells, lakes nor rivers, and is, in consequence, except in the rainy season, an arid desert. The people are poor, lazy and shiftless, and will not take the trouble to save water for a time of need. So they are forced to betake themselves, during the dry season, to the neighboring islands, and depend on the charity of others for food and shelter as long as the drought continues. But the moment they can safely do so they return to their barren little island and there remain until again driven off by a water famine. Fortunately for these improvident people, the dwellers on the other islands have a far larger and wider patriotism than they, always ready and willing to share their homes and food with their needy but lazy fellow-countrymen. Hence the pauper exists, and herein lies a lesson for all of us who will heed it on the evils of indiscriminate giving to the poor instead of teaching them how to do for themselves.

One of the greatest curiosities of the Canary Islands is the Dragon Tree, which is found nowhere else in the world with the exception of the northern part of Africa. It is a tree of exceedingly slow growth, living sometimes for thousands of years. Its stiff and ungainly appearance is owing in part to the branches, which are entirely bare of leaves except at the very tips where there is a tuft of long, narrow, sword-like leaves, each ending in a sharp point. Its sap is blood red and when the tree is wounded the sap oozes slowly out like the blood from a wound in human flesh. In extreme old age glandular warts form upon the tree, from three to ten inches in size. This tree never branches until after it has blossomed, and the blossoming does not take place earlier than the fifteenth year of its life. After putting out branches it never increases in height, but spreads in circumference from year to year. The name Dragon Tree was given to it by one of the old Guanches, who believed that upon their islands was situated the famous Garden of the Hesperides, and that this tree guarded with its leaves the entrance to the garden, and protected from marauders the Tree of Golden Apples which grew in the garden.

Aloes are here used for hedges along the sides of the roads. The leaves of this plant are four or five inches in length, while the blossom-stalk shoots upward, sometimes for twenty feet before developing its flowers. The leaves of this plant are used as food for goats, and also by the poorer classes as thatching for their houses. Of the fibre are made the native baskets and also ropes of various kinds.

Cochineal insects, which have long been one of the staple products of these islands, are fed upon the leaves of the prickly pear, great fields of which may be seen on the lowlands near the coast. The larvæ are placed carefully upon the leaves of the plant, where they develop and grow, moving very little during their lives from the spot where they are first placed. During the rainy season the plants are tied up in cotton rags to prevent the rain from washing off the insects; sometimes a whole bush is enveloped in a rag, as shown in the initial illustration, while in other places each leaf or bunch of leaves is separately wrapped. A field of prickly pear thus enveloped is a very odd sight and the labor involved in thus caring for the insects must be very tedious and wearisome.

Upon attaining their maturity, or, as the natives say, when they become rine, the insects are carefully picked off into baskets and dried in the sun. Then they are put into a sheet, together with a quantity of fine black sand, and shaken to and fro for a long time to give them a polish. The trade in cochineal has very sensibly diminished since the discovery of analyne dyes, but no other dye produces so brilliant a red as that derived from the cochineal insects.



The oranges of the Canary Islands have always been considered fine, but the best ones, a small, delicate fruit, are exceedingly perishable, lasting only two or three days after being gathered, and for this reason are never shipped for market. Shipmasters who have eaten them there, and who have also had opportunities for extensive sampling of the fruit elsewhere, say that they are by far the finest oranges in the world.

Owing to the volcanic origin of these islands there is very little animal life here except what has been introduced from other lands, consequently neither ferocious beasts nor poisonous snakes are anywhere to be met with.

It is now scarcely twenty-five years since these islands became known to travelers and tourists; but so fascinating are they with their fine climate, their wild scenery and their quaint people and customs that they are fast becoming one of the world's popular resorts, and, in consequence, are rapidly losing the ancient ways of living that now make so much of their charm.

Railroads in China.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

THERE are in all more than 400,000 miles of railroads in the world, and of this total mileage nearly 175,000 miles belong to the United States, and 150,000 miles to Europe. Of the remaining 75,000 miles only 80 miles belong to China, and even this short railroad required years of negotiation, deliberation, destruction and reconstruction to bring into existence. All the world knows of the opposition experienced in China by any innovation upon its customs or any novelty or improvement attempted to better its condition or to further its interests or its communication with the outside world. The first railroad line in China was started more than twenty years ago, and was intended to connect the city of Shanghai with Wusung. After it had run successfully for a year the Chinese Government bought it, and soon after the track was torn up and the materials were shipped out of the country. That was the end of that road. A second small road was built and shared the same fate, and then for a long time no further attempt was made at railroad building. Then the present road of eighty miles in length was started to run between the cities of T'ien-Tsin and Kai-Ping, under the supervision and advocacy of Li Hung Chang, the venerable Representative from China who recently visited in our country. He it is who is at the head of all the improvements which are permitted in China, and it is largely for the purpose of studying the advances made in foreign countries and applying the knowledge thus gained to the betterment of his own that this distinguished man has been making a tour of the civilized world. He has already started an extension of this small line of railroad to form a trunk line to connect the cities of T'ien-Tsin and Pekin. This trunk line is, as was just said, started, but at the rate that Chinese enterprises usually move it may be twenty years before it is finished. The people of China object to any alliances or improvement of any description which tend to open up either the ports or the cities of China to outsiders, and experienced observers of Chinese character and Chinese customs and prejudices declare that there will be no work done on the railroad unless Li Hung Chang is on the spot to superintend and force the work, and that perhaps even his presence will not prevent the stoppage of work upon the road for several years to come, if, indeed, it is ever finished.

FREE TO MEN

The Private Formula of the Noted Physician, Dr. L. W. Knapp, Sent Free to Every Man who Writes for it.

Quickly Restores Weakened Mankind to Strength & Vigor.

L. W. KNAPP, M. D.

Thousands of men will welcome the news that a most successful remedy has been found which will quickly cure them of any form of nervous debility, lost manhood, lack of vigor, relieve them of all the doubt and uncertainty which such men are peculiarly liable to, and restores the organs to natural strength and vigor of youth. As it costs nothing to get this wonderful formula it would seem that any man, suffering from any form of nervous debility, ought to be deeply interested in such a remedy, without which they continue to live an existence of untold misery. The remedy in question was the result of many years' research as to what combination of medicine would be most effective in restoring to men the strength they need. Send your name and address to Dr. L. W. Knapp, 1150 Hull Building, Detroit, Mich., stating that you are not writing out of idle curiosity, but wish to make use of the prescription by giving the remedy a trial, will be answered promptly and without evidence as to where information came from.

The Dr's object of distributing this information free is to make men better acquainted with the remedies that exert an influence upon debilitated nerves and wasted vigor. Each different drug is thoroughly explained and the sufferer will thus know what he should use in his particular case in order to get the desired results. Write to-day. There is no doubt about the offer being genuine.

PIMPLES removed in 4 days, blackheads in 6 days. Perfectly harmless. Never fails. Send 10 cts. silver.

"THAT NOBLE ANIMAL, THE HORSE." YOU WANT IT.

THE GREATEST and BEST BOOK EVER WRITTEN on HORSES.

A Gold Mine of Interest and Information by Which You Save Dollars.

Prof. Oscar Gleason, the greatest horse owner, trainer and breaker that ever lived in America has at last consented to write a book on the Horse. We have made arrangement to furnish copies of this valuable work to all lovers of horses, and we call your attention to the great value of this unparalleled work which should be in every home and stable in the land. Gleason's Horse Book is a large handsomely bound book of over 400 pages, printed on pure white paper in large, clear type, bound in colored covers and richly and elegantly illustrated with 186 full plates and illustrations drawn by special artists. It is the most complete horse book ever published, produced under the direction of the United States Government Veterinary Surgeon. In this book Prof. Gleason has given to the world for the first time his wonderful methods of training and treating horses. It contains chapters on History, Education, Teaching Tricks, How to Buy, Feeding, Breeding, Breaking and Taming, How to Detect Unsoundness, Cure, Complete Instructions in Proper Horse shoeing and one Invaluable Study of the Diseases and Treatment of the animal. This part alone is worth many times the value of the book and will save horse owners hundreds of dollars every year. It is a colossal compendium of facts every person ought to know who is in any way interested in horses. Nothing left out. Clear, Concise and Captivating. Order one to-day and you will never regret it: it is a whole Library on Horses in itself. Gleason's Horse Book is found in the libraries of the wealthy and has always been sold as high as $3.00 a volume until now.

SEE HOW TO GET IT. To introduce our monthly paper into homes where an interest is taken in horses we will send a copy of Prof. Gleason's Horse Book, described above, to every person who will send thirty-three cents to pay postal shipping charges and for a trial six months' subscription to our paper. Great Club Premium. If you will get up a club of only two yearly scribers to this paper at the special trial subscription price of 25 cents each we will send you the book as a free premium.

TALKS WITH GIRLS.

Well, cousins all, did you have a Happy New Year's day, and is its sunshine and cheer still making the world brighter for you? Let us hope so, and let us hope that for all the months of this New Year it will be none the less, but more. And how many of you how many times so far have written the date 1898 instead of 1899? Now let us see who comes first on the list with a question to be answered.

Well, taking the first one in the pile of letters before me, I find that it comes from away down in Louisiana where the sugar and the sunshine grow and the biting frosts that we have here in the North never come to cover the world in white. It is from "Inquisitive" and she asks about the significance of the turn-down corners of notes. Really there isn't any. The chief purpose of turning down a corner is to act as a seal to keep it closed, and the corner which best answers this purpose is the one to turn down. (2) A very appropriate thing for a gentleman to say when he offers his arm to a lady is: "Will you take my arm?" That ought to convey the idea very clearly. There is no fixed rule for such civilities. He might say any one of a dozen things conveying the same idea.

Goosy, Marion, Ia.—Admiral Dewey is a widower and he is not an old man. But don't set your cap for him, because it will be effort wasted, I'm pretty sure. (2) Speaking of your sweetheart, my advice to you is not to marry a man ten years younger than yourself. Such marriages are sometimes quite happy, but it isn't advisable to take the risk.

Evedne Brooke, Atwater, Minn.—I should say it was not altogether the proper thing for girls to put on boys' clothes and go out on the street at Halloween, though I have heard of nice girls doing it. Only a very bold and thoughtless girl will engage in that kind of sport, and it isn't really nice. (2) A sixteen year old girl, five feet six inches tall, should wear her gowns below her shoe tops.

Sixteen, Seventeen, and Twenty-five, Flat Hill, S. C.—A young man may call three times a week, but he will not unless he has serious intentions. (2) A young lady may ask a young man for his photograph, whether he has hers or not, but not unless they are long-time friends. The same applies to giving presents. (3) The question of the handsomeness of a man should have very little to do with a decision for your favor. Unless it be against him. As a rule the poorest husband in the world is one of these "real handsome" men. They are generally vain and selfish and other women make fools of them. Don't pick out the homeliest man you can find, but if you have to take that kind or the handsomest, take the homeliest one every time. (4) Yes, a sixteen year old girl may wear her hair in a knot. It is more becoming if worn low on the back of the head. (5) A young lady with black hair should marry a gentleman with light hair if she loves him and he asks her to. As for the physiology of it, there isn't much in that, except what you read in novels about the "affinity of contrast." (6) A young lady of twenty-five is not too young to marry a man of forty. A quiet wedding is preferable to much display.

Anxious, Vandalia, Mich:—Why should a young man have any more right to kiss a girl when sleigh riding than at any other time?

Two Girls, Summersville, W. Va.—Twelve year old girls should wear their dresses as long as their mothers say they should. (2) As for beaus, twelve year old girls should wait ten years before thinking of such things.

Rosebud, Volta, Cal.—It is not improper for a young man and young lady to exchange rings, but it is just as well not to, unless they are very good friends. (2) They should not become engaged until they know each other very well. It might take three weeks and it might take three years. Let us compromise and say a year. Short engagements are better than long ones. Say three to six months, if the previous acquaintance has been a year or less. (3) It is not right for a young man to flirt with girls when he is engaged or when he is not. It is not only not right when he is engaged, but it is mean and dishonest.

Polly and Bessie, Parker's Landing, Pa.—A sixteen year old girl ought to be so busy with her school books that she would not have time to see a young man who called on her twice a week. He might take her to the theater on Saturday nights if her parents had no objections, and the young man was well known. (2) I don't know about a "grass widower" calling on a girl of eighteen. He may be a very nice man and unfortunate rather than to blame because he is a "grass widower," still, a girl of eighteen had better wait, say four years. She will know more then. And in the meantime don't accept the man as an escort either to entertainments or elsewhere. If he is not divorced and perfectly free, have absolutely nothing to do with him if you think at all of yourself.

L. C., Vinton, La.—For mercantile information such as you seek write to President King, Merchants' Association, New York City, asking for a list of firms. You can get information from New Orleans, Atlanta, Louisville, or Cincinnati, by writing to the Secretary of the Chamber of Commerce.

Fanny Power, Shanesville, W. Va.—It is not customary to wear other jewelry than mourning jewelry when in mourning, which, of course, is made of various black materials. A sixteen year old girl should not wear mourning at all.

Helen and Ethel are two fifteen year old girls of Plattsburg, Mo., who write to say that they are engaged to marry two lads of eighteen and nineteen and as their mothers object, they want to know what my advice is. It is simple enough; all four of them ought to be thoroughly spanked, and Helen and Ethel sent to school until they learn the right way to spell circumstance which is not "surcumstance," even if they have to stay there forty years. My, my, but some girls are too silly for any use.

Mattie Tipton, Irvine, Ky.—The reason you see short stories published over and over again is that they are free property and editors keep them going, as they may happen to need something of that sort. You will not find the same story in the same paper more than once, I think. Sometimes you may see the same story in two or three or more papers at once, but they are far apart and such stories are sold by syndicate to several papers with that understanding. (2) Having sold a manuscript to any publisher who copyrights it, you sell also the right to use it again. It is no longer your property, even when the copyright expires, after fourteen years. (3) If you send a poem to a paper and after it is returned to you it appears in that paper, it has been stolen. That is all there is to that. (4) I don't know anything about the party you ask about. As a general proposition it is just as safe not to give up any money until you know what you are going to get for it. (5) There isn't any "best poetess" in America or in the world at present, though there are several poetesses who write very good poetry.

Two Cousins, Big Rapids, Mich.—Yes, it is proper to correspond with one young man when "keeping company" with another, but not if you are engaged to the other. (2) It is a lady's place to pay her own hotel bill.

Rose, Otho, Ky.—A fourteen year old girl should wear her dresses to her shoe-tops, and she should not go driving with a gentleman unless it is her father or some other near relative.

Margie, Applegarth, Md.—Girls of seventeen have had beaus and even husbands, but it is not a custom to be commended. Wait till you are past twenty. (2) Make the young men keep their distance. Every liberty you permit makes the man have that much less respect for you, and he is telling you a lie if he says it does not. That is to say if the man is decent. If he isn't, you should have nothing to do with him. (3) Use your own judgment and taste in making a present to your "beau," but let it be inexpensive. Give him some little thing for personal use.

There, dears, that is the last one, and while some of them have been a little silly and too much about beaus, they are generally very much like girls, and goodness knows I'd rather see you silly girls than foolish women, for a silly girl can be cured if taken in time. Now, by-by for a month and may the good Lord watch over you until we meet again.

SENT FREE TO MEN

A Discovery for Lost Manhood Sent Free to Every Sufferer Who Will Write for It.

G. B. Wright Was Restored to Health and Makes a Generous Offer.

George B. Wright, a merchant and well-known citizen of Marshall, Mich., who was permanently cured of lost manhood and nervous debility after declining health for years, offers to send the medical prescription that effected the cure to every reader of COMFORT who is suffering to-day as he suffered. All who will drop him a letter asking for a copy of the prescription will receive it by return mail free of charge. As certain as a wound leaves a scar and as sure as effect follows cause, do men live to repent their follies and indiscretions in weakness and suffering. The tortured sufferer may bear no telltale marks of ruin upon his face to betray his lost manhood. He goes to his grave a human wreck, and never tells of his sufferings for fear of shame. Such mental anguish at times drives him to the verge of despair, and he is easy prey for those vultures in human form, quack doctors, who hold out alluring hopes of cure only to disappoint, and after robbing him of his money plunge him into absolute despair.

No one can appreciate these horrors of lost manhood except he has suffered them. No one can help such sufferers except he knows a cure and has himself been restored to full manhood. A notable cure of lost manhood in an extreme case was affected in the person of George B. Wright, a music dealer and well-known citizen of Marshall, Mich. Mr. Wright for years suffered the agony of lost vital power. He saw his physical powers go from him as the result of insidious disease until he was reduced to a condition of senility, and the best doctors in the country gave him up to die.

Like many others, he tried the various remedies offered by specialists for the treatment of weaknesses peculiar to men, and it was this experience that drove him to a little study and research for his own benefit.

He asserts that his ten years' suffering, both mentally and physically, was turned to unbounded joy in a single night through a rare combination of medicines that literally made him young again. It is the prescription of this discovery that his enthusiasm leads him to offer free to any man, young or old, who feels that his animation or the fire of ambition has left him and needs something that will not only brace him up and enable him to be prepared for any undertaking which may present itself, but will restore the parts to their original size and vigor.

There is no question but what in his individual case the results were just as described, and it seems quite probable that any man who believes himself to be weak may profit by sending for this free prescription. Many people wonder how he can afford to send this prescription free, but it costs him but little to do so and he feels a philanthropic interest in giving weak men an opportunity to cure themselves.

A request to G. B. Wright, music dealer, box 1210, Marshall, Mich., for his free prescription, will be promptly and privately complied with by return mail.

AGAIN IN ITS GRASP.

Tightening its toils, we mean that sneezing, coughing, back-aching malady—that creeps stealthily on its victim, bears him down for a time and when confident of recovery takes him from our midst—epidemic, influenza or La Grippe.

In this land, as in others, it sneered at the attempts of our scientists and medics to arrest its terrible course.

In a twinkling, in '91, old, middle aged and young were seized as victims and struggling in its grasp.

Fully 50 per cent. were destined never to recover. Many families were extinguished entire. Many were torn apart and the few remaining members left with the memories of a once happy home.

Thousands were brought to a bed of suffering for the remainder of their life. Thousands more were left subjects for the mad house.

The heroic endeavors of the medical profession saved many of those who were stricken with La Grippe, but in most of those cases the saving of life was but to prolong the misery, for it is well known that wherever the monster sets its seal, it is sure to leave unfavorable results, but in the past record of the distemper it has been proven that that little plain, simple tablet called OXIEN, had a large sized mission to perform in this one particular, and how well it did its duty is attested by the numerous letters received from our grateful friends. OXIEN probably did more to ward off La Grippe, lessen the suffering, and effect a complete cure than any or all of the advertised remedies.

The dreaded disease takes a ready hold of the system unprepared to withstand its ravages and it is a duty you all owe to your friends and relatives, to be fortified upon the arrival of the first symptoms. How shall we do this?

Keep a supply of the food on hand. When you feel a slight cold coming on, look out, it is the warning note. The sneezing, hacking and coughing is the messenger of warning sent you. Commence taking the tablets as directed and you will note with pleasure the results. No great bottle of medicine to dose from. A supply for the day can be carried in the vest pocket. The busy man's companion and friend. Pleasant, Effective, Inexpensive.

Do not wait until La Grippe has you in bed or on the way to the grave, for the Giant Oxie Co., Augusta, Maine, will send you without charge a sample package if you apply this month, together with new special directions so you can use it as a hot beverage.

CONDUCTED BY REGULUS.

THE Sun's entrance into Aries or the Vernal Equinox is always an important epoch. It marks the beginning of a new Astronomical year and from the condition of the heavens at that moment, Astrologers are wont to judge of the nature of events to happen in the world in the coming twelve months. This year the Sun "crosses the line" at about thirty-eight minutes past two in the afternoon of the 20th day of March, according to mean time at Washington, the seat of government of our country. The horoscope of the year erected to that time shows the fixed sign Leo on the Ascending horizon or Ascendant and Taurus on the Midheaven. The Sun rules the scheme and the year and will be found to be very close to the cusp of the 9th house; while Venus, the ruler of the 10th house, is strong upon the 7th angle of the figure. The moon has just passed the square of Mercury and is applying to the conjunction with Mars on the cusp of the 12th house; Mercury in the 9th house in good aspect with Venus ruler of the 10th house is applying to a square with Mars though a benevolent aspect to Saturn in the 5th. Herschel is in the 4th house near the cusp of the 5th, while Jupiter, the great benefic, is angular and strong, being on the cusp of the 4th house.

The Sun passing from the untoward aspect of the great malefic Saturn and applying to the better rays of the great bodies as well as the lesser benefic, ruler of the 10th house, is indicative of an improved condition of the country and of monetary and commercial circles generally. As the days lengthen we shall seem to emerge from many of the clouds that have surrounded us. Money will become more easy and a better equilibrium be established in the mercantile world in the coming months, but not until some failures of magnitude have occurred and some excitement of a temporary character has been experienced in the money markets of the country around the first fifteen days in April. There will be much discussion in Congress over the matter of the nation's finances and expenditures for war purposes or for expatriation of prisoners. Religious questions appear to cause considerable excitement, and developments in ecclesiastical affairs create grave anxieties in orthodox minds.

The year will be an unusually busy one for artists, scientists, literary men and churchmen and for new inventions and the spread of education. There will be a marked increase of foreign travel and very active discussions in Congress over foreign trade and the commercial powers of the nation. There will be much annoyance if not serious embroilments over questions of trade in trans-Pacific countries.

The affliction by Mars indicates a season of disorder among the people in some of our south-eastern or extreme western possessions over local affairs or in reference to prisoners or criminals, where some unusual mortality results from bad fevers or eruptive diseases among the soldiery; and it is apprehended that we shall hear of a bad marine disaster in south-eastern waters as well as an unusually large number of accidents or violent storms upon the waters. Mars also gives indications of some peculiar epidemic disease affecting cattle and horses injuriously.

The indications as a whole are very favorable for the advancement of the best interests of the country. The great benefic on the 4th is very promising for our crops and the prosperity of the farming communities, also mining industries and real estate improvements. Some excitement is probable in the spring weeks from threatened strikes among the manufacturing classes, notably in the month of April. Let persons in charge of prisons have care that they are not surprised by dangerous outbreaks or insubordination in the first part of April.

CELESTIAL CALENDAR FOR MARCH, 1899.

MARCH 1—Wednesday. This month opens with generally good conditions for conduct of business, though baffling circumstances attend the prosecution of business relating to fancy and ornamental goods, musical merchandise, and also the pursuit of the fine arts; beware of making any matrimonial engagement at this time nor expect much enjoyment from the pursuit of pleasure or amusements.

2—Thursday. One of the most excellent days of the month. REGULUS advises all of his friends to take advantage of the bright and cheering influences of this day to enter with zeal on their various pursuits in life; buy goods for trade, engage in new enterprises, speculate if thy nativity be fairly favorable; deal with judges, counsellors, ecclesiastics and traders in wool and woolens; prosecute mathematical and scientific studies; deal with the intellectual classes, booksellers, publishers and printers; publish literary productions and do all important correspondence; let all persons of an ingenious or inventive turn of mind use the influences of this day for their most important steps; for inaugurating principal moves, experimenting with apparatus; making applications for patents, or dealing in stocks or properties concerning such things or any kind of chemical or mechanical contrivances, providing thy nativity is in harmony at this time and is not radically opposed to such moves.

3—Friday. Continue thine efforts of yesterday with increased vigor on this day; specially urge the mechanical pursuits, deal in machinery, electrical apparatus, cutlery, fire-arms, hardware, musical merchandise, artistic and decorative wares, household adornments, fancy goods and wearing apparel; consult thy dentist, tailor, milliner and dress-maker. The day is a superior one and REGULUS commends it for beginnings in nearly all the important enterprises, particularly in the elegant and artistic walks. It is favorable for making the matrimonial engagements, leading thy fair one to the altar, engaging in dramatic enterprises and pursuing the fine arts in any direction.

4—Saturday. Be not rash in word or act during the first half of this day; travel as little as possible and do thou seek no advantage at the hands of officers of state, merchants, travelers, teachers, or ingenious persons in charge of great public works.

5—Sunday. Seek nothing but rest and quiet during all of this day. It is not favorable as a birthday anniversary and all persons claiming it or who were born about the 11th of March, June, September, or December of past years, should be careful of serious pecuniary losses, straitened conditions of finances, or impairments of health for several weeks to come; to many of these is due the caution that they shall be very guarded in their acts and so cautious in their associations as not to debase themselves or their good name and honor among their fellow men; let all such be on the alert against deceit or being misled into holding evil communications, for there is extreme danger that many of these will in the passing months of their life stoop to doing acts that not only besmirch the mind or reflect discredit upon the reputation but injure their best interests in life; let them bear patiently the ills they have rather than by changing fly to evils they know not of; annoying disappointments in their affairs may reasonably be expected for a season, so they will need to practice patience and still be persevering in their honorable efforts for their welfare. Ladies so born should beware of forming matrimonial engagements in these passing weeks and be especially careful of new associations and of making new acquaintances.

6—Monday. A very favorable day for the vigorous prosecution of general business, being particularly fortunate in the afternoon hours for buying goods for trade and for attention to matters of finance and the adjustment of accounts and evidences of money indebtedness.

7—Tuesday. The middle part of this day bids thee have patience under any species of excitement; avoiding disputes and contention of any kind. Give preference to the afternoon and evening for all mental labor of consequence and for dealings with persons in the literary pursuits; notwithstanding the fact that the literary pursuits are for a few days experiencing unusual embarrassments or persons in the literary walks of life are meeting more misfortunes than usual. It is apprehended that death will come here to some one or more of the literati of prominence in the world.

8—Wednesday. This day should be improved for principal ventures in music, art and all the polite professions, also for antiquarian researches and dealings with eccentric persons and inventors; be watchful of the purse in the late hours when no investment should be made for profit.

9—Thursday. Quite a favorable day for the agricultural classes also for engagements with landlords and in matters connected with houses and lands; deal with plumbers and the laboring classes genera ly; buy materials for building or construction, coal, wood, lumber and agricultural products.

10—Friday. Not a promising day; cautioning avoidance of disputes and domestic infelicities especially in nativities susceptible in this respect; seek no favor from railroad officials nor from persons high in public office.

11—Saturday. Lose no time in the first two-thirds of this day but urge thine affairs of all kinds to the utmost, giving preference to the morning hours for thy principal ventures in the mechanical pursuits; deal with manufacturers, surgeons, cutlers, tanners, chemists and druggists when also trade in cattle, metals and machinery. The latter part of the day is less to be depended upon and matters of importance are best postponed. Ventures of all kinds are likely to meet with some embarrassment or hindrance to progress in the last hours of the day; beware of making any money investment at such time if you would gain profit or advantage therefrom.

12—Sunday. This day is unusually benevolent, particularly inviting communion with the poet, musician, and artist, and giving special appreciation of the beautiful in religion, nature and art.

13—Monday. A day of increased mental excitement; the mind is likely to be rash and quarrels are easily provoked; keep a civil tongue, be slow to take offense, avoid all controversy, be not careless with fire, be deliberate in judgment and particularly avoid rashness or impulsiveness in business ventures; use the evening hours for negotiations pertaining to landed property, mines, coal, or lumber.

14—Tuesday. Conflicting influences prevail on this day and more than ordinary circumspection should be exercised in all thine undertakings of much magnitude; indeed, a little procrastination at this time will be likely to prove rather more salutary than unwise. REGULUS particularly charges those who claim this as the anniversary of their birthday or who were born about the 14th of June, September, or December of past years, to exercise the best of care in all matters of health and finance; the female portion so born, if married, will need to be watchful against serious trouble through their husbands or in the marriage and domestic relations, and lovers who were born at such times are likely to experience unhappiness through their intended partners unless extremely careful. Disappointment or deceit through them are threatened. Males born at or about such times should now see to it that business ruptures and changes do not come from acts of theirs and should not at this time begin important undertakings but be satisfied with their present lot rather than seek now to improve it by new ventures.

15—Wednesday. Dramatists, musicians, artists, jewelers, upholsterers, and furniture dealers are just at this time "under a pecuniary ban," experience losses or embarrassments and will need to exercise unusual caution; it will be well for theatrical managers and artists if they defer for a few days entering into important professional engagements. The last two-thirds of the day encourages the mechanical and chemical pursuits, also dealings of minor character with cutlers, military men and generally those whose avocations are conducted by use of fire and sharp instruments or machinery.

16—Thursday. Seek advantage from thine employer during the forenoon when also ask favors from public officials and persons in authority in great corporations.

17—Friday. Avoid the morning hours for any venture of magnitude but as the noon hour is passed, let every moment be improved for forwarding the principal undertakings; the day then is peculiarly propitious for the artist and literati alike and should be fully employed in these respects; special efforts should be given also to enterprises pertaining to the scientific pursuits and such as are concerned with the elegant occupations or polite arts; purchase wearing apparel and fancy and ornamental goods.

18—Saturday. Conditions are decidedly baffling on this day and it is better to defer matters of much importance until a more promising time; make no contracts concerning houses or lands, nor have any dealings with agriculturalists, miners or contractors.

19—Sunday. A specially fortunate Sabbath day, inducing mental activity and promoting pulpit eloquence and the enjoyment of literary productions either in poetry or prose.

20—Monday. This day is peculiarly unpropitious and bids thee postpone important writings and correspondence and all commercial enterprises; "look twice" and avoid too hasty decisions; hold the temper and be not involved in disputes in the afternoon; let commercial men here look out for misrepresentations and bank officers scrutinize signatures, as forgers and mischief makers will be active; have care against fires and see that no harm can come through horses and dogs. Accidents upon the water are to be guarded against.

21—Tuesday. Use this day for seeking favors from thine employer or making application for advantage from persons in authority.

22—Wednesday. Have care in giving thy signature or loaning thy credit in business engagements during this day and beware of speculative purchases; the afternoon is the best part of the day.

23—Thursday. This is one of the excellent days of the month. It is the merchants' own day and also fortunate for every honorable pursuit; buy houses and lands, travel, sign writings, urge literary and scientific pursuits; deal with plumbers, tinners, gardeners, and building contractors; effect contracts with printers and publishers; hire help, and do important correspondence. The very early morning is less promising.

24—Friday. Do no important writing in the last two-thirds of the day, especially concerning patents or machinery; do not involve thyself in litigation nor be hasty of speech or act, keeping the truth on thy side, no matter how great the temptation to exaggerate or misrepresent.

25—Saturday. Give preference to the forenoon hours for all commercial transactions and literary efforts. The day is indifferent in most other respects.

26—Sunday. A day in which the musical portion of religious worship will be unusually happy and effective and the mind will be unusually inclined toward the elegant in literature.

27—Monday. This day is generally propitious for urging all honorable pursuits without special encouragement to any particular engagement.

28—Tuesday. Avoid litigations; use thy pen cautiously; engage in no important transactions with printers, booksellers, stationers, mathematicians, lawyers, or public writers and travel not unnecessarily; preference should be given to the artistic pursuits, and such matters as are concerned with the building or improvement of houses.

29—Wednesday. One of the very favorable days of the month; be up with the Sun and urge business vigorously throughout the day; buy goods to sell again; deal with the banker and all persons of prominence or distinction; make beginnings in important matters concerned with art, music, fancy goods, articles of adornment and generally the beautiful and elegant in life; seek audience with the ladies and lead thy fair one to the altar. REGULUS specially advises his friends to take advantage of these cheering influences and to push zealously their several affairs and pursuits in life.

30—Thursday. Improve the middle hours of this day for dealing in metals, machinery, cutlery, drugs, chemicals and electrical apparatus and for pursuit of the mechanical trades and inventions; deal with engineers, machinists, carpenters, glass-workers, bakers, tailors, tanners and generally all in the mechanical pursuits; do not expect much pleasure from the drama or social entertainment.

31—Friday. The forenoon hours are the best and all general business should be prosecuted with vigor therein, but as the afternoon advances baffling influences interfere with realization of best results from engagements of those later hours.

FREE HELP FOR WEAK MEN

"CALTHOS"

Prof. Laborde's Marvelous French Cure for Lost Manhood.

FIVE DAYS' TRIAL TREATMENT

Sent Absolutely Free by Sealed Mail To All Sufferers.

NO C. O. D. OR DEPOSIT SCHEME.

The only preparation known to science which really cures Lost Manhood is "CALTHOS," the marvelous French remedy discovered by Prof. Jules Laborde. It is controlled in this country by The Von Mohl Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, a concern which occupies a high and honorable place in the world of medicine. It is one of the largest and most responsible houses in Cincinnati, as anyone who is acquainted in that city will testify.

The Von Mohl Company invites all men suffering from Lost Manhood, Spermatorrhœa, Varicocele, Small Parts or Weakness of any nature in the Nerves or Sexual Organs, to send their names and receive a five days' treatment. This will prove the wonderful vitalizing powers of "CALTHOS." After using it five days the sufferers will find new vigor in their organs, new force in their muscles, new blood in their veins, new ambition, and rapid progress toward the buoyant feelings and sensations of younger days.

This liberal free offer is genuine. There is no swindling C. O. D. or Deposit Scheme connected with it. The five days' treatment is sent by sealed mail to all on request, wrapped in a plain package, and full printed instructions accompany the medicine, so that each patient becomes his own doctor and cures himself at home.

It doesn't make any difference what caused the weakness—whether bad habits in youth, or excess, or overwork, or business troubles. "CALTHOS" will effect a cure, no matter what big name the disease may be called by doctors.

The Von Mohl Company treats all correspondence in perfect confidence. Under no conditions will it make public the names of the thousands who have written testimonials telling of their restoration to robust manhood after other medicines and appliances have proved worthless. "CALTHOS" is regularly used in the French and German armies, and the soldiers in those countries have come to be perfect models of strength and vitality. Cures are effected at all ages from twenty to eighty years. There is no case (except where the stage of epilepsy or insanity has been reached) which it will not radically, quickly and permanently cure. Sexual weakness does not cure itself. It grows worse from week to week. Each day aggravates the mental and physical anguish.

Send today for the free five days' trial treatment. If it helps you, more of the medicine can be purchased. If it does not help, no harm is done and no money has been paid out. You can send your name in the full knowledge that it will be kept from all. The "CALTHOS" department of our business is strictly confidential. Address applications for trial treatment, etc., to

A Complete Outfit of 44 Tools FREE.

GREATEST MONEY MAKER AND MONEY SAVER EVER SEEN: NEEDED IN EVERY HOUSE IN THE WORLD.

Hundreds of dollars are wasted every year in paying for repairs which could be done by you just as well as by the person you hire. "Yes," you will say, "I could do this work if I only had the tools." You have to hire the plumber or cobbler and pay him for his time while you stand around and look on, watching him do the work which you could do as well as he, but it is always that you have no tools. We have put together the best kit of tools for repairing which was ever seen, and we will sell the entire outfit for less than half the money for which you could buy it at any store. The outfit consists of forty-four first-class tools, as shown in the above cut, viz: 1 iron last for men's work; 1 iron last for boy's work; 1 iron last for women's work; 1 iron last for children's work; 1 iron stand for lasts; 1 shoehammer; 1 shoeknife; 1 peg awl handle; 1 peg awl; 1 wrench for peg awl handle; 1 sewing awl handle; 1 sewing awl; 1 stabbing awl handle; 1 stabbing awl; 1 bottle leather cement; 1 bottle rubber cement; 1 bunch bristles; 1 ball shoe thread; 1 ball shoe wax; 1 pkg. clinch nails, 4-8 in.; 1 pkg clinch nails 5-8 in.; 1 pkg. clinch nails, 6-8 in.; 1 pkg. heel nails; 4 prs. heel plates, assorted sizes; 6 harness needles; 1 harness and saw clamp; 1 box slotted rivets, assorted sizes; 1 rivet set for same; 1 harness and belt punch; 1 soldering iron, ready for use; 1 handle for same; 1 bar solder; 1 bar resin; 1 bottle soldering fluid; 1 copy directions for halfsoling, etc., 1 copy directions for soldering all securely packed, together with directions for use, in a neat case. These tools bought at a hardware store separately would cost between $7.00 and $9.00. You can repair boots and shoes, tap and heel them, mend your harness or make a new one, mend all kinds of tinware, repair pumps, plumbing and similar work, and do all kinds of leather work about carriages, etc., as well as repair and mend rubber boots, rubbers, overshoes, and all kinds of rubber made articles. The clamp is used for mending harnesses and filing saws. Has a coil spring and is made of iron. You can easily save five times the cost of this outfit in six months and make a heap of money doing little repairs for your neighbors and others. "A stitch in time saves nine," and if you have these tools in your house you can make repairs and save a great deal of money which you would pay if you let a breakgo or hired a man to do your repairing work for you. Every one of these tools are full sized, practical, neat and cheap. It is the only complete outfit in the market and thousands have been sold in past years for $2.50 when the outfit contained but about half as many smaller articles to people living in the country and small towns as well as in the city. This repairing outfit, weighing 20 lbs. will be sent by freight complete as above described for only $2.50 which includes a 6 months' trial subscription to this paper.

GREAT PREMIUM OFFER.—If you will get up a club of 12 yearly trial subscribers to this paper at the special price of 25 cents each, we will send you one of these repairing outfits as a present to you. Address

Men, Women and Things.

CONDUCTED BY JENNIE MELVENE DAVIS.

The State Superintendent of Public Instruction in the state where women vote is a woman. Colorado people believe that the office has never been better conducted than during the regime of Grace Espy Patton. The "Little Professor" as she is admiringly termed, has chosen women as her assistants in the duties of the one office in the state held by a woman. The deputy superintendent, assistant librarian and clerk look after the routine duties of the office in an efficient manner that has silenced all jesting criticism as to the ability of four women.

The State Superintendent in Colorado is a me nber of the State Land Board, the State Board of Examiners and the State Board of Education and is also ex-officio State Librarian. She must visit the different counties of the state, address Teachers' Institutes, speak at commencement exercises and in all ways further the general educational interests of the state. "Professor Patton" was filling a position in the Agricultural College when she was elected to the first educational place in the state. She is a ready speaker, practical, energetic and thoroughly business-like. By many she was considered a typical "new woman," with all the common sense and independence that the term suggests. She drew her $3,000 salary, made sweeping reforms in the administration of her office and carried out her own ideas without fear or favor.

The outbreak of the war upset all these theories of an emancipated new woman, for Miss Patton promptly and suddenly married Captain Warren Hayden Cowles of the Regular Army, to whom she had long been engaged. This act involved a legal point, for it was Grace Espy Patton whom the voters of Colorado had elected. The Attorney General declared there was no precedent for an office holder changing names and that she must perform her official duties under the name she bore when elected. Whether as "Mrs." or "Miss" it is certain that the State Superintendent of Education in the Centennial State will efficiently do the work she was selected to perform.

Samuel P. Langley, Secretary of the Smithsonian Institute, has succeeded in making a flying machine that has actually flown three-quarters of a mile. The United States Board of Ordnance has appropriated $25,000 for the further perfection of the idea. It is believed that a machine capable of carrying a man and of dropping high explosives into an enemy's camp is practical. The machine is called an aerodrome and in flight it looks like a huge fourteen foot bird.

Prof. Langley, like Darius Green of flying machine fame, is a Yankee. He was born in Roxbury, Mass., sixty-four years ago. He graduated at the Boston Latin School and later at the English High School. He did not pursue a college course but at once devoted himself to the study of astronomy. He made a journey in Europe and upon his return received an appointment in the observatory at Cambridge. Afterwards he was in turn Professor of Mathematics at the Naval Academy at Annapolis and Professor in the Western University of Pennsylvania. He became connected with the Smithsonian and it was his influence that led to the establishment of the National Zoological Park. He has received honorary degrees from the Universities of Michigan, Wisconsin, Harvard and Princeton. The leading scientific associations of the world have bestowed every honor at their command upon Professor Langley. He is a man of most winning address and has the respect and affection of all his business associates. It is his high scientific standing and the success he has already attained that leads the Board of Ordnance to believe he will reach a practical solution of the great problem of a flying machine.

"Cryano de Bergerac" has scored the greatest success of any play in years. Richard Mansfield is presenting the romantic poem as a play in all the large cities and hundreds are turned away daily, unable to secure a seat. The author of the play is Monsieur Edmond Rostand of Paris. One year ago his fame did not extend beyond Paris. To-day no author in the world is better known. It is the phenomenal success of "Cyrano" that has brought fame. M. Rostand is but thirty years of age. His family are noted for their practical grasp of affairs. M. Rostand was educated in Paris where he prepared for the practice of law but the poet nature rebelled against the routine and in 1890 he made his first venture in literature. These plays had been written and acted upon the Paris stage before the great success of "Cyrano" made its author world known. M. Rostand is not a rich man although his lavish expenditure of the money that has come to him has led many people to think he is. He phrases it "only a spendthrift." "Cyrano" is founded upon actual history, but the romance, the poetry of the play make its success in this matter-of-fact age somewhat remarkable.

A. H. Savage Landor, who is making a lecture tour in England and will soon come to this country, has demonstrated that even this prosaic nineteenth century has material for thrilling romances. Ever since Sir John Mandeville wrote his book of travels in the fourteenth century, restless Englishmen have been traveling and then writing about it. No stranger tale has been told in any of the centuries than Landor's adventures in the forbidden land of Thibet. No white man may enter this Asian plateau or set foot within the sacred city of Thassa on pain of death. This the young Englishman essayed to do and his adventures are set forth in a book entitled "In the Forbidden Land. An Account of a Journey into Thibet; Captured by the Thibetan Lamas and Soldiers; Imprisonment, Torture and Ultimate Release." Mr. Landor's lecture deals with the same exciting scenes. Mr. Landor is a young man and a grandson of the famous English author of the same name. He is slight and dark with characteristics that suggest the Italians among whom he has spent the most of his life. He lives at a village near Florence where he cultivates vines and olives. This is only in the intervals between his constant travels. Intensity seems the key note to his character. To see, to know, to feel all that life can give has been the motive power to his ceaseless activity. Ordinary discomforts have no significance to him, even torture and fear of immediate death could not turn his mind from its purpose. His first journey was to the island of Yezo and a very entertaining book followed. Another trip through Japan and the East, furnished material for a number of pictures painted in those countries. These were exhibited in London. Mr. Alfred Harmsworth, a magazine proprietor of London, became interested in Mr. Landor's work and with the idea of providing "copy" for his magazine, he equipped the expedition that left England in the spring of 1897. Mr. Landor had trained himself in the use of the sextant and intended to explore the head waters of the Bramahputra. He entered the Thibetan plateau, the country of God as the Lamas call it, from northern India. He came back prematurely aged, haggard and wan. He did not reach the Sacred City but he did discover the head waters of the Bramahputra and collected some data as to mountain elevation and the location of some lakes. Within less than a year he had met adventures and horrible experiences that seem hardly possible in this century. Mr. Landor will not fail to interest people because he tells a story that has never been told before.

Mary Leiter was well known in the society of Washington and New York as a beauty and an heiress. With the Leiter millions back of her it seemed that she might make a brilliant international marriage, and when she became Mrs. Curzon the public was somewhat disappointed. A bright young Englishman but no title—and no wealth. Now Lady Curzon bows to no one except the Queen of England. As Vicereine of India she takes precedence next to the Empress whom she represents. Her palace in Calcutta contains a throne room with an immense throne for Queen Victoria and two smaller thrones for the Viceroy and Vicereine. On state occasions Lady Curzon wears a crown. With plumes in her hair, a train of enormous length and all the jewels she can wear the Vicereine presents a really queenly air. The transformation of an American girl into a semi-royalty presents food for thought.

Occasionally the "dramatis persona" of international marriages are reversed in their national relations and it is the American man who marries the foreign woman. This has been the case with Mr. William Widgery Thomas our Minister to Sweden. During his first official term at the court of King Oscar he married the charming Swedish woman whose grace and affability have been no small factors in her husband's later success. Miss Dagmar Elizabeth Tornebladh was the daughter of Dagmar Tornebladh, knight and nobleman of Sweden and manager of the National Bank of that country. Mr. Thomas speaks Swedish fluently and so effectively that the handsome fair-haired young Swedish belle consented to become his wife in 1889. She has since then resided some time in this country where her tact, her sunniness and her warm-hearted courtesy made her scores of friends in the land of her adoption.

There were many acts of heroism and self-denial in the late war that have been unheralded by the newspapers. The search light of publicity has hardly been thrown upon the woman whom the soldiers named the "Good Angel of Porto Rico." Margaret Astor Chanler bears a well-known name and is a great-great-granddaughter to the original John Jacob Astor. She inherits the Astor wealth and has a personal income of $30,000 per year. She also inherits the restless activity that must see, know, do for itself. Her brother has made a name as an explorer as well as for fitting out a regiment and winning a seat in Congress. Miss Chanler entered the service as a volunteer nurse. No duty was too hard for this delicately reared woman. By the operating table, in fever haunted camps and in camps of detention she worked. Life to her means the reality of struggle, heroism, self sacrifice and even death if it chances. Miss Chanler has made no public parade of her work. She has given freely of her wealth and she has illustrated the truth "He gives twice who gives himself." She is a tall, slender woman, brown haired and brown eyed, with the earnest, thoughtful look of those who know from personal experience that life is real, life is earnest.

Mexico is the only republic of Spanish origin that has a government in any degree stable. General Porfirio Diaz is at the head of 15,000,000 of people—yet no humble laborer works harder than this man. General Diaz is of mixed Spanish and Indian blood and shows the best traits of both races. He fought his way upward step by step. He studied law and in order that he might obtain money to buy books he taught other lads. He advised one poor young man, "Do as I did. Study nights until two or three o'clock in the morning with your head bound up in a towel." At the head of a great sister republic, General Diaz has not given up the habits of untiring diligence that led him to the top round of success. He has the habit of giving his entire attention to the matter of the moment. It is this ability to concentrate and force his attention that gives him his facility in disposing of an amount of work that would overpower other men. He is fond of society, affable and courteous, but is obliged to forego much social intercourse in order to meet the demands of his position. General Diaz is an advanced thinker. He is progressive, a student of the age in which he lives and of his fellowmen. He is slowly evolving a "Modern Mexico" out of the old Spanish colony. It is in part owing to the personality of Diaz that Mexico seems at last to have a stable form of government.

SYNOPSIS.

Theo Staples, eldest daughter of the senior partner of Staples & Stilton, publishers, was called by the family the odd one, as she had peculiar ideas on many things. She was a very lovely girl of twenty-three, and desired to enter her father's publishing house to learn the business—more as a means of aiding working women than for any other reason. Her father reluctantly allowed her to do this, and his young partner, Ambrose Stilton, took a great fancy to her, though he could see that she disliked him. Oliver Norman, a foreman in one of the departments, however, attracted her in an unaccountable manner, and they became friendly on account of their peculiar tendencies; they were able to read each other's thoughts, and this led to experiments tried at Theo's home, in which all the family were interested. Oliver Norman was an inventor, and in his spare moments was working on an invention in a little room which had been partitioned off for him, at the publishing house. Ambrose Stilton, being furious at the popularity of Norman with the Staples family, and his own ill success in winning the regard of Theo, decided to develop his known tendencies toward hypnotic influences, and did this with such good effect that as a result of his influence over Theo she decided to leave the office for a time and accompany the family to Newport. There she regained her normal tone, and one evening while alone on the beach she heard a voice calling her name. Recognizing the voice as that of Oliver Norman, she at once knew he must be in trouble, and the following morning started for Boston, where she met Norman on the Common.

"OU here, Miss Staples," he exclaimed almost joyously. "I thought you were at Newport—but how providential! I wanted your advice so much, but I could not venture to take the privilege of writing you."

Theo regarded him steadily. "Do you know," she said, "I have the feeling that you are in some great trouble! If so do let me know how I can help you."

"Oh, Miss Staples, I am a ruined man," he cried, "and I don't understand it at all."

"Sit down here and tell me all about it," said Theo sympathetically, making room for him on the bench.

"Last Saturday night," he began as he obeyed her, "before locking up I gave one or two little finishing touches to my model which was about ready to send on to Washington; then I locked the door of my little room carefully. That evening Mr. Stilton paid me my weekly dues. He had sent for me to come up to the private office as your father was out. The firm's check-book was on the desk and he filled out my check and handed it to me. Then he spoke to me about my forthcoming work and the estimated cost of getting it out, and suggested a cheaper form of cover. I didn't quite understand, and he said he would run over to the building department and get a sample of the cover to show me, and asked me to remain in the office until his return, which I did. I found a book of yours on the desk and occupied myself in looking it over, and didn't even notice that the check-book lay on the desk until after a longer absence than seemed necessary, he brought the sample and caught up the check-book with some remark as to his carelessness in leaving it exposed. I told him no harm was done as no one had entered the room since he left and I had not noticed that the book was left."

"Well, what has all this to do with your ruin," prompted Theo, "I don't see yet."

"Please bear in mind all these particulars, Miss Staples, and you will see that a chain of circumstantial evidence has been found against me that is very hard to break," he continued. "Monday morning I went to take a look at my machine model and it was gone! Not that alone, but every scrap of drawing which had to do with it, and I am not sure that I can ever remodel it. You may be sure I felt blue enough all day Monday, and to add to the mystery, about eleven o'clock on that day, a messenger boy came saying that a gentleman wished to see me at once at the Revere House, room twenty-seven. I was so eager with hope that this message had something to do with my missing model that I hurried out immediately without leaving word as to where I was going, and when I arrived at the Revere House, went at once without inquiring of the clerk, to room twenty-seven, and found it vacant. A chamber-maid told me that it had been vacant two days while some repairing was being done. I felt as if I was in some nightmare dream, and felt still more so when yesterday your father came to me in an excited way bidding me follow him to the private office. There I found Stilton and the paying clerk of the bank where the firm has its deposits, and all three of them began accusing me of having forged the firm's signature to a check of three hundred dollars which the paying clerk had received from me on Monday, at 11.30 a. m., paying me in exchange that sum. The clerk declared that the person he paid it to wore a coat and hat like mine; that he didn't look particularly at me as he was so familiar with my appearance, and the check was made out in my name, but that on looking at the bungling imitation of the firm's signature he thought best to consult them as to its genuineness and both declared it a forgery. And Mr. Stilton recalled the fact that he had left the check-book on the desk Saturday when I was there alone long enough to fill out the blank check numbered the next following the only check I had of the firm for my week's wages—a check which I had not found time to cash. Then where was I, Mr. Stilton asked, when he sought me on Monday at 11 a. m? The men said they saw me snatch my hat and coat and leave the room hurriedly about ten minutes before and it was nearly noon when I returned. When I told of the message to meet an unknown man at the Revere House, and saw that I had no way to verify my statement, I did not wonder that Mr. Stilton sneered at my statements and that I was then and there dismissed from the firm's employ until I could explain things. Last night I could not sleep, I walked the streets all night long. I longed inexpressibly to see you. Oh, what am I saying? Pardon me, I am nearly insane!" He covered his face with his hands and groaned.

"Did you cry 'Theodora, Help,' last night?" she asked gravely.

"Oh, pardon me! How could you know? I did! I did! But I was in agony," he moaned.

"Well, I heard the call on the beach at Newport at ten o'clock last night—and I am here to-day in response to that call. You know that when we experimented last winter, twice you succeeded in sending me into a mesmeric trance, and I told you of things concerning others of which neither of us at that time knew, but which we found to be true. Now it is evident that there is some conspiracy afoot to ruin your prospects in life, and I think since I was made to hear your voice through space so distinctly, that I can be made use of in this way to discover who is at the bottom of all this trouble. I am going home now. I will call on my friend Miss Leon, who sometimes assisted, you remember, at our psychic sittings, who is trustworthy and deeply interested in the phenomena and will be glad to be present. At half-past two this afternoon call at the house and see if you can put me into the mesmeric state and note what I say during the trance."

A gleam of hope irradiated Norman's pale face.

"Was ever a woman so graciously good!" he said in an awed tone, "surely the unseen powers which I believe govern this universe will join forces with you to help an innocent man! I will be there at the appointed time."

Theo found her friend at home, and when the matter was explained, exceedingly anxious that the experiment should be tried. She herself would take notes.

When Norman arrived at Theo's house everything was ready for the experiment. He took from his pocket a small flat key, apparently a trunk key of the Yale patent.

"I found this," he explained to the young ladies, "just inside the door of the room where my model was kept. Whoever stole it apparently tried several of a bunch of keys before he found a key to unlock the door. In his hurry this apparently dropped on the floor unperceived. Now it has been proved over and over again that anything like this, frequently in the hands of the owner will bear about it for the time psychic traces of the individuality of such owner. So I brought it hoping it may aid in the discovery of the thief."

Of the three present Theo was apparently the least excited. Although she was perfectly passive, Oliver Norman was himself so nervous that it was sometime before he could concentrate his will sufficiently to gain power over his subject. Presently, however, Theo was under control.

Oliver placed the key tremblingly in her hands and asked: "Will you try to find the owner of this key?"

There was a long pause, then in a strange, low voice Theo answered:

"It was a tiresome search—this Spanish looking man is so secretive. He hates yet smiles upon you."

"Why does he hate me?"

"Ask the gift of God, when awakened."

Miss Leon, taking down notes thinks this a foolish answer.

"When did the owner of the key lose it?"

"When on the Sabbath, hate and jealousy mastered his soul, and possessed of many keys he would destroy the work which might make you his equal socially, nay, in some minds might make you his master."

"Did he destroy the model, or will he take a patent by-and-by?"

"In low tide walk as far as safety allows 'neath the pier at City Point Beach, you will find model—rusty."

Here Oliver took from the passive hands the key and put into them the check yet uncashed for his last week's wages. He waited a little in an apparently quiet mood before he resumed his questions.

"Can you find the mate to this check, 609? Who got it cashed?"

"We see the dark-browed one making passive Paul Dubray in bindery. With hat drawn over brow—coat and hat like yours—studied by dark one. Check No. 609 made snare—hypnotized note written to messenger office to call you to Revere House—Oh, ask Theodora to look at blotter mark in book of poems—evidence will be given. While you were called in one direction, serpent-face sent his fascinated one to bank to personate you, in opposite way—he followed to make sure his power. Make him prove alibi from 11.15 A. M. Monday to 12 M. Remember to try coat and hat on Paul Dubray to see how like you—Power gone—wake her now."

In obedience Oliver Norman made the necessary passes to arouse Theo. She looked around with a dazed smile.

"Did I sleep—was it a failure or success?" she asked eagerly.

Miss Leon took it upon herself to answer.

"Well, maybe you and Mr. Norman can see sense in what you said when under influence, but to me it all sounded like nonsense, but here, read my notes for yourself."

Theo read them slowly aloud with increasing surprise at each succeeding statement. When she came to the description of the person who took the model she flashed a quick glance of intelligence at Mr. Norman.

"Oh," she exclaimed, "do you think this can be true? I never dreamed of him—and yet——" The memory of Ambrose Stilton's recent proposal recurred to her on the moment and she colored with confusion.

"So you recognize the description, do you?" queried Miss Leon with lively curiosity.

Theo turned to Norman. "Do you?" she asked.

"I suppose we both do, but until something can be proven perhaps we had best speak no name if your friend will excuse us for the present," he replied; "but if it should prove true, I must confess that he is the last person I should have mistrusted. Do you know any reason why he should hate me?" he asked Theodora suddenly.

"How should I know?" She said evasively, yet she could not prevent the tell-tale blood from dying her cheeks as she spoke. Oliver marked her confusion but he controlled his voice to say:

"Dare I ask you both to go with me as soon as possible to City Point? In an hour the tide will be at lowest ebb; it looks like a wild goose chase but if there is anything in it I would like you two as witnesses."

To this Miss Leon and Theo readily agreed. Then Oliver called Theo's attention to the sentence, "Ask Theodora to look at blotter in book of poems."

A look of intelligence came into Theo's eyes.

"Oh, yes, I wrote a note to papa and used one of several blotters on the desk. I think I put either that or some other blotter in the book to mark something Elsie Brown had underlined."

Theo searched for the book and opened it where a blotter was inserted. The first side showed only a few words of her note to her father; the other side interested her and the others much more. Over and over the firm's signature was written and rewritten in all sorts of apparently intentionally blotched penmanship. Just below these repetitions of the signature there appeared the ink marks of several lines of a letter with signature. "Paul—at the old place, Saturday evening, June—Keep free of excitement—I wish to hypnotize—new experiment—pay as usual—Stilton."

"You are better acquainted with this man than I am, Miss Staples," said Oliver. "Had you any knowledge of his hypnotic power?"

Theo's mind had been startled as she recalled the strange influence exerted on her for several weeks before going to Newport, by the presence of Stilton. She saw it all now, he had tried his hypnotic power on her with considerable effect, but she only replied:

"Not until this moment, but I recall things now which make me sure of it."

As the three rode over to South Boston, they formed themselves into an amateur detective force, arranging a plan by which to get at the truth, Miss Leon being taken into full confidence as she was to act as witness.

It was at the lowest ebb of tide that they arrived at the pier, and the girls watched with deep anxiety while Norman slowly waded out as far as possible. Finally they saw him stoop, grope about, then bring to the surface something which he held up in triumph toward them, and as he came nearer Theo saw that it was the lost model.

Theo did not return to Newport that night, nor did she think best to speak to Mr. Staples when he came home, about the events of the day. In her possession was the key found inside Norman's work-room, and early on the following day, accompanied by Miss Leon, she went to the Publishing House. She was glad to find Mr. Stilton alone in the private office. She led the conversation to the loss of Mr. Norman's model.

"I wonder," she said, "if the model was taken after Mr. Norman left Saturday. How late did you see it in his work-room, Mr. Stilton?"

"I was not inside that room for a week previous to its disappearance; I had no call to be."

After a little further conversation Theo said with an air of sudden recollection as she held out the key:

"Oh, I wonder if you can find out who owns this key? It was found on the premises and some one may miss it."

He took it from her and examined it. "Why, it is the key of my secretary," he said with surprise. "I missed it yesterday. Where did you find it?"

"I didn't find it Mr. Stilton," said Theo, "Mr. Norman found it inside his work-room Monday morning."

"It's an infamous lie," he cried, forgetting himself.

"Miss Leon here is witness to your claiming the key as yours," said Theo, significantly. "Good morning, Mr. Stilton," and they went out quickly, to wait in the parlor of the Parker House, Oliver Norman's report of his own success as detective.

Oliver remembered Paul Dubray as a rather simple minded Canadian who worked in the bindery. He was about the same build as himself, he recalled, but how he could be mistaken for him by the cashier, he could not understand. He called at the bindery and took a good look at him before interviewing him, and he saw that the lower part of Dubray's face was strangely like his own in shape merely. He was startled too, to observe hanging near him, a coat and hat identical in color and shape with those worn by himself on working days. He went to the foreman of the department where the fellow worked and found out from him that Dubray had been absent from his work during all the forenoon of the day on which the forged check was cashed. Armed with these facts, Oliver walked with decisive air straight to Dubray.

"Where did you buy that coat and hat?" he demanded.

The man looked up in surprise. "Oh, my good friend, Mr. Stilton, made me a present of them. He makes me many presents," he said with a proud smile.

Oliver perceived at once that this man was not a willful villain.

"O yes, I understand," he said pleasantly. "He tries experiments in mind-reading on you—you are his subject?"

"Why yes, but how came you to know?" Dubray asked. "That was our secret and I was not to tell any one, but I suppose he told you."

"Were you with Mr. Stilton last Monday?"

"Yes, we met at the —— House; you see he is finding out things for a cousin of his who is a doctor, and he says I am so good a subject that he would rather have me than any one else."

"Do you remember anything that occurs when you are hypnotized?"

"Sometimes; not often, though."

"Did you go anywhere else with Mr. Stilton Monday, than to the —— House?"

Norman remembered the —— House as a small, third-class affair near the bank.

"No, I generally come out of the trance very soon, but I was so tired that day that Mr. Stilton left me at the Hotel to get rested. He always pays well for my time though."

"Well, I want you to go on an errand with me. I have asked the foreman's permission, and I will pay you well for your time. Put on your hat and coat at once."

Norman was startled when he looked at him after he had donned these garments. Certainly Dubray would be easily mistaken for himself for the hat concealed the upper part of his face and head where the strong points of difference lay. They went at once to the Bank and summoning the paying clerk to the window, he asked him if this were not the man to whom he paid the amount demanded by the forged check. He was so struck by the resemblance that he declared that it might be possible.

"I was hurried at the time," he said, "but I noticed Mr. Stilton here at the same time, on the opposite side of the room, and as you and he went out together I was sure it was you."

Then Dubray was taken to the —— House close by and recognized as having come there frequently in company with a man whose description tallied with that of Stilton, and as having been there several times on the previous Monday. When, still accompanied by Dubray, Oliver Norman entered the parlor in the Parker House where Theo and Miss Leon awaited him, they both cried out in astonishment at the resemblance. Norman, as he entered had observed two gentlemen acquaintances of his own and had desired them to wait for him. After mutual explanations of the success of their morning's work, the young ladies proceeded homeward, and with his gentlemen friends and Dubray, Norman called for a private parlor, where with the young Canadian's consent, Norman hypnotized Dubray and in the presence of witnesses; a full account was obtained from the subject, how he had personated Oliver at the bank, drawn the money for the forged check which money he gave to Stilton, who accompanied him at a little distance so as not to lose hypnotic control.

There was no trial of Ambrose Stilton. Mr. Staples was too honorable a gentleman to keep in partnership with such a treacherous person. Fortunately his house was doing so well that he had already been approached by a wealthier man who wished to go into the business; and as soon as Stilton's capital was withdrawn that of the new partner replaced it.

When Oliver Norman's invention was patented and applied, the house did a still better business.

When a year or two later Norman's book had made him widely known as an authority on Psychology, Theodora became his wife. She never went back to the printer's case, but she remained the friend of all working women, and is still active in organizing all sorts of schemes for their uplifting and enlightenment.

THE END.

THE UNFINISHED ATTIC.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT BY JAMES BUCKHAM.

I DO wish you would have a floor laid in the attic, Henry," said little Mrs. Harding to her husband. "It is such a ticklish job walking on the beams, when I want to store something away. I am in constant dread of stepping off and going through the plastering."

"It wouldn't make much of a hole if you did, Allie," laughed her husband. "But I must confess that the job ought to have been done long ago, and it would have been, if I could only remember to speak to the carpenter. But I'll do it this week, sure as the world. I don't see why the builders ever left that attic without a floor. Of course, you can't walk the beams when you want to put things away. It's absurd. Just remind me, every morning when I start out, and perhaps I can think to speak to Jepson."

Mrs. Harding did remind her husband, faithfully, every morning, when he stooped to kiss her good-bye; and still Jepson, the carpenter came not. Whenever Mr. Harding remembered his commission, something else, very imperative, made it impossible for him to see Jepson; and when it would have been perfectly convenient to do so, he never thought of it. And so the unfinished attic continued to go without a floor.

The Hardings lived on the very outskirts of the suburbs, in one of those trim, shingle-jacketed little houses, so like a jaunty woman in a new tailor-made suit. They were fully a quarter of a mile from a neighbor, on a street not yet accepted by the city—a street as crude and unsightly as a great shallow trench cut through the fields. And yet, there on the very edge of the scrub-oaks they had all the modern conveniences—except an attic floor. The contractor had shaved his outlay a little and augmented his profits by slyly omitting that; and it wasn't discovered, or fairly appreciated at least, until the Hardings had bought the house from the land company and were in possession.

They were a fairly well-to-do young couple, prosperous and contented, and their house and its furnishings showed it. Taste and thrift and modest luxury looked out from every wide-paned, crystal window. The parlor was a little bower of satin, lace and Turkish rugs, and the dining-room had a set of solid mahogany furniture, while the sideboard groaned with solid silver wedding gifts. If a burglar should peep in at the dining-room window! With this dreadful thought in mind, Mrs. Harding not only drew the curtains of that room, every morning when her husband started for his office, but put the choicest of her silver into a carpet-bag and hid it in the remotest corner of the attic. In order to do this, she was obliged to step from beam to beam for the entire length of the house. No wonder she longed for an attic floor, though she had grown almost as daintily expert in her beam-walking as the airy lady who sways on the slack rope at the circus.

Nineteen-year-old Nora in the kitchen, Mrs. Harding felt, was no protection against the always-haunting burglar; and yet it was a comfort to have somebody in the house with her. She would really have preferred to do her own work; but it would have been dreadful to be "all sole alone" there, on the edge of the oaks; so she had engaged Nora, chiefly for company.

It was a bright, crisp morning in February when the long-expected actually happened. A burglar walked coolly into the remote pretty house, in the middle of the forenoon, when nearly every able-bodied male resident for miles around had been swept "in town," like steel-filings toward a magnet. Indeed, so bright and cheerful was the sunlight, and so homelike and familiar and reassuring everything about her, that Mrs. Harding found it hard to realize she was actually confronted by a burglar, even after he politely, but firmly, asked to be accommodated with such portable valuables as might be in the house. He carried a big sack under his arm, and might have been a junk-collector, for aught that outwardly appeared. It is so difficult to even imagine a burglar, divested of the mysterious and awful circumstances of night, dark-lantern, and revolver.

Mrs. Harding was just returning from the attic, whither she had, as usual, borne her carpet-bag of silver, when she met the burglar coming in at the front door.

"Come with me, then," she replied, calmly, when she had learned his amazing errand. "I always put my silver up-garret for the day," she added, frankly, making room for the burglar on the stairs, and signing with ladylike self-possession, that he should precede her. "Of course, you will not expect me to bring it to you, but I will show you where it is. Turn to the right, please, and at the end of the hall you will find the attic door."

Could it be possible, she asked herself, that this woman, speaking thus without a tremor, and coolly directing a real burglar to her precious wedding gifts, could be timid little Mrs. Harding? Yet she was conscious of a prickling sensation all over, and knew that it was only because the terrific excitement ran so deep, that it lacked the ordinary and expected manifestations.

All the while her quick wits were playing in scintillant flashes about the problem, how to outwit the burglar. She was conscious of a secret and crafty delight in the thought of the floorless attic; though not until the burglar stood hesitating before the gridiron of beams, did the invoked inspiration come to her.

"There is the bag, at the end of the attic," she said, stopping, with her head just above the top of the stairway. "You must get it, if you want it. I am not telling you a falsehood. The silver is in the bag."

The ring of truth was in her voice, and not even a burglar could doubt it. The man hesitated no longer, but stepped confidently forward across the beams. Then did Mrs. Harding's suppressed inspiration explode in sudden action.

"Now then, Tiger! Take him!" she exclaimed, sharply. "Sic, boy sic!"

It had been one of Mrs. Harding's maiden accomplishments to bark and growl like her pet dog, greatly to that creature's excitement; and now a perfect volley of most startling realistic yips, snaps, and curdling growls crackled at the burglar's heels. He started, twisted convulsively upon the beam, toppled, swore, and plunged downward with one heavy foot and leg clean through the snapping lath and plastering!

Down darted Mrs. Harding to the hall below with the swiftness of a bird. She flew to her room, and with feverish haste tore the corded belt from her morning wrapper. Then back into the hall again, where the burglar's leg was swaying helplessly, like an animated and very ugly chandelier, from the shattered ceiling. In an instant the plucky little woman had reached up and tied the belt around the burglar's ankle. Then she hung down upon it with all her might, and screamed for Nora—who was already screaming herself in the lower hall.

"Run for help, Nora!" cried Mrs. Harding. "There's a burglar in the house, and I'm holding him!"

With a horrified gasp at her mistress' temerity, Nora was off for the nearest house. By a rarely fortunate coincidence, the grocer was just delivering an order there, and bidding Nora keep on to the drug store, and have them telephone for the police, he drove his horse like a whirlwind to the Harding house. Bounding up-stairs two steps at a time, he found the exhausted but determined woman still successfully resisting every attempt of the trapped burglar to draw his leg up through the ceiling.

"Let me take charge of the critter now, ma'am," panted the grocer. "Don't be afeard. The police will be here soon. By George!—excuse me, ma'am—but you're a brick!" And he looked admiringly at Mrs. Harding, who not only did not faint, but started promptly for the clothes-line, that the grocer might tie the burglar's leg to the banister.

While they were doing this, Jepson, the carpenter arrived. Mr. Harding had spoken to him that morning, and he had come to take measurements for the attic floor. So there were three men—including the burglar—in the house when the two policemen arrived, making in all quite a little male colony for a remote suburb, at noonday.

A little later, Mr. Harding arrived in hot haste. First he hugged his wife, and then he hugged himself. "Ah, Allie!" he said, complacently. "What if I had been cursed with a reliable memory."

THE TRUE STORY

OF THE

Confiding Woman, the Cynical Man and the Bearded Lady.

The scene is a comfortable sitting-room. Mr. Lovegood is buried in a book and his wife is scanning the advertisements in the evening paper. Suddenly Mrs. Lovegood says: "Say! dear," in a voice that makes Mr. Lovegood almost drop his book. "Well, what is it?" he says with a laugh. "Another real genuine bargain offer?" "I don't know that you'd call it that," his wife replied. "But, yes, you might," she continued, "for it is a bargain offer of free medical advice." "Let's hear all about it, my dear," said her husband. "But you know I'm a little dubious about your bargains. Your 'swans so often turn out to be geese.'" "Well then, it's an offer by a woman (physician) to give free medical advice by letter, and it says it's better to write to a woman because a man can't understand a woman, just because he's a man, and it says too that it's just revolting to go to a man physician anyhow." And Mrs. Lovegood stopped because she was out of breath.

"I bet you," said her husband, "that the advertisement don't say she's a woman physician." "Why, yes it does," said his wife, as she looked at the advertisement again. "Well, no, I guess it doesn't say she's a physician, but it means the same thing for it says that 'it is a woman whose experience in treating woman's diseases is greater than that of any living physician, male or female.'" Mr. Lovegood chuckled and said: "That's what I love about you, my dear. You are so ready to believe without question when there's a bargain in view. If you were a little fish, I'd catch you every time with a rubber worm if I put a bargain sign above the hook."

"Oh! do be serious for once," cried Mrs. Lovegood. "Then, to be serious," he replied, "this woman doesn't claim to be a physician. She would claim to be a physician if she could, because she is trying to convey the impression in every other way than by a direct claim that she is a physician. She is not therefore a physician and can never have practiced medicine. Yet not being a physician and therefore never having practiced medicine, she claims to have had 'experience in treating woman's diseases, greater than any living physician.' Now the question is, since she never practiced medicine, where did she get that experience?"

"Well, that is so," Mrs. Lovegood somewhat reluctantly admitted, "but then she is a woman." "I'm not so sure about that even," said her husband. "It looks to me as if some man was 'working' the women with the 'bearded lady' act.

"But suppose it is a woman there's your dressmaker, who is also a woman, not to speak of Mrs. Flannigan, the cook's mother, who is a really excellent woman. If a woman's not a doctor then one woman's as good as another and it's foolish going to a stranger hundreds of miles distant for the sympathy which friends at home can better supply. And as for a man not understanding women's diseases because he's a man, that is the cheapest sort of claptrap. Who have done the doctoring in the past two thousand years? The men. Where must the modern woman physician go for her knowledge? To schools taught by men and books written by men. If this woman, who claims men don't understand woman's diseases, should ever take to the study of medicine, she'd have to be taught everything she knew by the men who don't know anything according to her opinion. The problem is, how a man who doesn't know anything about women's diseases can teach a woman to know everything about them. I give it up."

"Then you wouldn't write?" said Mrs. Lovegood, doubtfully.

"Write! What for?" said her husband. "Write to a woman? What's the use of writing to a woman? If you want to write, write to a doctor. The first question in sickness is not a question of sex but a question of medical ability and qualifications. There's no sex in medicine anyhow. If you want to write why not write to a man of medical standing, a specialist like Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y. You know he's a regularly graduated doctor. You know he's a good one and at the head of a great medical institution. You know he's had thirty years' experience, and has, with the aid of his staff of nearly a score of skilled specialists treated more than half a million women, who freely confided in the integrity of the man and the skill of the physician. President Garfield once said of Dr. Pierce: 'He is one of the best men in the world, and he is at the head of one of the best medical institutions in the world.' There's nothing new about this free consultation by letter, my dear, it has been a feature of Dr. Pierce's practice for years; in fact, for more than a quarter of a century. Write to him because you'll get the best advice and no string tied to it, so to speak."

THE USUAL WAY.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT BY ANNIE D. KELLAR.

Copyright, 1899, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher.

THE Library Association must raise money if the Library were ever to become a reality; so, having heard that the "unusual" fad succeeded elsewhere in collecting stray dimes, the feminine population of Blount severally took up the Unusual Professions for Women.

Blount is small in size, but large in the spirit of progress and the tireless energy which is the natural birthright of every Westerner. A mining town, situated in a green valley of the Rocky Mountains, it is held in communication with the Range by a six-mile line of railroad, over which the men and boys every work-day morning are carried to their work in the mines and returned at evening.

By day then in the valley you find a community of only women and children; for those men not at the mines go to the cattle ranches below, excepting the mayor, postmaster, editor and grocer and he is just one all-around man.

But to return to the unusual professions.

One women declared herself family tonsorial artist and her husband sat for her to experiment upon his classic countenance and to draw—full price. Another gave out to hold flower auctions every Saturday. One proposed this and one that unusual thing and everybody was pleased. Clearly the Public Library was by all reasonable means what everybody meant to have.

Then it was too bad that Maude Harper should fall upon such an un-reasonable "profession" as she did. Mrs. McReady went farther and said "unmaidenly." Mrs. McReady was the social leader in Blount and of course knew. Trust her for that!

Miss Harper announced herself under the head-line of "prices reasonable," as "dog-killer, cat-killer, etc.," concluding in the third line, "until further notice." The Blount Beacon kindly published free all advertisements in furtherance of the good cause, and this unfeeling announcement led them all at the top of the page. It was quite too much! So Mrs. McReady, in her handsomely-furnished dining-room, expressed herself as she glanced at the paper before her.

"Monstrous! To think of killing cats and dogs!" and her hand went forth in caressing gesture toward her own lovely Duke stretched out on the mat. "I shall protest, and so will all the right-seeing women. The Humane Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals must take steps."

Hereupon she rose and, in illustration of her closing words, walked majestically from the room. Left alone, the other occupant of the room laid aside his paper and crossed over to examine the article that had aroused the indignation of his brother's wife. This interested young man was Harold McReady, who, at twenty-three, was junior partner in the firm of McReady Bros., whose large mining and ranch interests were constantly increasing. He lived at the ranch and had come in that morning on a matter of business.

His idle curiosity was excited to know the name of this "young woman, pretty and good," so described by another of her sex while in a most uncomplimentary mood. He felt that she must be quite out of the common. Glancing at the name, he put down the paper in a business-like way, and, with his brother, set off for the ranch.

Mrs. McReady was a veritable type of that class of short-sighted women who leave their homes and children mainly to the care of the servants and leave no detail of a public work to pass unnoticed. Bearing out the latter statement, she was within the next half-hour, in virtue of her office as president of the H. S. P. C. A., giving orders for a special meeting of that society.

The secretary ventured a remonstrance in Miss Harper's behalf. But the president while impressed with Miss Harper's personality must perform her duty, and that evening the little milliner received the following letter:

"MISS HARPER, DEAR MADAM:—It being the sense of this society that we can not stand idly by and permit or encourage the wholesale slaughter of dumb companions toward which humanity is enjoined ever to be merciful, we respectfully urge that you appear before this society on Wednesday at four p. m. to show just cause for your extraordinary course in directing the minds of your townspeople to the killing of their domestic pets, etc.

"Meanwhile we demand a stay of proceedings in your new line, and your 'further notice' to that effect in Wednesday's Beacon.

"With every expression of personal esteem,

"Yours for the protection of birds and beasts."

H. S. P. C. A.

Maude had had a good day at her new trade and was in high spirits as she made out her library account that evening; seven chickens and three snakes, beside the mouse that Mrs. Smith caught in a trap and couldn't kill. And an order for a cat to-morrow.

Then she read her letter. Her face was a study in the red and white that blended at last in a healthy pink color as the emotions gave way to reason. A line of defense as long as a lawyer's plea arranged itself in her mind and at length resolved into a very wise plan.

The next day she killed the cat as per order.

Noon of Wednesday came and with it the Beacon. Eager hands tore it in their haste to point out the "further notice" which, however, was not there. So the members went early to the Society's rooms to hear her defense.

* * * * * *

Maude stood at her shop door thinking how hot and dusty it was and wondering how Editor Taylor could think of the twenty-mile drive he started upon two hours since. She looked at her watch. The hands pointed to four. Her cheeks flushed and tears suffused her eyes so that she hardly discerned the form in the road before her sending up a cloud of dust. At last she made it out, and with an outcry sprang back into the shop. She had never seen a mad dog, but that galloping figure in the dust she knew for one. Not a man in town to give the alarm! She snatched something from beneath the counter, paused an instant for self-control, then on her wheel sped after the rabid beast. Women had seen their threatened danger and she saw them tearing into houses and barring doors. Straight ahead moved the cloud until the pursued and the pursuing were but a block apart. Then the dog turned south and Maude turned in the same direction, hoping to course half way around the square and meet him before he reached the corner, and struck into the schoolhouse road now filled with children on their way home.

Unnoticed, their movements were watched in agonizing suspense by a horseman from the south, more desperately, if possible, making for the corner and shouting as if wild.

For he saw what neither had, as yet, a baby playing in the road. He gave the child up for lost just as the wheel dashed in and faced the brute. "She can not escape, herself," he thought, as he cocked his revolver and spurred his horse again, "but in the time so dearly gained I can save the boy."

An instant later came the report of a revolver, but it was not his. The dog fell dead, and Harold realized that he would have been too late to save his brother's child.

All unconscious of her baby's peril, Mrs. McReady neared home. The meeting had been dismissed early as Maude was noted for punctuality, and it was decided that she meant to ignore orders. A committee would wait upon her.

Mrs. McReady heard the report and hastened to the scene. Her gratitude, remorse and sense of her own narrowness cannot be described. Maude stayed for tea, and Harold told how, out at the ranch, horses and cattle had been bitten, and of the stampede that followed. He left his men shooting the miserable animals while he rode after the dog.

That evening Mrs. McReady forced a fifty-dollar banknote into Maude's hand, in trust for the library, quoting from the contract: "All gains derived on or before November first of this year, from the exercise, investment or appreciation of these unusual measures are pledged perpetually and without reservation to this Association." So Maude entered in her book after the date: "From Mrs. James McReady, in appreciation of one dog killed this Wednesday at four o'clock P. M., fifty dollars."

One month after, Harold surprised Maude by saying abruptly, "I am strictly a man of business. I have known you but part of a day. Your deeds prove you courageous and magnanimous, your tears prove you womanly. You are not nervous or superstitious for you will kill cats. Your style of beauty and manners just suit me. You know something of my prospects. In short, Miss Harper, I love you. Will you marry me?" She thought he had gone crazy until he added, "That was the speech I refrained from making a month ago, only that you might have an opportunity of finding whether you could care for me. Maude, what is my answer?"

"I am a woman of business," she tried to say steadily, "and you know the appreciation clause of my contract."

"But I cannot be handed over to the library!"

"No—at least, I hope not," and then, blushing furiously, "there will be the ring."

"Will be! oh—" but she stopped him there and it was settled to defer the matter until after November first.

A few months later the sound of brass bands mingling with a most whole-souled charivari in true western style proclaimed this train of circumstances to have culminated in the usual way.

IN THE DARKNESS.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT BY DAVID H. TALMADGE.

LARRY Dugan lay on his back in the long grass and winked at the stars. How long he had been there he knew not. He remembered vaguely the wild rush across the open towards the Spanish block-house in the face of a withering fire; and he remembered how the man in front of him had dropped, throwing up his hands as if astonished; but beyond this memory was a blank. What had happened? Had he been shot? Or had his mind gone ahead of him in the excitement of the charge, owing to the inability of his legs to keep pace with it? This seemed reasonable, the more so, because so far as he was able to judge his body was simply tired; he felt no pain such as he had understood was felt by the wounded—nothing but a sense of the utmost fatigue and contentment that he could lie and rest undisturbed.

"Praise hivin," said he aloud, "thoo yez've come back agin! Oi wor wantin' to think a bit."

He was addressing his consciousness, which to his disordered vision appeared as a soldier without body or limbs, its uniform flapping ridiculously as it circled dizzily above his head.

"What wor it now," he asked perplexedly, "thot Oi wor wantin' to think av before yez come whin Oi wor winkin' at the stars? Who am Oi anyhow? Will, will, will!"

He laughed softly, and attempted to sit up, but was too tired.

"Oi'm not knowin' at all what me name is—mebbe 'tis Gin'ral Shafter, Oi dunno, and there's a woild search goin' on this minute to foind where Oi am."

He lay with his eyes closed for a time. When he opened them again the bodyless soldier was gone. He uttered a great sigh of relief.

"'Tis gone back to where it belongs, behoind me eyes," he thought; "now Oi'll be thinkin' what it or Oi wor wantin' to think."

Then he groaned, for with full consciousness had come pain. A light wind stirred the branches over his head, and he felt its cooling touch upon his face. Somewhere—it seemed to him it might come from the sky—he heard the voice of a sentinel challenging.

"'Tis some poor felly givin' the password to hivin," he decided after listening intently. "Oi wonder now——"

Suddenly he became aware of a rustling in the grass a few paces from him. Then he distinctly heard a moan. It was very dark there in the wood—a darkness which the stars seemed to intensify, and the sound was not an inspiriting one to a boy who was barely past the age of belief in ghosts. There was the suggestion of a tremble in his voice as he softly called:

"Hillo, there!"

In response came another moan.

"Say somethin', can't yez?" he called again, louder and with a note of terror in his voice. "If yez be somebody Oi can be talkin' a bit wid Oi wants to know it quick, and if yez be somethin' ilse Oi wants to know it quicker. Till me what yez be now thot's a good felly!"

The grass rustled again, and there was a sound as of some great fish, freshly caught, floundering.

"Holy mither," exclaimed the boy, "'tis comin' this way!"

He essayed to rise, but was unsuccessful. He managed however to lift himself upon one elbow, and thus he waited, his eyes straining and his breath coming in gulps. At length the sounds terminated in a thud close beside him. He put out his hand cautiously.

"Brass buttons!" he ejaculated, breathing more freely.

"Who moight yez be now, old felly?"

"My name," came the reply weakly, "is Price, of the 89th——"

The revelation was not completed. Price was evidently in the last stage of exhaustion.

"Gerald Proice av Middletown?"

"Yes; and who are you?"

Larry did not reply. Memories were surging through his brain now—memories that were bitter—of a girl with blue eyes and light brown hair whom he had loved honestly; and of a rich man's son who had enticed her in her simplicity to follow him, leaving the humble lover forlorn and desperate. After a time the bitterness seemed merged into pity for the girl, and then everything passed from his mind but consciousness of the pain in his back. He lay there many minutes, counting involuntarily the throbbings, and looking at the stars with staring eyes. The voice of Gerald Price aroused him.

"And who are you?" it repeated.

"Oi—Oi don't roightly know," replied Larry, "but O'm thinkin' me name's Dugan."

"Larry Dugan?"

"Yis."

A long, long silence.

"Larry."

"Yis?"

"I'm about finished, I guess. Will you tell me what's wrong between you and Molly Burke?"

"And the loike av yez ask thot?"

"I do, for I wish to know."

"Yez!"

"Yes, I; for I know the poor girl is almost broken-hearted over your coldness towards her."

"Oi—Oi thought yez had taken her from me."

"I never thought of such a thing. I never spoke to her before the day she came to our office because she—she was in trouble on account of money matters. I—I helped her, and she was grateful. She——"

"Yis, she walked wid yez on the strate and smoiled on yez, and Oi froze her, for Oi wor hot and unraysonable wid jilousy. And she wor innocint!"

"As innocent as a child, Larry; and she loves you I am sure."

Larry was sobbing.

"And—and Oi lift her widout aven tillin' her good-boye. 'Tis a riptile Oi am, and squirmin' wid agony at the thought av it! Oi'll be goin' to her—Oi'll be goin' to her——"

The pain in his back was like the cutting of knives and the seering of hot irons now. The bodyless soldier was again circling above his head. It rose and sank—sank down and down until he felt its icy touch upon his forehead. Then it rose higher and higher, out of his sight. Price crawled closer to him, speaking. There was no reply. He found a cold hand and clasped it tightly.

"Heaven forgive me for that lie," he muttered, and fell asleep.

They found them there in the morning. The face of Larry bore a look of infinite peace, but the face of Gerald was drawn and distorted.

"One," said the sergeant, "was shot in the spine, and his death was painless; the other was wounded in the breast. Poor chap, how he must have suffered!"

A SON OF THE GODS.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT BY E. W. E. THOMPSON.

Copyright, 1899, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher.

HE paused irresolute that morning at the threshold of his fate; there in the September sunrise with the purple vintage of vine clad hills all about him and the glorious river murmuring on and on about his feet. Had it been two or ten years since he had asked the beautiful but unsophisticated blacksmith's daughter to become his wife? Each day, each hour she had taken on the richer, deeper tints and the sweeter fragrance of the unfolding rose.

Isabella, her dear old-fashioned mother had christened her—one loved to speak the name slowly, reverently, the name of this wildwood flower—even now robing herself for the bridal. The world to her an enigma; a path of thorns as yet untrod by tender feet. "Is—a—bella," he repeated the name to convince himself that this was no ignius fatui of the imagination. His was a remarkable voice! As the name, her name died on the morning air it grew faint and fainter still in that breath of agony, felt, but indescribable!

Years ago when he had first known this girl—he was only in the formative state. She responded, not to the soul senses of his being, but to some kinship in nature. He reasoned not beyond his love for physical perfection. As he swiftly ripened by contact with the busy world, of which he would be an important factor, the self-imposed thrall galled him.

Leland Langsdale is a picture, a study, and a problem. A moment ago he paused, reflected, hesitated. Now at the marriage altar he holds her hand—Isabella's—repeats the vows—they sound like distant echoes in ears unsensed to sound. Her face is radiant! He is hers, hers forever! A chain round his heart, a ring on her finger. He is touched deeply by her supreme confidence in him. His splendid dark eyes respond to hers with a half sad, a half tender smile. God helping him he will make this little girl happy! Perhaps her heart and brain will respond to his more masterful personality.

* * * * * *

Isabella Langsdale has been twenty years a wife.

"Mother," says a girlish voice, "read father's speech! The papers are full of it! Colonel Trent says in his editorial:

"'No such masterful and eloquent argument has ever been presented at our Bar. We note with pride the growing fame of our fellow citizen. As a candidate for Supreme Judge he would hon——'"

"Nonsense, Lela! Why waste time on newspaper editorials? Your father is spoiled now by flattery. What is vanity but a beggar's staff?"

"What, indeed!" sighed Lela Langsdale.

Isabella Langsdale is not changed. The association of twenty years with a superior mind has unavailed. The omnipotence of clothing the body instead of the soul ruled her. Sometimes surprised, sometimes frightened at the deep lines which had worn into her husband's face. He spoke to her always of late with a broken voice. What did it mean? Presently to Lela:

"Your father has given us every reason to be proud of him. The toil and moil of life is not interesting to me." She bent lower over a fichu of rare lace. "Have you forgotten Miss Collon's musicale and the Rand reception Thursday afternoon and night? Our position is something as well as your father's!"

A vision! His face—her husband's—glorified with a patient resignation. In that moment she saw down into the depths of two existences that should neverhave been moulded into one. "Less Fame and more Fortune—more Pleasure." The mother spoke in a manner which troubled her daughter.

"Your father has a natural hatred for society. I wish I could be free to live as I believe in living——"

"An empty life," returned Lela, who was jealously fond of that father whose presence to her was sunshine, happiness and overmastering joy.

The reply was a laugh as evanescent as the broken wing of a butterfly. She recalled her husband's words: "Fashion is fleeting, Isabella; beauty of soul is eternal, the same through all ages." More and more lately had he felt that need of sympathy which was wanting in his life.

Leland Langsdale had tried to love, cherish and make happy this woman—his wife. Sometimes he felt that his soul was growing attenuated in her presence. There was no sensation of things spiritual or intellectual in her atmosphere. He had borne this terrible disappointment silently, bravely in the past; so would he bear it patiently in the future.

Thursday night. The Rand mansion was ablaze with light; the jewels of fair women shone proud with the presence of noble men. Strains of music float from arch, doorway and bower. Voices have a happy ring. Faces smile. Leland Langsdale's tones alone are deep and grave. He rouses himself with a supreme effort. "This is folly! I must go and hunt Lela."

Madame Rand speaks: "I have been looking for you." Her keen eyes reading the misery in Langsdale's soul. "It is dreadful not to know what to do with people—Cousin Jaqueline is here and she never would assimilate with the crowd. Do we disturb you?"

She approached a slender figure clad in black, standing reading by a side light.

"Miss Herse, the Major's warmest friend, Mr. Langsdale. I trust you will find something in common."

The hostess swept away with a bland smile. The figure in black bowed, then was silent.

"Prof. Lloyd's Editorpha, have you read it?" Duty impelled him to break the silence. "That is a wonderful book. I am reading it a second time."

A wave of color swept over Jaqueline Herse's face; she was warm yet with the enthusiasm of that story. Langsdale compressed his lips. Here was a woman with soul! One who felt something of the life around her!

His own care-worn cheeks glowed. He was lost for a moment in thought. Then he talked to Jaqueline Herse with an eloquence which startled and interested her. "In the scheme of human conditions the master condition of all" is that inward something which calls for sympathy on the part of another. "The gust that blew love's candle out" may change to some favoring wind, reviving the flame, causing it to glow and burn indefinitely. The horizon had lifted—there was a ray of light as they stood there discussing a story which had vibrated and thrilled through the soul of each. For that brief hour pettiness, selfishness, falseness, convention;—the tears of had all at once become wreathed in smiles. Leland Langsdale was enjoying that hour—the years had dropped away!

The life blood of an intensely human heart had all at once come back to him! Had the development of his doom been for a moment suspended? The music, the revelry of the dancers, awakened him from reveries intellectual, conversation congenial. Jaqueline's face had more than once lighted up gloriously at some word fitly spoken. Formally, gently, he said good-night and sought his daughter.

Never had womanhood seemed so sweet and precious to him as it did now. Sympathies had been awakened he thought long since dead. Miss Herse had given indication of deep and hidden feeling. Feeling which had in it no trace of sentimentality. How congenial his toil in the after days! He had shut his heart long ago, he thought, to human affection, yet never for a moment disloyal to his wife. He had been ever on his guard against wounding her, yet the inner chambers of his heart were empty as sounding echoes.

In his office the next day was an unbidden guest. One hour's experience had so unconsciously ungirt him, the long-suffering, self-confident man drank of infinite gladness, a gladness he dared not grasp. Work, hard work, had brought success. He had won battles over himself. But, ah! a new and silent foe, a strong adversary—who would win?

As family lawyer to the Rands he remembered that he had heard of Jaqueline Herse and some trouble that she had had about an estate. Should there be a tangle about it Mr. Rand would consult him. He unreasonably hoped that Jaqueline Herse would never cross his path again.

The stress of a life pain lay heavy upon him. With these thoughts he went to Court that day to defend a murderer. Such a speech on the theory of self defense had seldom been heard anywhere! The Jury, as a man, responded, won to every sentence! He broke the lock and key of his own pent up feelings, pouring them into the cause of his Client. To-day he fought as he never had fought before for a fellow mortal's liberty!

"Choose Leland Langsdale as counsel. Your case is complicated. Three suits will be necessary. Better see him without delay."

Jasper Rand's wish must be Jaqueline Herse's law. There was no reason for refusing as counsel the great lawyer whom she had barely met. One whose probity and capabilities were so widely acknowledged. Silent for a moment, then she advanced to her cousin.

"I am grateful Cousin Jasper, but perhaps——"

"No perhapsing about it," broke in this intensely practical man. "I promised your father to guard your interests. We'll bring things out all right my little kinswoman. I—I—loved your mother Jaqueline; you are very like her." Jasper Rand with an effort continued: "We're going to win on the cause and the merit of our lawyer, Jaqueline. He carries everything before him."

Full of girlish simplicity was Jaqueline Herse—a strength, too, that resisted this fascinating personality, Leland Langsdale, for her legal adviser. Just then there was a war of voices outside: "Edmonds acquitted! Langsdale's speech would have cleared any man!" Why should these words strike Jaqueline Herse like a blow? Why indeed! The words riveted themselves on Jasper Rand's mind. "Yes, we will have Langsdale. I will go now and bring him in for consultation!"

She was alarmed at her own feeling! Yet why avoid a man who could never be anything to her? Well under control she held herself when they came in. Langsdale trembled a little, yet with the air of one determined to get through this examination, allowing no outside thoughts.

Leland Langsdale touched Jaqueline's heart and soul as never touched before—with a sanctified touch that none but her God should ever know. This man with the patent of nobility upon his brow was the husband of another woman. She would never suffer herself to love a man she had no right to love!

That night she cried out: "I will not impoverish the story of my life by any unworthiness of mine!" and fell fainting on her pillow.

* * * * * *

Eight months later Leland Langsdale in his office yielded himself to thoughts introspective and retrospective. "Going away to-morrow. My God, how can I let her go! In my adversity she came; in my soul's bitterest hour; since then the accidental nearness of her presence has filled my heart with joy."

His head sank and he moaned aloud! He roused himself:

"She will come to-day for settlement. But no, her uncle is ill." Had not her face been pictured on his brain and heart forever?

A footfall sounded! He met Jaqueline Herse calmly—she was a part of his life but—ah, she must never know! He must not forget himself in this parting interview. George, the trusted servant of the Rands attended her and waited in the ante-room. His "Sorrow's crown of sorrow" would indeed be in "remembering happier things." He felt the "Mella Miseria" of his wailing soul come up from the brink of the stream on which he stood.

He held the contrary tendencies of his nature well in leash. He would rid himself of the potent charm of this woman's presence.

Cousin Jasper was to have attended to all this; Jaqueline hated the details and formalities of law. Her claims against Thurston March had all been allowed, every suit gained.

"Where do you go Miss Herse?" He would purchase the length of her presence there by some conversation.

"To South Carolina for the winter; then to England." How her heart leaped as she answered him. "I thank you for myself and for Cousin Jasper."

She stepped forward, laid the roll of money, Leland Langsdale's fee, upon the table.

"Pray keep the money Miss Herse!" he cried impatiently. "I could not take it!" His sorrow, his love, was about to break its bounds!

"Mr. Rand has placed me under obligations to him and his that I never can repay. This service to both of you was a pleasure—let it be un-marred by thought of gain!"

"I thank you!" said Jaqueline Herse in a voice hoarse with emotion.

"Take this money—if not for yourself, for some one who needs it——"

She was going now. "Stay!" he cried, "Miss Herse—Jaqueline—we—we must say farewell!" Reverence and sorrow was commingled in his tone. "Pardon, pity me! I—O God—I have tried to hold fast to my duty! You—you have helped me! Helped me—as—no—other woman could—and—would; for—this—God bless and keep you forever!"

In another moment Jaqueline Herse was gone!

* * * * * *

They found him the next morning his head prone upon his office table! A smiling face, the lines of care and pain gone. For tired heart, brain and hands no farther catastrophe! He had passed to that country where pure love is found and not lost!

TOBACCO CURE.

HOW A MOTHER BANISHED CIGARETTES AND TOBACCO—A HARMLESS REMEDY THAT CAN BE GIVEN IN TEA, COFFEE OR FOOD.

Anyone Can Have a Free Trial Package by Sending Name and Address.

Some time ago a well known business man whose stomach and nerves were ruined by the tobacco habit was secretly given a remedy by his wife and he never knew what cured him of the habit. He suddenly evinced such a dislike for tobacco that he concluded the weed had finally floored him and that his own determination made him quit she then treated her son, a young man just 21. He was a cigarette fiend, inhaling the deadly fumes almost constantly and he too, was made sick of the "weed." His mother enjoys a quiet laugh to herself, at the manner in which the young man tells of how he came to the conclusion that cigarettes were "drugged and poisoned nowadays and not fit to smoke."

The remedy is odorless and tasteless can be mixed with coffee or food and when taken into the system a man cannot use tobacco in any form. The remedy contains nothing that could possibly do injury. It is simply an antidote for the poisons of tobacco and takes nicotine out of the system. It will cure even the confirmed cigarette fiend and is a God-send to mothers who have growing boys addicted to the smoking of cigarettes. The remedy is called Tobacco Specific and a free trial package of the remedy will be mailed prepaid upon application to Rogers Drug & Chemical Co., 284 Glenn Building, Cincinnati, O. This will help any woman to solve the problem of curing her husband, son or brother of a habit that undermines the health leaving the body susceptible to numerous lingering and dangerous diseases.

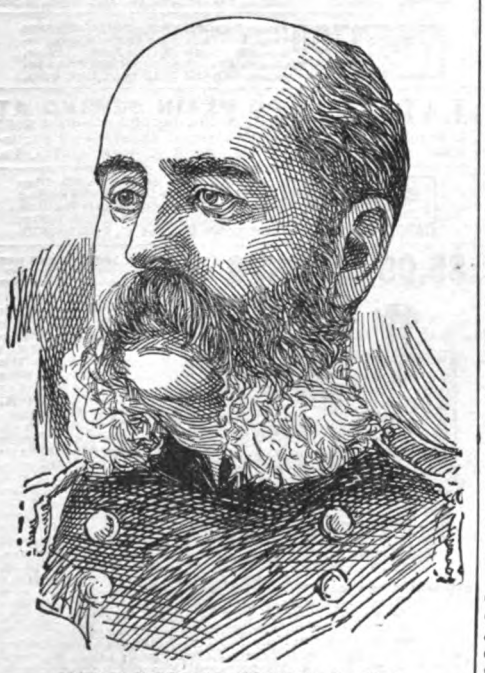
Among Our New Possessions.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.



THE greatest interest has centered over the occupation of the Philippines by our army. At first our people were disposed to believe that the restoration of peace would cause all trouble in the archipelago to cease and that soon a form of government would be given the Filipinos better than anything that had ever been enjoyed by them; and that whatever might be the final disposition of the islands our people would not relinquish them until their citizens were able to act as a strong modern government. It has never been supposed for a moment by extremists that the United States could drop these islands or even attempt to give them back to Spain until some stable government had been formed capable of administering the law with home rule.

It has always been a strange fatality of savage or semi-civilized races to respect only strength. They invariably look on toleration and avoidance of war as timidity or cowardice. Since the Americans have been in Manila there has had to be a constant restraint on our soldiers to prevent outbreaks against the Filipinos, who little appreciating the real cause, became daily more arrogant and insulting, looking upon this self-restraint of our soldiers as timidity and fear of their own prowess. Aguinaldo, the Filipino leader, undoubtedly has been aided with arms and ammunition from outside and has turned from an ally into an open enemy of the Americans. The fact that Gen. Otis has not allowed insurgents in Manila, caused them to locate their lines in a semicircle all around the city. Here in full view of our men they have thrown up forts and breastworks and have mounted cannon in an advantageous position. It is now known that Spanish officers have assisted them in the disposition of their forces.

The relations have been at a point of tension for weeks, but Gen. Otis, in command of our troops, undoubtedly had secret information of Aguinaldo's intentions, for events proved that his army was drilled and in constant expectation of a sudden attack. Thus matters stood on February 4th; the Filipinos inflamed and desiring to attack the Americans with pent-up anger waiting the first shot which would give them the opportunity to thrash the savages. Meantime, a Filipino named Agoncillo had been sent to this country by Aguinaldo and after remaining in Paris until our peace commissioners had returned home he sailed for this country. In Washington he had attempted to be recognized by the President and the State department, but had failed. The ratification of the peace treaty was to be voted upon the 6th. It is believed that the attentions paid this emissary had turned his head and that hearing but one side he believed the country was against the treaty, and that a decisive act would cause Americans to raise a popular cry to abandon the islands.

Whatever his conclusions, there seems to be no reason to doubt that he cabled Aguinaldo to force a fight in order to influence the Senate, and after doing so took the quickest route for Montreal. It is also evident that though followed by secret service men, he was allowed to pass out of the country unmolested rather than to raise any possible international questions. His junta of natives remained in Washington and were allowed to stay unmolested provided they did no overt act as enemies of our government.

On the night of Saturday the 4th, three Filipinos approached our outpost and once or twice ran by the guard, each time being challenged. At length after being commanded to halt, the guard fired at them killing one. This was the given signal for a general opening of fire from the Filipino entrenchments. All night the Americans held their position unable to tell where to fire. At daybreak the army was ordered to advance which was done with a rush. The Americans carried everything before them although a few of the most ignorant remained fighting desperately. Incredible as it may seem these were men armed with bows and arrows, as seen in the initial cut, who bravely stood up to be mown down like grass by the deadly machine guns. In every part of the field the Americans were successful, driving the poor Filipinos before them like rabbits, and sweeping them out of their entrenchments and forts in a rout. The American loss was forty-two killed and about one hundred and fifty wounded and missing, while the natives lost all of five thousand.

After the first battle Aguinaldo's soldiers were in a demoralized state, and although their numbers gave them courage, the Americans steadily pushed them aside and continually widened their line of action. Aguinaldo, meantime, went through the farce of declaring war against the United States. In this campaign the losses of the insurgents have been terrible, while the dead and wounded of the Americans have reached a comparatively small number. It is probable that the Filipinos will break up as an army and will take to guerilla warfare among the mountains and jungles. This will mean a long contest. General Otis is pursuing Aguinaldo, hoping that with his capture the backbone of rebellion will be broken.

GENERAL EAGAN.

Major General Elwell S. Otis, the American commander, has been selected as the military governor of the Philippines, and will receive his formal appointment probably before the close of the present campaign. He has been in chief command of the military occupation of the islands since the departure of General Merritt, who was called to Paris to aid the Peace Commissioners. General H. W. Lawton, who distinguished himself in the Santiago campaign, has already sailed for Manila and on his arrival will relieve General Otis of command of the troops, leaving him free to act in his administrative office.

At this time a few words about the insurgent leader, Aguinaldo, may not be out of place. As a young man he attended the Pontifical university at Manila and was a bright student, but commanded no attention until 1888 when he committed the unpardonable sin against Spanish law in Manila of joining the Masons. Masonry is prohibited in the Philippines and under the ancient law a Mason is a criminal, it being lawful to torture or even execute him. While he was not tortured he was annoyed in various ways by the authorities and finally went to Hong Kong, where he associated himself with a number of exiles. He studied military learning and passed months watching British and other troops drilling and manoeuvering. It is said at night he studied the lives and wars of Napoleon, Von Moltke, Washington and Grant with keen intelligence. By the time he left Hong Kong he was thoroughly familiar with this subject. Accounts differ as to his service; some saying he was a good soldier, others that he would never drill. Afterward he shipped in the Chinese navy and served under an American officer there for several months.

There is little to be said about Cuba and Porto Rico, both of which seem to be entering into the process of reconstruction without much difficulty. The greatest annoyance is the attitude of the soldiers of the Cuban army, who expect the United States authorities to pay them the amounts due for back pay. As Gomez has undertaken to adjust this trouble, it is to be hoped it will soon be out of the way.

A notable expression regarding the relations existing between Great Britain and our own country, is that which comes from Mr. Arthur J. Balfour, first lord of the treasury and government leader of the House of Commons, in a speech delivered at Manchester, Eng., last month, in which he declared that the greatest safeguard of peace was probably mutual comprehension and sympathy between nations.

There might be difficulties in realizing such a comprehension even among the most civilized nations, he went on, but surely there was one country that was in every way fitted to understand and sympathize with Great Britain. There was a shower of applause when he added that he need not say that he meant the United States. Some foreign cynics professed to believe that the existing relations between the two countries were a growth of the moment, depending upon a transitory community of interests, with the disappearance of which their friendship would disappear. His observation of the world had taught him that cynics were always wrong.

During the dark days of the Venezuelan controversy, Mr. Balfour said he had expressed the conviction that the time would come when all English speakers and sharers in Saxon civilization would be united with a sympathy which no political controversies could permanently disturb; and he was glad he now saw such sympathy established by the marvellous change in relations which for more than a century had been disturbed by uninterrupted discord. If that sympathy was of the character he believed it to be, there could not be a greater guarantee of the future peace, progress and civilization of the human race. The opinion of this progressive and scholarly English statesman meets with ready response on both sides of the Atlantic, and is in keeping with the general tenor of the public utterances of leading speakers in both countries.

The most important question that has been before Congress during the past month was that of ratification of the treaty of peace with Spain. It took precedence of every and all other questions. In the Senate and out of the Senate; through the press; in general discussion, it was the one absorbing topic.

The press of the country, with but a few solitary exceptions, urged senators to vote for ra-

Cured of Drinking

A Woman's Secret Method Whereby She Cured Her Husband Who Was a Terrible Drunkard.

Mixed a Remedy in His Coffee and Food and Cured Him Without His Help or Knowledge.

It takes a woman to overcome obstacles. Mrs. Chas. W. Harry, 920 York St., Newport, Ky., had for years patiently borne the disgrace, suffering, misery and privation due to her husband's drinking habits.

Learning there was a cure for drunkenness which she could give her husband secretly she decided to try it. She mixed it in his food and coffee and as the remedy is odorless and tasteless he never knew what it was that so quickly relieved the craving for liquor. He soon began to pick up in flesh, his appetite for solid food returned, he stuck to his work regularly and they now have a happy home. Mr. Harry was told about his wife's experiment and he gives her the credit of having restored him to his senses. It is certainly a remarkable remedy, cures a man without his effort, does him no harm and causes him no suffering whatever.

Dr. Haines, the discoverer, will send a sample of this grand remedy free to all who will write for it. Enough of the remedy is mailed free to show how it is used in tea, coffee or food and that it will cure the dreaded habit quietly and permanently. Send your name and address to Dr. J. W. Haines, 63 Glenn Building, Cincinnati, Ohio, and he will mail a free sample of the remedy to you, securely sealed in a plain wrapper, also full directions how to use it, books and testimonials from hundreds who have been cured, and everything needed to aid you in saving those near and dear to you from a life of degradation and ultimate poverty and disgrace.

Send for a free trial today. It will brighten the rest of your life.

VESUVIUS.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

VESUVIUS is again at its frolics, and a mountain at its frolics is no pleasantry to those who live at its base. The dwellers about the sunny Bay of Naples take no delight in the grandeur of an eruption of Vesuvius. For years there will be no reason for fear, the mountain will give no evidence of its mighty power, save as the cloud of steam above its summit testifies always to the heat within. Again, as at the present time, all its old craters will open with tremendous bursts of flame and flow of molten lava. It is a grand and terrifying spectacle. Great masses of rock are hurled hundreds of feet in the air and streams of lava flow down the mountain sides until they appear red with the burning material.

During its quiescent periods the journey to the summit of Vesuvius is an interesting trip, seldom missed by tourists to Naples. At one time a railroad carried passengers nearly to the summit, but that has been destroyed by recent lava flows and one must take to mountaineering on foot, or on donkey back, the former being the more desirable if one will keep his mind in good order to appreciate the wonders at the top.

About two thousand feet above the sea the roads lead over a spur of the mountain on which is built the Observatory, an illustration of which is shown in the initial, in which are the museum, containing the seventy minerals thrown out by Vesuvius, a scientific library and apartments for the scientific instruments, especially the electro-magnetic seismograph which records the time extent, and direction of every movement of the earth's crust.

From the balcony of the Observatory one may begin to realize what an eruption means, for all about are the flows, ancient and of recent time, stretching away to the plain below. The flowing character of the molten lava, like the waves of the sea, or like eddies and pools in a river, may there be seen where they took their shape under white heat, but now are cooled to solid black rock. Around this spur of the mountain, in 1872, rolled two streams of lava leaving the Observatory like a lighthouse on a storm beaten reef, while the inmates of the house underwent a process of slow roasting, the mercury rising above one hundred and seventy degrees Fahrenheit. Fortunately the fires abated before the endurance of the scientists was exhausted.

In some places during the ascent one passes small craters from which is flowing hot lava, which is dark and stringy and hardens on top as soon as it comes in contact with the air; and if one makes a misstep and plants his foot upon this seemingly solid earth he is reminded of the deceptive crust of snow on our New England fields, with a difference of a few hundred degrees in temperature.

Gaining the summit through the fine black sand of the path, one feels inclined to doubt the assurance of the guide that the volcano is not an eruption. From far below come rumblings and groanings, sharp reports and hissing sounds, together with clouds of smoke and steam which blind and choke you. It has been well said that of all the grand and wonderful sights in nature the crater of a volcano is probably the most impressive. Certainly nothing could inspire the mind with a more intense feeling of awe than this great crack in the earth, which "half reveals and half conceals" the wonders and mysteries within. Crater means "mixing dish" and surely no better term could be applied. It is a thorough mix up, and the human intelligence halts, spellbound, at its brink. Oh, to solve the mystery of its depths! Does this hole three hundred feet wide connect with secret passages far below, leading into the interior of our great earth? No voice speaks from the cloud that rises, no presence tells of the mysteries below, and the scientist and the sight seer alike are unable to solve the riddle. This crater is said to be five or six hundred feet deep, and at its bottom is a lake of melted rock which one can hear surging and writhing in its lonely depths. When this lava rises to the top of the crater, forced up by the tremendous energies of the internal forces of the earth, an eruption occurs. Often the crater and everything about the mountain will change so much during an eruption that even one perfectly acquainted with the mountain will be unable to recognize his old haunts.

The history of Vesuvius is interesting. Far back in pre-historic time a volcano existed on its present site which was probably twice as large as the Vesuvius of to-day. With a mighty explosion which can only be imagined, the upper half of the cone was blown off, leaving a large valley surrounded by more or less precipitous sides, like the craters of Kilauea in Hawaii or Crater Lake in Oregon. Mt. Somma, the lesser peak of Vesuvius, is a remnant of this wall. After centuries had passed and the Greeks had, unsuspectingly, built their cities and vineyards on its sunny, green slopes, the fires returned to their old haunts and a new cone arose from the old valley, sweeping away the old walls, all save Mt. Somma, and building itself up to the height of three or four thousand feet above the sea. This was in 79 A. D. As the clouds of steam rose from the crater they were condensed in torrents of rain, which mingled with the black volcanic dust and rolled down the mountain sides, wiping off from the face of the earth three cities, Pompeii, Herculaneum and Stabiae. More than eighteen thousand people lost their lives. No lava issued from the mountain at that time, but the excavations at Pompeii show that the cities were buried under many feet of volcanic dust and ashes. After this terrible eruption (which has been considered the greatest calamity of historic times), the mountain was quiet again for centuries. Its sides were covered with grass and trees as in the olden days and the old terror was forgotten. In 1631 came another great convulsion. The volcano sent out material with such force that vast clouds of dust and stones were carried for hundreds of miles, the finer particles falling to the earth even in the Adriatic and at Constantinople. Streams of lava dashed down the mountain sides into the sea and thousands of homes were destroyed. Since that time the mountain has never been entirely quiescent and the tragedies which it has caused are too many to enumerate. At each eruption the mountain is built up a little higher and the sea is forced out a little. The number of cubic feet of lava thrown from the mountain since 79 A. D., would be expressed with no less than twelve ciphers, enough in fact to build several modern cities.

The question is, where does all this material come from? Again we are confronted by a negative answer; again Mystery holds out its dim, grey finger pointing us on. All that the scientist can tell us is this: The interior of the earth is in an extremely heated condition; being subjected to great pressure it is a solid, superheated mass; the water percolates from the surface to a great depth and coming in contact with the heated interior, changes to steam and when it can no longer find room for its activity below, it forces its way to the outer world at the point of least resistance, carrying with it the solid hot rock which becomes molten lava when relieved of pressure.

Recently reports have come to us of the increased activity of Vesuvius, and the world will watch its movements with much interest, for it looks to Vesuvius as to a great actor. Whatever its action, it is always dramatic, grand, imposing, though its action seldom terminates in aught save tragedy and its rumblings foretell, to those who know it best, only sorrow and devastation.

The National Bank Redemption Agency.

WRITTEN FOR COMFORT.

THE United States Treasury has one section which is entirely devoted to the redemption of national bank notes, and this is called The NATIONAL BANK REDEMPTION AGENCY. This, although carried on within the walls of the Treasury building, and in some ways closely connected with it, is, nevertheless, distinct from it. Its expenses are entirely paid by the banks themselves, which are yearly assessed according to the amount redeemed for each one during the past year. From these assessments are paid the salaries of the clerks, the stationery bill, and, in fact, every expense incurred by the Division.

To this Agency all the National banks, all over the country, send their worn out money, and have it exchanged either for new notes or for checks, as the sender chooses. Burned notes are also sent here, and are redeemed, should there remain the slightest mark to show what was their former value. The packages of old notes are given to expert clerks who sit in a long, narrow room, well lighted by large windows. Both doors and windows of this room are guarded by strong iron lattices; those at the doors fastening on the inside by a spring lock. In addition to these precautions against loss, a high railing within the room separates the desks from the aisle in which, alone, visitors are allowed inside the room. Most sight seers in the Treasury, however, are only permitted to peep at this work through the grated doors leading from the corridor.

In this room the money is counted with a rapidity which seems incredible to an outsider. Not only is it counted, but a counterfeit bill is instantly detected by these expert clerks, and removed from the package. Any failure to do this, or any miscount is charged, if detected, against the salary of the clerk. Each package is counted by three different clerks, and their accounts compared, before it is finally pronounced correct. Its number, amount, and some other information concerning it is then transferred to a slip of paper which is handed to the Chief of the Division. He signs it, and passes it on to a clerk in his room. This clerk registers the information in her book, and fills out a check for the required amount to be returned to the bank from which the worn out or ruined bills were sent.

The old notes are taken, still in original packages, and closely guarded, to the basement of the Treasury, and placed in the macerator, where they are speedily reduced, by boiling and chopping by knives, to a thick pulp. Of this pulp is made various fantastic forms, such as cats and dogs, which are sold as souvenirs to visitors to the Treasury.

LUNG CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED.

CROWNING DISCOVERY OF THE CENTURY.

Do you cough?
Do your lungs pain you?
Is your throat sore and inflame
Do you spit up phlegm?
Does your head ache?
Is your appetite bad?
Are your lungs delicate?
Are you losing flesh?
Are you pale and thin?
Do you lack stamina?

These symptoms are proof that you have in your body the seeds of the most dangerous malady that has ever devastated the earth—consumption.

Consumption, the bane of those who have been brought up in the old-fashioned beliefs that this disease was hereditary, that it was fatal, that none could recover who were once firmly clasped in its relentless grip.

But now known to be curable, made so by the world-stirring discoveries of that man whose name has been given to this new system of treatment.

Now known to be preventable and curable by following and practising his hygienic teachings.

The New System of medicine will cure you of consumption and of all diseases which can be traced back to weak lungs as a foundation.

It is not a drug system, but a system of germ destruction and body building.

Not guesswork, but science.

Not a step backward, but a stride out of the old ruts.

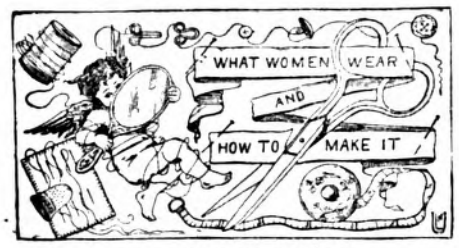
Made possible only by Pasteur's, Virchow's, Metchnikoff's latest discoveries in bacteriology, hygiene and therapeutics.

The system consists of Four Preparations which act simultaneously and supplement each other's curative action.

WRITE TO THE DOCTOR TO-DAY.

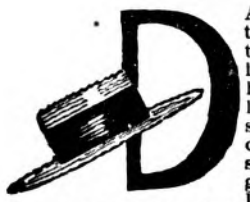
You are invited to test what this system will do for you, if you are sick, by writing for a FREE treatment to the Slocum Laboratories, New York City.

Send your name and full address to Dr. T. A. Slocum, 98 Pine St., New York, and the Four Free Preparations will be forwarded you with full directions for use in any case.



The system is a positive cure for consumption, that most insidious disease, and for lung troubles and disorders complicated by loss of flesh, coughs, grippe, catarrh, bronchitis, sore throat, etc. Thin, pale, shivery, weak people become fat and hearty.

The test is to try it.



When writing the Doctor please tell him you read this article in COMFORT.
